The time that the period of weighing shall now begin is left in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, any time prior to the new contract period of four years. When this amendment was first drafted by me and submitted to the Department, I included the provision that the thirty-five successive days should begin on the first Monday in March. The Department claimed that it ought to be left to the discretion of the Department. I arrived at that period from taking the two extremes of the year, the 30th of June and the 1st of July, and running both ways from that line, with the view of determining the period of thirty-five days within the twelve-months' period that there would be the most reasonable average of weight for the entire year. But the Department feels, leaving it to their discretion when the period shall begin, that if in their experience it should be found that the period of thirty-five days' weighing they did not find a reasonable average for the entire year another thirty-five days might be determined upon. The only opportunity, Mr. Speaker, for either fraud, neglect, or connivance whereby the roads might profit by reason of the period of thirty-five days being chosen when they had more than the average weight would be by dishonesty of the officials of the Department. And I can not conceive any Member of this House voting against this amendment because of the possibility of a dishonest Postmaster-General or a dishonest Second Assistant Postmaster-General conniving with the railroads in the selection of the thirty-five-day period so that it would be to the disadvantage of the Government and to the advantage of the roads.

The second proposition makes permanent law what is now known as the divisor. It is now but a Department official order, subject to change or repeal by any subsequent official in control of the Department. By making it permanent law we avoid that possibility.

The third proposition initiates the same principle in ascertaining the length of route and the amount of pay that now obtains in express freight rates and passenger rates. Where there are two or more roads running between common terminals, the distance of all those routes shall be no greater than the length of the shortest route. This proposition is wholly equitable. It is said that it would increase the expense to the Government. Unquestionably the proposed divisor results in a great saving of expense to the Government, because that divisor is enlarged, and therefore the quotient is less. Undoubtedly the installation of the same practice that obtains in the freight and passenger service to the distance of the routes for mail transportation will result in saving hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Government. This credit should be placed against the debit, which gentlemen by criticism claim would be increased by reason of the annual weighing. I state it as my deliberate judgment that these three factors put into law, and in practice, assuming the honesty of the officials, will result in but little increase to the roads, and that little they are entitled to if they actually carry mail that has been increased in volume.

I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to discuss this question in detail. I simply want to state the case as I understand it. Under the present law the railway mail is weighed quadrennially, and the pay to the railroads from the Government of the United States is based upon those quadrennial weighings. The contract with the Government with these roads is based on the quadrennial weighings. The contract that the Government has with the railroads provides for the quadrennial weighing. The present proposition contained in the bill provides for thirty-five days' weighing annually. It is a change, therefore, in the contract in reference to the weighing, and the basis of pay or compensation would rest under the new provision on the annual weighing instead of the quadrennial weighing. It is estimated by gentlemen who have made the calculation that the loss to the Government of the United States by the change of law would be $2,500,000 a year. These are the facts as I understand them. The question is, Is it best, in the judgment of the House of Representatives, so to alter the law of the land as to impose this additional burden upon the Government of the United States?

Mr. LLOYD. I understand the amount to be $2,700,000. That I understand to be the amount which would be expended in addition to that which we are now expending, estimated on the basis of the present construction of the law for the Postmaster-General. Is not that the fact?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I understand so.

Mr. LLOYD. If the construction should be changed with reference to the weighing process, so that it should be the same as it was prior to the 4th day of March last year, then there would be no loss by reason of the change, would there?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not understand that. The weighing is quadrennial, and four years' compensation is based upon that weighing. If you change it and make an annual weighing, you increase the cost to the Government of the United States three times, and it is estimated at the figure that I have stated. I desire only to state this fact, as I understand it, and yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCOTT. Right on the point the gentleman has been discussing, I should like to ask him a question in order to get clear information. Would the loss of $2,500,000 to the Government, which he says would follow the change in the plan, result on account of the expense of the additional three weighings?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who will discuss the matter and give the gentleman full information on that question better than I can.

Mr. SCOTT. I shall be very glad if the gentleman from Wisconsin will answer that question in the course of his discussion, whether the increased expenditure comes from the cost of the additional weighings, or whether it is because the amount paid to the railroads in the first place would be less than in the other.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the gentleman's question, and shall be glad to answer it during the course of my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my attention to this proposition now before the House, as to the proposed change in the method of weighing the mails.

In 1873 the law was passed fixing the rate of pay, and at the same time providing for quadrennial weighings, and also providing that the weighing shall be had not less frequently than once in every four years. Ever since that time the practice of weighing at four-year intervals has been followed. The country is divided into four sections, and each year a weighing takes place in one of those sections, on the basis of which weighing calculations are made for payments to the railroads for the ensuing four years.

I have before me the computations prepared by the Post-Office Department showing the payments from 1896 to 1907 in each section for transportation of mails, independent of the charge for railway post-office service, which latter increases as the service is put into force, and has no connection with this proposition.

I will take, for example, the rate of pay in the first section, which is the eastern section, in which the railroads received $8,583,000 in 1905, based upon the weighing had in 1901; but upon the weighing that was held in 1905 as a basis for the payments that the railroads were to receive in that section for 1906 and the three succeeding years the amount was $10,260,000, or a difference of $1,677,000 for the three years. Dividing this amount by 3 it makes an annual saving to the Government of $559,000 during the three years in that one section.

I could take each one of the other sections. For instance, in the third section, which comprises the Northwestern States, the amount that we paid to the railroads in 1903 was $13,289,000, based upon the weighing had in 1899. In the following year, 1904, we paid $15,748,000, based on the weighing held in the year previous, 1903; and that $15,000,000 was virtually the same amount for 1907, three years later, for the total paid to the railroads in that year was $15,772,000. The difference between the payment for the last year in that weighing section and the last year of the previous weighing period is $2,459,000, or an average during the three years of $819,000, which the Government saved each year.

Adding these respective amounts together which the Government saved each year from each of these sections, based on the figures presented to me by the Post-Office Department as the amount paid the railroads for transportation alone, it amounts for one year to $2,717,000. In other words, if during the four years we had had annual weighing instead of quadrennial weighing, the Government each year on that amount of tonnage would have been obliged to pay $2,717,000 more than under the present arrangement of weighing every four years, which is the basis of pay during the four succeeding years.

Now, it goes without question that the Government gains this advantage, and I make the point here that when the rates were first formulated it was upon the idea that it should not be an average weight for the four-year period, but the rates were raised sufficiently high on a basis below the average of that which would be carried during the four years.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LLOYD. Is it not true that the saving of the last year is by reason of a change of the order of the Department as to the divisor?

Mr. STAFFORD. The rule of the Department in regard to the divisor does not touch this proposition at all, and this must be considered apart from the divisor proposition, for the question is whether we shall have the quadrennial weighing or the annual weighing.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman tell us why it would not be better to have a weighing once in ten years, if the gentleman is correct?

Mr. STAFFORD. The present rates were predicated upon the idea, and the requirement is in the law, that it shall be a weighing upon which the rate shall continue for four years. As one official in the Department, a man who has been in the service more than twenty years, and connected with the railway mail service, said to me early in the session when I spoke to him about the suggested change, that if there was going to be an annual weighing, the rates of pay should be reduced correspondingly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Did the gentleman state the name of that official?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Indiana does not doubt that I received that information?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I thought the gentleman named some official.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I did not.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think it is only fair that the gentleman should give the name of the gentleman he quoted.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman wishes, I will say that it was Mr. Stone, who has been chief clerk in the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General for many years, and is to-day assistant to the superintendent of the railway-mail service.

I have before me the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, containing a letter addressed to Mr. PENROSE a few days ago by the Postmaster-General, in which he uses this language in commenting on this change:

Provided this Congress says that there shall be an increase in the expenditure in the transportation of mail by railroad rates.

He also in this letter uses the following language:

It should, however, be borne in mind that such a provision—

Referring to the annual weighing—would increase the gross amount for the transportation of the mails and add to the annual expense incident to the weighing of the mails.

There is no question whatever that if we adopt annual weighing we will increase by more than two and one-half million dollars the amount now paid to the railroads. Again, even if the tonnage was not increased, I would oppose this proposition, because it restricts it to thirty-five days. Two years ago we believed that we could obtain a more fair average by increasing the number of days to ninety, so as to avoid abuses that might possibly arise from taking a period that was not representative for the year.

I now come to the question propounded by the gentleman from Kansas, as to whether this law involves any added expenditure in the cost of weighing. It goes without saying that if at present we only have a weighing once in four years in these respective sections, this would increase the work three times, and instead of having a weighing once in four years it would be—

Mr. SCOTT. In one case you weigh one hundred and five days and in the other thirty-five days.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no limit to this provision compelling the Department to weigh thirty-five days only.

In the second section in 1904 the mail was weighed eighty-four days and in one section of the first section, in 1904, they used ninety days, and in another, in 1905, ninety-one days, when the law prescribed thirty days as the basis.

Mr. SCOTT. I understood this amendment did provide thirty-five days.

Mr. STAFFORD. It does not. It only says that the pay shall be computed on the basis of a weighing for thirty-five consecutive days, but the number of days that the Department sees fit to weigh from which to select the thirty-five-day period is not limited. It puts the law exactly where it was before we changed it, and requires that thirty-five days should be the requirement instead of one hundred and five days.

Mr. LLOYD. I know the gentleman does not wish to mislead the House, but he leaves the impression that the law would remain exactly as it was prior to the time of the change. The law prior to the change used the word "working," and the law originally was thirty working-days, and this provision here provides for thirty-five successive days.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question whatsoever that the divisor proposition is included in this, but I maintain that the wording leaves it to the Department to weigh more than thirty-five days so as to get an average during that period of thirty-five days that should be used as a basis for compensation.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed nine minutes. He has one minute remaining of the ten minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I merely want to ask this question—

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not yield. There is no question whatsoever that with this annual weighing we will increase the cost attendant on ascertaining the weight by at least half a million dollars each year, because it costs in some of these sections, from $100,000 to $500,000, but besides that there is no question whatsoever that by having an annual weighing we will increase the mail pay each year over that which is now being paid under the present divisor order and the present law, $2,700,000, and it will add to the expense of the Government $500,000 at least each year for the added expense of weighing throughout the entire country, instead of as now in but one section of the country—

Mr. OLMSTED. Is not that because there is more freight carried?

Mr. STAFFORD. Every four years. I want to impress upon the House that the rates as fixed under the present law are predicated upon the idea that the unit of weight shall be that which should govern for four years in advance, and that it was intended that that should be the basis of compensation when the rates were settled by Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Indiana to consume some of his time.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I expect to consume the remaining time in one speech.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, for the first time since I have been in Congress the matter of increasing the pay for railroads for the carriage of mail is strictly up for consideration by itself, and the responsibility of the vote is upon the individual. Now, there is no question about this provision for annual weighing, increasing the amount to be paid to the railroads, and the responsibility comes not on the Department, but upon the individuals of this body. The Department approves the annual weighing, but conditionally, and this is the condition, and every man present ought to hear the condition. The Department says, in a letter written on April 23 last:

The bill suggested meets with the approval of the Department, provided that Congress sees fit to thereby increase the expenditures for transportation for mail to the railroads.

The Department has made the recommendation, but it has checked it up to this body and to the Senate that if this body does pass this provision it increases the compensation to the railroads yearly.

There are three propositions here about this increase, as the increase is carried in the provision on annual weighing. The first is this: If you weigh every year in the four-year period, in view of a gradually increasing growth of mail, you will get a higher average over the four-year period than you will if you weigh in the first year of the four-year period. That is the first proposition. The second proposition is this: Owing to the fluctuation of weights of the mail throughout the year it is higher in January, lower in February, lower still in March, going up in April, going up in May, high in June—that is, owing to a regular periodicity of light and heavy mails year after year, you get a fairer and lower average by a long weighing period than you do by a short one. We weigh one hundred and five days to-day. We will weigh thirty-five days under this provision.

The third proposition is this: That the mere operation of weighing the mails will cost in the period of four years $500,000 a year more to the Government than the present system of weighing. There are three elements in the annual weighing, then, which increase the cost of this service to the Government. It should not be increased. I want to say to the Members of the House of Representatives that the rate of pay was purposely made high in the first place, in 1873, because it was to be based upon the quadrennial basis, and so high was it made that Congress itself, virtually without agitation, cut it down in 1876, and cut it still lower in 1878.

So it remained until last year. Four commissions passed upon it. Postmaster-General after Postmaster-General in that long stretch of time recommended that it was best to readjust it further; but Congress deferred until last year, and last year Congress at last cut it down. Simultaneously with that cut the Department put in force a correction of the old and indefensible miscalculation, the wrong division, and that cut went in also, and for the first time in the history of this nation we are paying equitable rates to the railroads to-day. Why increase them? [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] the remainder of my time, three minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, all I have to say is that we have debated this question in the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads and voted it down, and it seems to me that it has no merit. The last post-office appropriation bill provided that the Department should investigate the subject of the weight of the different classes of mail, and to weigh the mail for thirty days to ascertain the average load of railway post-office, storage cars and compartment cars. This was to enable us to learn the cost of carrying the mail, because the amount of the load is the controlling element in determining the reasonable compensation for the railway transportation of mail. That Department has just reported. Now, why should we undertake this difficult and technical question of determining what is reasonable compensation for transporting the mail by rail at this time before we have even time to read the report of the Post-Office Department which we authorized at the last session?

It seems to me that it is preposterous, after the proposition has been debated and carefully considered in the committee and turned down, that it should now come here as an amendment of the Senate, containing, as it does, an independent provision of law, new legislation, and I therefore hope that it will be voted down. It increases the railway mail pay at the rate of $2,700,000 a year for transportation and $500,000 a year extra for cost of weighing, amounting to over $3,000,000 a year. This we are asked to give to the railroads, without any investigation, without any special information whatever, and it seems to me that this proposition ought to be voted down very promptly. [Applause.]

The whole subject of railway mail pay ought to be gone into and carefully considered and readjusted. On some railway routes the compensation now allowed by law may be and probably is excessive; on some it may be and probably is inadequate. A great element of cost of such service is volume or density of traffic, and I believe every fair-minded man is willing to allow a reasonable compensation, a compensation adjusted in proportion to the cost of the service. It should be compensatory. It is needless to say such adjustment can not be made now. I hope the amendment will be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Has the gentleman from Tennessee consumed all the time on that side?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute remaining. Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield that back to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OVERSTREET. For which I am thankful. Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying that figures will not lie; but they are sometimes misplaced; and I fancy that these statisticians from Kansas and Wisconsin in the exuberance of their spirits, in the enthusiasm of their cause, in fear that one of their votes may be registered on the side where the word "railroad" appears, may have some of their figures misplaced, though unintentional. I suggested—

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Were not these figures presented before the House Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and their accuracy has never been disputed since?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have no recollection of it, just as I have no recollection of the quotation which the gentleman made from one of the officials.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. OVERSTREET. One at a time.

Mr. MURDOCK. Just a minute.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not a minute, but just for a question.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is it not a fact that everything in this bill save this was given the privilege of a hearing in the House Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads?

Mr. OVERSTREET. We have spent days and days in that committee, I will say in a good-natured way, in discussing this measure, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] has suggested, and I will depart from my subject right now to state that the statement made by the gentleman that this very proposition was voted down in the committee, I think, needs a little explanation.

The proposition was to report an amendment the same as this excepting that the Postmaster-General did not have the option of determining the period of thirty-five days. It failed by a tie vote, counting one Member absent whose absence was well understood. That is the situation there. Now, Mr. Speaker, I stated at the outset that I consider these three factors as one proposition, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, in his endeavor to persuade this House that the railroads—and how he emphasized the word—will be paid two million and some odd hundred thousand dollars more than they are now receiving, failed to give credit, which I warned the House against at the outset, to the other two factors in the proposition. The gentleman from Kansas, who with such vehemence pounded the desk in front of him to emphasize his enthusiasm, did not pretend to give the credit which the other two propositions contain and which the Government is entitled to under the proposition as a whole.

Until a few years ago the weighing was once in four years, for thirty days, and was changed without question at the request of the Department, to experiment with a longer period. And the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] very well went at the very heart of the argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] when he asked him why we did not weigh once in ten years if once in four years gave a better advantage to the Government than once a year.

Mr. Speaker, in 1880—I may miss the year, but about that time—the total appropriation for postal service was about $40,000,000. It is more than five times that now. Will the gentleman contend that all of the theories upon which all of the laws of 1880 were made shall be considered forever, regardless of the changed conditions? I repeat my suggestion that, taking these three factors together, the annual increase in pay for transportation of the mails will amount to less than one-fifth of what these men predict. They lay much stress upon the additional expense incident to the weighing itself, separated from the pay, once in a year instead of once in four. But once in a year for 35 days is two-thirds less expense than 105 days—35 is just one-third of 105.

You can not get any pencil that is manufactured nor any paper from the paper trust upon which either one of these self-appointed statisticians can figure out additional expense of half a million dollars within the four-year period, expense solely based upon the weighing itself. More than that, Mr. Speaker, it is stated by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General—I think it was—in the hearings of the Senate committee, that when you have this system worked down to its bearings by an annual weighing with expert weighers that are equipped and with more complete skill and experience, you will thereby effect great saving in the management of that service as well as a saving for the Government from the disadvantage of this possible shuttlecocking and padding of the mails. Gentlemen make much ado about the possibility of a railroad company getting more in a period of one year's weighing than a four-year period. But I repeat the question asked of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT], that, not once in ten years, but why weigh at all? And I venture, if there were a proposition before this House now to compel the railroads to carry the mail for nothing, that proposition would receive the vote and support of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Not at all. Will you let me interrupt you just for a minute?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then I have, at least, one hope for the redemption of the gentleman from his Don Quixotism.

Mr. MURDOCK. Let me say just a word.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I decline to yield further. I am inclined to think the less the gentleman says the better for his own good. Now, Mr. Speaker, there are men who will be much pleased to "put the gaff" into the railroads, as the saying is. They would like to see them thwarted at every point. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] wants to ingraft the theory which his fertile brain has woven into the law-makers of 1873 and have it adopted now as the policy forever of this Government. But if these roads actually perform the service, if the volume of mail actually increases honestly and honorably, then they are entitled to their fair proportion of the rate of pay, based upon the increased business which they have performed. Now, I give it as my opinion against those gentlemen that there was not any theory formulated in 1873 as the basis of continuing this policy forever. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The motion is to suspend the rules, recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendment, and concur in the same.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 94, nays 187, answered "present" 10, not voting 96, as follows:

 For the session:
 Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. GOULDEN.
 On this vote:
 Mr. ANDRUS with Mr. LLOYD.
 Mr. SLEMP with Mr. CRAIG.
 Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from New York [Mr. DWIGHT] vote?
 The SPEAKER pro tempore. He did not.
 Mr. HARRISON. I voted "no." I would like to withdraw my vote and answer "present."
 The name of Mr. HARRISON was called and he answered "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move to suspend the rules and recede from disagreement, and concur in Senate amendments 76 and 77.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLMSTED). The Clerk will first report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 76, page 22, line 24, strike out "three million five" and insert "four million six."

Page 23, strike out lines 12 to 15, inclusive, and insert:
 "Provided, That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to pay hereafter for ocean mail service under the act of March 3, 1891, in vessels of the second class on routes to South America, to the Philippines, to Japan, to China, and to Australasia, 4,000 miles or more in length, outward voyage, at a rate per mile not exceeding the rate applicable to vessels of the first class as provided in said act, and in vessels of the third class on said routes at a rate per mile not exceeding the rate applicable to vessels of the second class as provided in said act: Provided, That if no contract is made under the provisions of this act for a line of ships between a port on the Atlantic coast south of Cape Charles and South American ports, the Postmaster-General shall, provided two or more lines are established from North Atlantic ports, require that one of said lines shall, upon each outward and homeward voyage, touch at at least two ports on the Atlantic coast south of Cape Charles, regard being had in the selection of such ports of call to geographical location and to the volume of the export and import business of the ports so selected: And provided further, That the total expenditure of foreign mail service in any one year shall not exceed the estimated revenue therefrom for that year."

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule a second is ordered. Under the agreement, by unanimous consent, the gentleman from Indiana is entitled to forty minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee to forty minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I shall not undertake to add much to what I said on yesterday with respect to these two amendments providing for additional ocean service. There is no change of principle with respect to the ocean-mail act of March 3, 1891. There is a change by the proposed amendment of rate of pay to the second and third class vessels described in that law. They are now paid $2 a mile, outgoing, upon vessels plying at a speed less than 20 knots and more than 16 knots, and $1 where they ply under 16 knots and over 14 knots an hour. The amendment limits this increased rate of pay to vessels carrying the mail upon routes in excess of 4,000 miles from United States ports to ports in South America, Australasia, Hawaii, China, the Philippines, and Japan.

Under the law as it exists to-day there are six contracts, only one of which is at above the 20-knot an hour or $4 outward voyage rate of pay. The others are second and third class vessels; but they go no farther in their travel under their contract than across the Atlantic or to Cuba and South American ports upon the Caribbean Sea. The limitation, therefore, in the increased rate proposed by this amendment will permit only contracts to points on routes more than 4,000 miles in length and to those countries with whom we are seeking so diligently and urgently new and more friendly relations in South America and in the Orient. The reason for the increased pay to second and third class vessels is that we have been unable to secure ship companies owning vessels of this type to enter upon contracts at this rate. We have no direct communication in American bottoms with either of these countries at a distance in excess of 4,000 miles. It is believed that by the stimulus which will be given by the increased rate of pay we will be able to secure contracts with these South American and oriental ports which will inure to the advantage of our people.

We have carried annually the same appropriation to pay contracts for ocean mail service under the law of 1891. This increase of $1,100,000 is an increase of facilities in the ocean mail service. This very bill carries $1,185,000 for increased pay alone of the letter carriers of the $1,100 grade. That amendment is to increase the efficiency of that service. That is $85,000 more than is proposed by this amendment to increase the efficiency of all the ocean mail service. If Members of this House "stick in the bark" because they are not in favor of increasing the ocean mail service, how can you justify the claim that you favor increasing the efficiency of the mail service by your vote for increased pay to the letter carriers in the $1,100 grade and oppose the effort to increase the ocean mail service? We will be able, if once we get in proper communication with these new countries, to not only enlarge the equipment by way of naval auxiliaries for the support of the Navy, but our trade relations and communication directly with those people will be greatly improved.

The revenue from the ocean mail service last year was $6,600,000. The expense for the same service, exclusive of whatever expense there may be in transporting this mail to the seaboard, was $2,900,000. The difference between those two figures is $3,500,000 as a profit. The proposition of this amendment in this last proviso is to utilize the profit upon the ocean mail service, not counting the expense of the service to the seaboard, in the improvement of the ocean mail service. Can there be any legitimate criticism of an effort to enlarge our trade relations abroad, to facilitate a new auxiliary force for the Navy, to establish direct communication between our people and South American and oriental ports, if we enlarge that service upon the profits of the ocean mail service?

Now, Mr. Speaker, the word "subsidy" will be rung in this Chamber by every gentleman who opposes this proposition. I call the attention of the superconscious individuals who are afraid of that word to the fact that this post-office appropriation bill is full of subsidies. Then have the manhood to vote against all of it! Our income to-day from the revenue on second-class matter, carried as such for the aid of newspapers, which are prompting many Members to fly away from this word "subsidy," is 1 cent a pound. The weighing of the mails, the counting of pieces, the ascertainment of the important statistics authorized by the six months' period ended December 31 last, is now with the Public Printer, and will be made public as soon as proof can be read and the report made official. I ask every opponent of this proposition for ocean mail service who is afraid of the word "subsidy" to note the prediction, that I venture he will find that the second-class matter of mail upon which the Government receives but 1 cent a pound costs the Government now in excess of 6 cents a pound.

What is the difference between these amounts? The rural delivery service to-day nets in dollars and cents a deficiency of approximately $10,000,000. What do you call it? I approve both of those provisions. The rural delivery service is worth all it costs and more, whether it is a subsidy or a profit, but you can not get away from the fact that both those differences between the expense and the receipts must be known technically as subsidies.

The first, third, and fourth class matter of mail render a net profit to the Government, the second-class matter of mail renders a loss to the Government. The rural delivery service renders a loss to the Government, a deficit annually on the entire service. But we are afraid of the word "subsidy" when it comes to the enlargement of the ocean mail service. That is what this bill does and no more.

I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I discussed the features of this bill very briefly yesterday. I have no disposition to go over the argument presented in that short time. But I want to state this to the House, which I did not say yesterday, that when this whole question is reduced to its last analysis it is one of the simplest propositions possible.

We are paying to-day $4 per mile for first-class vessels, $2 per mile for second class, $1 per mile for third class, and 66⅔ cents a mile for fourth class. This proposition is simply to double the pay of the second and third classes, and I defy any man to find one iota of proof that will justify it. It is a practical donation to ships of that class of this much money, and that is all it is. To my mind it is a simple question of honesty or dishonesty in the administration of public affairs. It is not contended by the Post-Office Department that this is a mail facility, except incidentally.

The whole argument in attempting to force this rider upon the appropriation bill will be that it will be an auxiliary to the American fleet, and any man of common sense knows that it is of no service in that respect. The cost now of carrying our mails under the oceanic act—and we have no evidence that there is any more demand for carrying than is already complied with—is $181,000 a year. You want to revamp some second and third class vessels, put them up to the price of first-class vessels, and donate $1,100,000. And then, too, under the terms of this act you might enter into a contract for ten years, in view of the act of Congress of which this is amendatory, and place the burden upon this Government of a subsidy of practically $4,000,000 per annum, for the act provides that you may contract to the extent of the profits earned by the ocean mail service, which in gross figures would be about $3,400,000.

I do not desire to take any more time, and I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this proposition, so far as it applies to the oriental trade, is exclusively a subsidy proposition. It can not be defended on the ground that there are not adequate mail facilities at the present time, for the meager hearings had before the post-office committee disclosed the fact that adequate mail service on fast steamers leaving Vancouver and American ports, with frequent sailings for the Orient, was now being had that would not be increased if this bill were enacted into law.

Last year this House by a close vote passed the so-called "Littauer bill." Although the amounts provided in that bill were in stated aggregate amounts for each line, under this bill they not only equal these sums, but in some instances surpass them. And in addition there is that provision in the Senate amendment different from that in the House bill that was voted down in the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, for the House bill was limited entirely to second-class steamers that were to receive the pay of first-class steamers, as provided in the act of March 3, 1891, whereas the Senate amendment increases and doubles the pay of the third-class steamers and gives them the compensation now paid to second-class steamers.

Under the House bill, which extended to second-class steamers only, there would have been expended when applied to all the lines the total amount of $3,610,240. I ask this House what justification is there, except on the ground of subsidy, for paying gratuities to steamship companies when there is adequate mail facilities to the Orient and when there is adequate freight facilities for the oriental trade? Can you defend your action when you vote $1,710,000 for lines to China and the Orient and over $600,000 additional for the line to Australia? It can not be defended on the ground that additional facilities are needed so far as the mails or freight carriage is concerned.

It comes down in its last analysis, as far as mail and shipping facilities are concerned, to the question of subsidy, because if the service to-day exists, I ask why should we pay out the enormous amount of over $2,300,000 in developing that which we have no assurance will be continued, when a like service is being maintained by subsidies and gratuities paid by other governments? Shall we inaugurate that policy set out in this bill providing subsidies for third-class steamers which only travel at the rate of 14 knots an hour? Shall we inaugurate the policy that we shall go on this wholesale cruise of voting millions and millions of dollars to some special interest when perchance other governments are furnishing that same service to-day through subsidies and as a burden to them, from which we are receiving the benefits in carrying facilities?

I can not justify a vote for subsidies unless there is no adequate service with those countries. I stand ready to vote a subsidy for the establishment of mail facilities on the Atlantic between New York and South American ports because there are no adequate mail facilities to those points and no adequate connections for dispatching our mails. But where we have adequate facilities, as on the Pacific, furnished, it is true, by other governments, what justification can we have except the sentimental reason of seeing the American flag flying on the ocean, in voting the immense amount of millions and millions of dollars when that service is already in existence? And so, Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote against this amendment because we have no opportunity here to vote separately on the individual proposition of whether a line to South America shall be established, but are obliged to accept all or nothing, and therefore I am going to vote against concurrence. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I shall not repeat what I said on yesterday, but I desire to advert to one provision in this amendment. The last part of the amendment contains this proviso: That the total expenditure for foreign mail service in any one year shall not exceed the estimated revenue therefrom for that year.

It is suggested that the profit on the entire ocean mail service at this time is about three and one-half million dollars, and it is said by advocates of this amendment that we ought to spend the profits at least of the ocean mail service. As to that I contend that the profits are not three and a half million dollars nor any such sum as that. In the first place, in arriving at that sum the advocates have taken the amount paid for ocean mail service and have deducted that from the amount received from ocean postage. But I call attention of gentlemen to the fact that they have not taken into consideration the cost of carrying the mail from the interior points to the seaboard.

It is a fact that the great bulk of the mail which goes from the seaboard originates at interior points, and the amount which we pay for bringing this mail to the seaboard, which in the aggregate amounts to a large sum, is not taken into consideration. Neither is the cost of the administration of the ocean service nor the cost of administration of the Department connected with the carrying of mail from the interior points to the seaboard considered. If these two items were calculated, and were added to the gross amount paid for the ocean mail service, and then the deduction should be made from the amount received from the ocean mail postage, instead of being three and a half millions, it would be less than $2,000,000. Again, I say, that if we are to take the profit from the administration of any part of the post-office service and devote that profit to subsidies for the maintenance of ships upon the ocean, we might as well take the profits from the administration of other parts of the service, and the result would be to increase the already large deficit in the Post-Office Department. So this provision is abortive, does not accomplish the result, and there is no profit of consequence to be expended for subsidies.

I would call the attention of gentlemen to one other provision of the original law of March 3, 1891, which it is now sought to amend. The first section of that act contains this provision:

The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into contracts for a term not less than five nor more than ten years in duration.

That provision is not changed by this amendment which is under consideration. Therefore, if we adopt this amendment here, the Postmaster-General can not enter into a contract for less than five years, while the proviso says that no greater amount shall be expended in any one year than is estimated for the profits or gross receipts for the current year. The two provisions are inconsistent. They are impossible of application. Therefore this proviso, which has induced some Members to favor this amendment, is without merit and falls to the ground. I desired to present this view by way of supplementing the argument which has been made by the chairman of the committee and by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who has given this subject careful study, and to emphasize the fact that this is not only a subsidy under a new guise, placing a new burden upon the administration of the Post-Office Department, increasing our already large deficit, but in addition to show that this proviso by which it is sought to gain favor with Members who would not otherwise be favorable to the subsidizing of American ships through the Post-Office Department—to show them that this proviso is without merit and will not accomplish the purpose its friends intend. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GOEBEL].

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] has contented himself with the simple statement that this doubles the pay of the second and third class of vessels under the act of 1891. That is true, but there is reason for that. The act of 1891 has been in force for seventeen years. During all that time the Post-Office Department has been utterly unable to carry out the provisions of that act relating to second and third class vessels. To-day we are confronted with the proposition as to whether we shall continue to carry the mail in foreign vessels or whether we shall carry the mail in American vessels under the American flag. [Applause on the Republican side.]

All that it is proposed to do by this amendment is to increase the rate from $2 to $4 and from $1 to $2 in the hope—I say in the hope, Mr. Speaker—that we may find American enterprise and American capital that is willing to invest in the construction of new ships and thereby aid our Government in the administration of the Post-Office Department by having our mail carried in American vessels. It is not a subsidy. It is not intended as a subsidy. Who will contend that the original act is a subsidy? If that act is not a subsidy, then any amendment which simply increases the rate can not make it a subsidy. It is hoped that our people will have from thirty to forty millions of dollars invested in new vessels that will carry our mail. Is that an objection? The original act provides they must be American ships, built in America, manned by Americans, and carrying the American flag.

Who is opposed to that proposition? Are you willing that our mails shall be carried in foreign vessels? Ah, my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] contents himself with the fact that we have ample facilities at present. So we have, but all are foreign vessels, for which we are paying a subvention to foreign countries. Are we not big enough and rich enough to carry in our own ships the American mail? Are we to depend upon foreign vessels and pay to foreign countries the expense for carrying the mail? Mr. Speaker, in this measure we are fully protected. It provides that the contracts shall not exceed the income from that service. Let me say to you, Mr. Speaker, that last year our net profits from ocean mail service were $3,600,000. It is proposed to take this amount to improve this service.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. OLMSTED]. The gentleman's time has expired. He has no time to yield.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California, Mr. KAHN.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, it has been well said by the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads that no new principle is involved in this item. It is simply a measure to increase the pay for services rendered. We, on the Pacific coast, have had an experience under the existing law which is exceedingly interesting. Prior to 1900 the Oceanic Steamship Company had formed a combination with a shipping firm in Australia whereby an English ship of 3,000 tons register sailed in conjunction with two American ships of 3,000 tons register and gave a monthly service to the Antipodes. About 1900 the officers of the Oceanic Steamship Company entered into a contract with the Government of the United States to carry the mails on second-class ships to New Zealand and Australia. This is now known as "ocean mail service number 75." The Oceanic Steamship Company built three ships, the Sonoma, the Sierra, and the Ventura, under that contract. They were of 6,000 tons burden and were among the finest ships floating on the Pacific Ocean. Under the terms of the contract they had to make 16 knots an hour. The old ships made but 12 or 14 knots an hour.

The company continued the service for some six years, and during that time, by reason of the fact that the pay was entirely inadequate, it fell into debt to the extent of over $2,000,000, although, under the conditions that prevailed when they had only the 3,000-ton ships and they were not under contract with the Government, they had been making money. The managers of the Oceanic Steamship Company, realizing that they were losing this enormous amount, served notice on the Government that unless the pay could be increased they would have to give up the contract—that they would have to tie up their vessels. And, as a matter of fact, something over a year ago they did withdraw those magnificent ships from that service. They are no longer running to Australia. They are no longer running to New Zealand. They are tied up in the harbor of San Francisco; and unless relief be given they will not again float the American flag. If no relief be given, it will be only a matter of a short time before this company will have to go into liquidation. And when that happens the rising sun flag of Japan is apt to float from the masthead of those three magnificent vessels.

Is there any gentleman on the floor of this House who wants to see that condition brought about? Is there any gentleman on this floor who wants to see these three ships that employ American officers and American sailors, that have a monthly pay roll of $6,540, as against a monthly pay roll of $2,500 of vessels of equal burden under the Japanese flag? I say, does any gentleman on this floor want to see the Stars and Stripes hauled down from those vessels, and in the stead of Old Glory to see the flag of Japan float from their mastheads? This is not idle talk. In discussing a measure of this kind a little over a year ago I warned the House at that time that unless relief was given these vessels would be withdrawn from the Australasian trade; that they would be withdrawn from that run, and that our letters and newspapers would have to be carried on foreign ships to Australia and to New Zealand. At that time many Members of this House thought that it was only a bluff, and they openly declared so. It was only a month after Congress adjourned when those vessels were tied up, just as I had predicted. And they have been tied up ever since, because it was impossible, with the $2 per mile pay allowed under the act of March 3, 1891, for the management of that company to continue them in the service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] five minutes of my time, and at the request of Mr. LLOYD five minutes of his time.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, there are Republican Members here, and Democratic Members as well, I believe, who are willing to vote liberal pay for the establishment of mail lines to South America. Exceptional conditions exist in that direction, partly because of the absence of any adequate provision at present, barring ports on the Caribbean Sea, and also because of the close political and commercial relations which are coming to exist between North and South America. I say this with the reservation that any contract should be very carefully guarded and that it should not be a subsidy in disguise. I can not believe that the same conditions exist for the trans-Pacific routes, save possibly in the case of Australia. Mail communication and freight communication can be supplied there, with the possible exception that I have named.

Now, let us notice a little the comparative expense as appears in the discussion before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. There is at present a Japanese line from Puget Sound, at a cost of $333,000 per year. This proposed line under the American flag would cost $777,000. There is a line from Frisco to the Orient on which the payments are $500,000 a year. The cost of the proposed American line would be $932,000 to Manila.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Does not the gentleman think that the American flag flying over the vessel and American capital put in it would have some tendency at least to advance American trade? [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I yield to no one in my spirit of patriotism, but will the gentleman for a minute consider—

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. As a commercial question.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I must remind the gentleman that I have but five minutes and can not yield further. I have been ambitious of late to finish one paragraph, or at least one sentence, without interruption.

Two gentlemen have spoken of the desirability of carrying our mails under the American flag. Would you abandon the patronage of the Italian lines, the Spanish lines, the French lines, the German, Danish, and the British lines, connecting with countries to which the great bulk of our exports is sent, and substitute in all our communications with Europe American bottoms at an expense probably twice as great? If you are going to adopt that principle, let us for the moment consider just how far we will go. I congratulate the country that there is a very wide difference between the bills which have been brought in here recently and those of former years. Ten years ago there were provisions in a bill which was introduced giving a tonnage subsidy for speed and for the amount of freight capacity on a mileage basis, sail and steam alike. Figures were presented to show that on some routes boats might run without any cargo at all and make a profitable voyage on that subsidy.

I believe that idea has been entirely abandoned, and I am very glad of it, for you can not point to an instance in any country where a healthy, permanent merchant marine has been built up by subsidies granted in accordance with the principles of that measure. It may be claimed that such subsidies have succeeded, but they have done nothing of the kind. It is true that, beginning about seventy years ago, England began to pay liberal sums for mail communication. The prompt transmission of letters or correspondence—and, incidentally, the ready carriage of freight—was thought to be essential for the promotion of commerce. The commercial supremacy of that country was regarded an object to be highly prized, and, beginning about the time of the organization of the Cunard Line, large payments were made for the carrying of mails to America and to different parts of the world. Germany has taken up this policy. Both countries make certain additional payments on condition that the boats will be available as auxiliary ships in case of war, but it is not correct to call either by the name of "subsidy." Wherever we do not have access, the same course may be a salutary one for us, but it is not good policy for us to pay unnecessary and extravagant sums for carrying mail anywhere—at any rate, where routes already exist.

I tried to point out here a little more than a year ago that there is no analogy between a protective tariff and the proposed subsidies to ships. You can build a wall around a country, you can adopt a domestic policy which will exclude the products of other countries and foster home manufactures, because it is in a territory over which you have control; but nobody has control over the ocean. The high seas are a common highway for the commerce of the whole world. No walls can be built around them, and there the fittest is bound to prevail. Who are the fittest? Those who have the greatest taste for the sea, the greatest skill in seamanship, those who can build and operate ships most cheaply. In the long run they will be bound to prevail. What are some of the reasons why we have not assumed a more important position on the sea? Because of the unlimited opportunities for investment on land, because of the billions of dollars in mines, in factories, in farms, and all those various investments which belong to a developing country with unparalleled opportunities for profit. When these are exploited, perhaps we will take up the sea.

I want to say just one word about so-called "mail subsidies." The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] said this mail bill contains other subsidies. Well, if it does, let us put them out. [Applause.] I have voted here fourteen times—and would one more time if I had the opportunity—against the special mail payment to certain railroad lines. I have spoken here twice against the special privileges given to second-class matter. Subsidy or special privilege always inures to the benefit of the strong and operates to the disadvantage of the weak. They are always taken advantage of by all those who are ready to resort to unfair or unjust methods. No gain can come to the average citizen by the granting of any special privilege, and whether the subsidy be to the iron rails or to the ships on the sea, I am ready, for one, to stand here against the principle at all times. [Applause.]

I yield the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am very much surprised at the remarks made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] in regard to the amount of subsidy that would be paid under this bill as compared to the subsidy paid to the Japanese ships running from Puget Sound. These Japanese ships that run from Puget Sound are old, small, and slow vessels that make, perhaps, one trip per month. They have just been voted $327,000 in gold by their own country. American vessels, under this bill, that would make a trip every fifteen days, according to the figures by the Commissioner of Navigation, would amount to about $400,000 a year, as I remember.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; you would not yield to me.

These are the figures, I will say to the gentleman, that the Commissioner of Navigation, as I am informed and other gentleman, submitted to me. So that instead of being double the amount, it would be very much less than what is paid to the Japanese line.

Since we defeated in the last Congress the ocean-mail bill, eight out of the fifteen vessels upon the Pacific Ocean have disappeared, and we are to-day paying foreign vessels for a slower and inferior service practically the same amount of money for carrying the mail that we would have to pay American vessels carrying it under this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. STAFFORD. I challenge that statement. It can not be borne out by the facts.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Now, there is another side to this question to which I desire to call attention. In Seattle to-day we are entertaining the great battle-ship fleet, and my people, with the enthusiasm and patriotism of American citizens are welcoming it, but are humiliated by the fact that those battle ships were compelled to employ foreign vessels to assist them to reach that port, and that they can not leave it except with the assistance of foreign vessels. Of what use, after all, are our battle ships in time of necessity? They are to-day practically as helpless as if they had neither guns nor ammunition. To-day upon the Pacific Ocean we are compelled to employ foreign vessels to send our mail, supplies, and ammunition to the Philippines. Only a few days ago this Government made a contract to send its ammunition to the Philippines in a Japanese vessel.

Within the last few weeks we were compelled to employ foreign vessels to carry our soldiers down to Cuba. To-day, while we have a naval station on the island of Samoa, we can not communicate with it except by foreign vessels. We are compelled to send the mail to our soldiers in our own territory by foreign vessels. Upon the Pacific Ocean there is to-day a combination of foreign vessels that have raised the freight rate upon that ocean more than 400 per cent within the last two years. A copy of their agreement is printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, if anyone desires to see it. To-day there is a combination of foreign vessels on the Atlantic between this country and Europe that has raised freight rates 30 per cent within the last year.

There is a combination of foreign vessels between this country and South America that charges the highest freight rate in the world; and to-day an American merchant has to pay double the freight upon slow and inferior vessels upon the same article for the same distance that the European merchant has to pay to send to the same port in South America.

Now, if we were to pass this bill, it would cause the construction of forty new vessels in American yards. It would give employment to 150,000 men and pay them a quarter of a million dollars in wages each day. If we were to pass this bill, it would give us an auxiliary for our Navy and transports for the Army, and would enable us to carry our mails under our own flag for the same price that we are now paying foreign vessels to do it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I voted against the conference report upon this proposition. To-day I have voted in favor of each of its features that have been already presented to the House, and, unless some reasons to the contrary stronger than those to which I have listened shall be given, I expect to vote to-day in favor of the remaining feature, the proposition now presented [applause], and I have not changed my mind upon this question. I did not vote for this yesterday for the simple reason that I was then unable to obtain that accurate information about what was proposed that I thought was due to the people of my district before I could vote upon it. The time which, under present conditions, was permitted to the chairman of the committee to explain this matter is so short that it would not have been possible for him to make that explanation at all full or complete, at least not such an explanation as seemed necessary to me before I could act intelligently.

For those conditions neither he nor this side of the House is responsible—conditions under which a provision of the Constitution that was intended to enable a constituent to know how his representative was discharging his trust has been degraded into part of the performance of a silly game of roll call, at which no one outside of the House of Representatives would be childish enough to play. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

This question, familiar as it may be elsewhere in the country, is not one on which the people of my district have arrived at any definite conclusion, having no direct interest in it. Therefore I felt it incumbent upon me, in determining what I believe should and would be their views as well as my own, to ascertain as well as I could the exact nature of this proposition.

I could not find it stated in the report. I could not find it stated in the statement accompanying that report. That is not to be criticised, because amendments proposed are not ordinarily set forth in the report or statement. They refer to the bill. After several efforts I was unable to procure a copy of the bill containing the Senate amendment, which would show definitely and accurately this proposition for ocean mail service. Therefore I felt not only warranted but constrained on yesterday to vote "no" on the proposition, believing that if it should be adopted, my vote would have done no harm, and that if, as happened, it was defeated, time and opportunity would be given me to obtain the desired information. It has so turned out, because to-day reason has temporarily resumed its sway on the other side of the House, and we have by unanimous consent exchanged a time-wasting and worthless roll call for twenty minutes of intelligent, useful discussion. That discussion and the examination I have had an opportunity to make justify me in casting a vote for this proposition, which I am sure will merit and receive the approval of my constituents. I regret I have not time to state my reasons here. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDO].

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, this is not in any proper sense what is called a "subsidy." It proposes merely to pay proper returns for service in carrying the mail. There is no part of this country that furnishes more to the profit of the postal service than the great city of New York. It desires communication for its merchants and manufacturers with all parts of the world; such communication it has not to-day. Its present communication with South America, if it is desired to be quick and certain, is by way of Europe, and not directly south, except occasionally, and then with a loss of time on freight, and very often a loss with the mail. And so to-day we have to send our mails and most of our passengers by way of Europe to reach any part of South America. It seems to me that the gentlemen on the other side, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], in the river and harbor bill last year, granted a subsidy of from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 to foreign vessels in the deepening of the harbors along the coasts of this country.

Nearly every cent of that expenditure for any of the larger harbors is for the benefit of foreign ships, in order that they may make more profit on their freight money; and I have just looked up the vote in the RECORD, and I find that there was not one man on either side in this House, including the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who did not vote for that bill to grant a subsidy to foreign vessels of from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000; and yet they are not willing even to pay, for the carrying of mail in our own vessels, what we are paying to foreign ones; and I can not understand how any American citizen can take any such position. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. May I inquire what time is remaining to both sides?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has eight minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Tennessee seventeen.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I thought I had ten minutes. Those two minutes are very precious. I suggest that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] use some of his time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] two minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. My sole purpose in rising again is to correct a misapprehension and refute the statement made by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] who has just spoken, when he said that we paid to-day for mail carriage on the Pacific Ocean as much as we would pay under this subsidy bill. If he had studied the hearings, or, further, if he had made the barest inquiry of the Post-Office Department, he would have learned that for all the mail that is carried across the Pacific to the Orient and Australia, and from there to this country, the total amount we pay annually is $181,000, while under this bill, for second-class steamers alone, the total amount as provided will aggregate $2,304,600.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. How many vessels are you going to run to get that and how do you know they will be run?

Mr. STAFFORD. As to the number of vessels operated to-day, the Post-Office Department has not made any complaint that the service is not adequate, and it goes back again to the original proposition; and I now call upon the gentleman from Washington to give me his authority for the statement that we are paying to-day for ocean mail service to the Orient and to Australia as much as the amount provided in this bill, and I yield to the gentleman half a minute for that purpose.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will say to the gentleman that I base that statement upon the fact that since the Oceanic mail line went out of service we have been paying to foreign vessels for an inferior service on old, slow vessels as much as we would have paid to the Oceanic line under the bill that was defeated.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say again that if the gentleman had examined any of the records at all, he would have found—and the accuracy of my statement is not questioned—that the total pay for the carriage of the mail upon all steamers to the Orient and to Australia and for return mail is $181,000, while under this bill it will be $2,300,000, which is a pure subsidy. I now yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, there is no man in this country more anxious and more willing to enact proper legislation to restore the American merchant marine than myself, but I want to do it honestly, I want to do it along constitutional lines, and I want to do it in harmony with that fundamental American principle of equal rights to all and special privileges to none. [Applause.]

Sir, for years I have been advocating legislation to restore our merchant marine, and for years the Republican majority in this House has turned to my appeals a deaf ear. The Republican party is responsible for the present deplorable condition of the merchant marine.

In 1896 the Republican party wrote in its national platform a plank to restore the American merchant marine by discriminating duties. That meant something, but Mr. Hanna, the then leader of the Republican party, came to Congress and instead of adhering to that plank he introduced his bill for ship subsidies, an outrageous measure. Thereupon I introduced a bill for discriminating duties, and the Republicans defeated it. The Republican party abandoned the plank of 1896 for discriminating duties and did not have the courage to readopt it or renounce it in its platform of 1900 and ignored the matter in its platform of 1904.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. No; I can not yield to the gentleman now. I have only a few minutes. I trust the gentleman will speak in his own time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Republicans in Congress have been advocating ever since I have been here the restoration of the American merchant marine by ship subsidies, by gratuities, that rob all the people in order to foster a special industry. It is undemocratic, un-republican, and un-American. I am opposed to ship subsidies, and this proposition is a ship-subsidy measure pure and simple. It is a little ship subsidy, it is true, and that is the apology its advocates make for it. It is just a little subsidy forsooth, but I warn the Members that it is the entering wedge to open the Treasury of the people, and if it is adopted, it means in the end a gigantic raid on the country's finances, not for $3,000,000 a year, but for thirty millions, or forty millions, or fifty millions of dollars a year, and for years and years to come. This is the beginning of a systematic scheme to rob all the people for the benefit of a few, and if it is rushed through in the closing hours of Congress the people will denounce it from one end of the land to the other. I warn my Republican friends to go slow and be sure.

Sir, I want to say to the Members of this House that the American merchant marine that my friend from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] regrets has disappeared has been swept off the high seas by Republican legislation, by Republican policies, and can never be restored by ship subsidies. Let us be honest and restore our shipping interests by repealing antagonistic Republican legislation and reenact our former navigation laws that gave us the finest merchant fleet in the world and made us in the early days of the Republic the mistress of the seas.

If this bill should pass, it would not lay a single new keel in any shipyard in our country; it will not employ an idle man in all the land, and the men who are advocating the subsidy know that to be a fact. It will not build or put in commission a new ship; it will not put the American flag on an additional ship on any sea or on any ocean, and the gentlemen favoring the proposition can not successfully controvert the statement.

Mr. Speaker, the American people are unalterably opposed to a ship-subsidy raid on the Treasury. A subsidy is a bounty, a bonus, a gratuity, and it never has succeeded, and it never will succeed, in accomplishing the purpose desired. All history proves it conclusively. Wherever and whenever it has been tried it has failed. In my opinion, if a subsidy bill should pass it would not restore our American merchant marine or aid materially our shipbuilding industries. It is a waste of time to talk about ship subsidies, and I believe every honest American is absolutely opposed to them. We might just as well pass a bill to pay a subsidy to every man who grows a bushel of wheat, or a barrel of potatoes, or a bale of cotton, or who makes a wagon, or builds a locomotive, as to pay a subsidy to a man who builds a ship or sails a vessel. [Laughter and applause.]

The taxpayers of our country, burdened now almost beyond endurance, are opposed to ship subsidies. They are opposed to any gift bill. They say no private business interests should be aided by direct grants from the Treasury. Ship subsidies are subversive of the eternal principles of justice and equality, contrary to the theory of our free institutions, of doubtful expediency, and at war with the spirit of the Constitution. Congress has no power to subsidize any trade or any calling or any business on land or sea at the expense of the taxpayers of our country.

Mr. Speaker, I have always been, and always expect to be, a sincere friend of our shipping industries and an enthusiastic advocate of just and proper and honest legislation that will build up and restore our merchant marine. I believe every true American desires the supremacy of American ships in our over-seas carrying trade, but I believe they prefer it along the lines of tonnage taxes in accordance with the terms of my bill (H. R. 18977) now pending in this House, and which the Republican leaders are opposed to reporting and passing. This bill of mine will restore our merchant marine in all its former glory and not take one dollar out of the pockets of the taxpayers. The people see no necessity of taking money out of the Treasury and paying it to the present trust owners of ships for doing what they are already doing; and those most conversant with the subject even go so far as to declare that this subsidy scheme, if enacted into law, will not lay a new keel in any American shipyard or secure an additional ton of freight of over-seas commerce. Practically every dollar granted will go to the ships now afloat owned by the shipping trust.

Ship subsidies do not build ships—they create ocean-trading monopolies. Ship subsidies will not give workmen employment in American shipyards—the money will simply go into the capacious pockets of the plutocratic beneficiaries of the shipping trust. Every scheme of this kind simply permits respectable corruption and benefits the few at the expense of the many. The principle of ship subsidies is inherently wrong and absolutely indefensible, and no man who understands the question can justify the steal in the face of the facts. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Indiana use the balance of his time in one speech?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will use it in two. The gentleman can use all of his time except one speech.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, the contention on the other side is that this is a mail proposition and not a ship-subsidy proposition. I do not understand how gentlemen on the other side—how the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads—could make this mistake. I invite him to read the hearings on what was practically this proposition, embodied in the bill 4068, held by subcommittee No. 4 of the Post-Office Committee of the House. In that hearing it was admitted that the main purpose in securing this legislation was not to give increased mail facilities, was not to give added mail facilities as a main proposition, but to build up the American merchant marine, so that the American goods could be carried to foreign countries in American bottoms; so that in time of war these ships could be used as colliers and transports for the Army. This was admitted by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. McCleary.

Now, as to whether it was a subsidy or not, calculate it. I am one of those who believe that a proposition must be judged by the purpose to be accomplished. What is it here? At present the service which is to be supplemented by the operation of this bill costs $188,000. Under the proposed provision in the post-office bill the service will cost $3,600,000. So that, roundly speaking, there is 5 per cent of mail service to be accomplished by the passage of this bill and 95 per cent of subsidy [applause] in order to build up the American merchant marine to carry American products to foreign countries in American bottoms and to provide colliers and transport for the Army in time of war. There is in the proposition 5 per cent of mail facilities and 95 per cent of subsidy provided. Not only is this true, but it is a subsidy without compensation to the Government of the United States. It is one that will not benefit the people of this country at all, as has been said here. The mail facilities should be paid for. When the Republican party proposes to inaugurate the ship-subsidy policy, let them come forward and pass a bill for that purpose, and not load down the postal service with it.

I say to the Members of this House that whenever you place upon the postal service an unnecessary burden you cripple and injure the postal service to that extent. Pass this bill and the next time the postal employees ask additional compensation they will be met with the cry that there is a large postal deficit, and to weigh it down with this proposition will postpone their just claims, to the detriment and injury of the postal service. Keep the postal service for one purpose, and that is the transmission and distribution of the mail. Do not load it down with other propositions. Whenever you do, you get into trouble that you can not fathom. The American people to-day have a great postal service. I am proud of it. In the nine years I have been in Congress I have tried to make it better, and I view with alarm any proposition such as this to injure it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some difference of opinion as to the effect of this measure in promoting the merchant marine. There are certain technical phases of this question that I believe should be taken account of. At the present time the provision is essentially that of a subsidy. The distances to South America and to the Orient are so great that twenty knots is an impossible speed. A $2 rate is an impossible rate. Consequently to-day there is no promotion of the American merchant marine. But I believe that a $4 rate would permit the lines to be built, and if my estimates are not wrong, allowing 5 per cent for deterioration a year and 5 per cent for partial profits, there ought to be between thirty-five and forty ships created by this assistance.

Let me point out that this is a fair chance to try the proposition and see if it is a subsidy or a promotion for the American merchant marine. If we leave it as it is, it is a subsidy; if you try it the other way, it may prove to be a promotion of the merchant marine. Further, I do not maintain that it will be adequate. I know that a merchant marine is so essential to the nations of the world that even if we secure the transportation to those markets, foreign nations will undercut us. I believe we will have to follow this up with navigation laws. In fact, the time is coming when other governments will own transportation lines and will force this form of government ownership upon us.

Another technical point: We have had an illustration in the war with Spain of the expense of not having an adequate merchant marine. Talk about raiding the Treasury. The "mosquito fleet" and those inefficient colliers are the greatest raid upon the Treasury since the civil war. Possession of a merchant marine would have saved us tenfold the cost of the necessary promotion.

The transportation in that small war was only to Cuba, and yet we exhausted our possibilities of expansion in auxiliaries. We could not buy vessels abroad and had to bring into service small ships poorly adapted to the transportation of coal, which to-day constitute a monument to the waste involved in attempting to provide auxiliaries without a merchant marine. To-day those colliers could not transport themselves to the Philippine Islands or Hawaii.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. The fleet on which we have spent hundreds of millions would have been impotent and useless in case of war in the Pacific, for it could not have gone there.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, one peculiarity about this measure, or at least this proposal, judging by the speeches made on the other side, is that it seems to be neither "fish, flesh, nor good red herring." They say it does not provide for a subsidy even for sufficient compensation to ships carrying American mail. If that description of it be correct I should think there should be no objection on the part of anyone if it were rejected throughout—brushed from the floor as rubbish to be swept away—not a legislation proposed to be seriously considered. My friend from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] has of course pictured to us a condition where the only objection to this proposal would be that it is ridiculously disproportionate to the emergency he discerns. According to him there is but one safety for us from the perils which affright him. The Government must own all the shipping sailing from every port of the country, because at some time or other all the world will be by the ears and we will need every ship on the ocean as colliers to supply our war vessels with the necessary materials of steam transportation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, the great difficulty I have experienced is to determine whether, in the judgment of its promoters, this is really an appropriation for the necessary expenses of the post-office, or whether it is what the gentleman from Alabama scorns to call a "subsidy," but is willing to recognize as a "promotion" to American shipbuilding. Mr. Speaker, mark the distinction between those words. "Subsidy" is to be distinguished from "promotion." One may be reprehensible, but the other is commendable. The statesman that would recoil from a subsidy would not hesitate to support a promotion. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] Mr. Speaker, those of my friends on the other side who have spoken on this subject effectively are not those who have discussed it as a question affecting efficiency of the post-office, but the orators who have appealed to the American flag as their justification. Now, that is at least familiar, even though we may doubt whether it is sensible. We know what that means. [Laughter.] That means appetite thirsting for an appropriation. [Laughter and applause.] It is the old familiar cry with which the judgment of Representatives has been made subject to the schemes of selfish promoters. Cursed be he who would hesitate to throw open the door of the Treasury to an enterprising citizen who approaches it wrapped in the American flag! [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, there is a wide distinction between the two sides of this Chamber upon one question. It is not over our desire for the restoration of the American flag to any point of prominence from which it can float with glory. On that we are all unanimous. But there is a wide divergence of opinion between the two parties as to where the flag can float with credit to itself and where it may be unfolded with doubtful honor. We on this side, sir, believe it is an emblem of glorious self-sacrifice, not a badge of sordid greed. We believe that the true way to restore the merchant marine or any other commercial enterprise to prominence is to furnish the best service. Let us build the best ships, and then we will be proud to see the flag float from them. Then you will not need a subsidy; then they will dominate the transportation trade of the world by the superior excellence of the service they can render. There can be no necessity or excuse for a subsidy except to keep inferior ships in operation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We want the American flag restored to the ocean by the construction of splendid ships to float it; you by maintaining squallid ships living, not upon what they can earn in free competition with all the world, but on treasure extracted or extorted from the Treasury of this nation. We want to see the American flag restored by the development of skill in production and ability in business management; you by granting subsidies which will encourage fresh demands until the lobbies will be thronged with the agents of the trusts. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Between those two the American people must judge. You can not becloud this question by misapplication of terms. A man who will pretend that an appropriation of $186,000, which has sufficed to meet every necessity of this branch of the postal service, increased suddenly by $3,500,000, without any pretense of extending the facilities, can be anything else than a subsidy must have a very low estimate of popular intelligence. The gentleman from Alabama describes the proposal fairly, even while shrinking from the word "subsidy," when he says that it will promote American shipbuilding. We welcome the definition and the issue it raises.

Between the Democratic policy of restoring the merchant marine by improved industry and your proposal to restore it by subsidy we challenge the judgment of the American people. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FASSETT].

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that my health will not permit me to enter into an oratorical contest of vociferation with my friend from New York. I am glad if this may prove to be an entering wedge. [Applause on the Republican side.] I care not whether you call this a subsidy; I care not whether you call it a subvention, or protection, or promotion, or encouragement, or appropriation, so long as it accomplishes the object. [Applause on the Republican side.] No American can differ from another American upon the desirability of restoring our merchant marine to its ancient splendor and majesty upon the seas. We have become the greatest producing nation in the world, and foreigners, our trade rivals, are carrying our goods.

Our friends upon the other side have told us about the sweets of the foreign markets, and look and behold, every foreign market in the world is held under the control of our trade rivals, and when we ask you for permission to enter there you sneeringly say, "subsidy" and "subvention." Gentlemen seem to be hostile against an effort to restore American shipping. The learned orator says that all we need do is to build good ships. Gentlemen, we build the best ships in the world. [Applause.] And gentlemen say we want good management of those ships. Gentlemen, our sailors outlive the world. [Applause.] We build the best ships, we manage the best ships, but we build them at the highest rate of interest, we pay the highest rate of wages to the employees who drive every rivet home, we pay more for food for our sailors, we pay more for wage to our sailors, and, consequently, we can not meet the test of cheapness proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. Gentlemen, we have got past the worship of the god of cheapness. [Applause.]

What we want is a higher civilization founded upon a higher plane of living through higher possibilities of earning, and under God and the protection policy we have achieved that in America.

The whole business of the world is twenty-four thousand millions of dollars a year, of which we furnish 12½ per cent, and we carry only 1½ per cent. We pay $210,000,000 a year for transportation, and pay only 12½ per cent to our own people. We are endeavoring by this legislation to make it possible for the best ships, equipped with the best men, managed in the best way, to cover the seas, and we are moved to this by every dictate of prudence and every impulse of patriotism. [Applause.] We need this not alone for our ships, for our Navy in time of war, but we need it for commercial purposes. So long as our productive capacity has not yet overtaken our consuming ca-capacity, it is well enough, but, with Pittsburg producing more than England and Germany in steel and iron alone, we are overtaking our own capacity to consume with tremendous rapidity, and then when we want to send goods abroad who is going to take them? Our trade rivals.

The Lusitania and the Mauretania, those great ships, 780 feet long, 80 feet wide, and 103 feet deep, costing $6,500,000 apiece, were given practically to the Cunard Company by terms of subvention so generous that at the end of twenty years they will not have cost the Cunard Company one penny. If either one of those ships was placed on end in this open common beside the Washington Monument, the ship would tower 200 feet above the monument.

Living upon our commerce in times of peace, they prey upon our vitals in time of war, supported by our own commerce. [Loud and long-continued applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules, receding from the disagreement to Senate amendments numbered 76 and 77, and concurring in the same.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 145, nays 153, answered "present" 11, not voting 79, as follows:

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if Mr. McMORRAN voted?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. PRINCE. Then I withdraw my vote of "no" and vote "present."

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE] recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. He seems to be paired with Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I voted "no." I now desire to change my vote to "present."

The name of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] was called and he voted "present."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from New York [Mr. DWIGHT] recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. He is not.

Mr. HARRISON. I have a pair with him, and, therefore, as I voted "no," I would like to withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The name of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] was called, and he voted "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and the conferees be instructed to insist on their disagreement.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. OVERSTREET. If I can make myself heard, I move to suspend the rules, that the House adhere to its disagreement to the Senate amendments on the post-office appropriation bill, and that the conferees be requested to adhere.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. One moment. If the gentleman from Indiana will give his attention. If the House should adhere to its disagreement to the Senate amendments it should not ask for a conference. It is not the usual custom where the House adheres, and a simple motion to adhere would be sufficient, if it is the sense of the House.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to suspend the rules, and that the House do adhere to its disagreement to the three amendments before the House.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21897) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes.

CONSTRUCTION OF DAM ACROSS RAINY RIVER.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I move that the House do now reconsider the bill H. R. 15444.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up the following bill, which the Clerk will report:

A bill (H. R. 5444) extending the time for the construction of a dam across Rainy River.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Rainy River Improvement Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, as the successor to the rights and privileges heretofore granted to the Koochiching Company under the following acts of Congress, namely: Chapter 238 of volume 30, Statutes at Large, entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across Rainy River," approved May 4, 1898; and of chapter 797 of volume 33, Statutes at Large, entitled "An act relating to a dam across Rainy River," approved February 25, 1905, and of the various acts and provisions therein recited amending said act approved May 4, 1898, and further subject to the restrictions, conditions, and terms of all of said acts, is hereby authorized to construct and maintain a dam across Rainy River, Minnesota, at the place designated in said acts in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, so far as the same shall be applicable thereto: Provided, That said dam shall be completed on or before July, 1911.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question, under the Constitution, is: Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, this bill is known as the "Rainy River bill," to extend the time of that company to construct a dam across Rainy River, Minnesota, upon which the President sent a veto message to the House upon the 13th day of April last, which was based upon substantially two grounds: First, that the act provided no limitation as to the time for its operation; and, second, that there was no limitation or condition of charge by the Government for the privilege granted to the company.

The bill was referred by the House to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which had extensive hearings upon the measure, and many new facts were developed which were not known to the House nor the President at the time the original action was taken. In these hearings it was developed, as we knew before, that this was an international proposition, Rainy River being the boundary stream between Minnesota and the Province of Ontario. It was necessary, on that account, that this company should obtain franchises and rights from the Dominion of Canada and from the Province of Ontario as well as from Congress. This had been done, and the company in 1905, after acquiring its rights completely in Canada and in the United States, commenced the construction of the dam, and has expended more than $750,000 without issuing bonds or a dollar's worth of stock, so that it has been done with their own funds, for the purpose of making this improvement as provided by their grant.

Under the act of Congress of 1905, for a three years' provision to finish the work, their time would elapse under this law in July, 1908, and this bill provided for its extension until July, 1911.

It was found further that the Canadian government provided that this project should not only be a part of their system for providing power for the adjacent country, but was a part of the navigation system of Canada; that it was a unit proposition; that the two sides of the river could not be separated; that there could only be one dam and one project for the whole river, and this is expressly stated in the Canadian grant. It is also stated as a basis for the Canadian grant that this improvement would be of great advantage to navigation. There was a project on the part of our Government to survey that river with a view to improving our own navigation facilities.

The Corps of Engineers reported in December, 1905, that the navigation was on the Canadian side of the river, and that there could be no navigation on our side of the river without a very large expense. It was shown in the testimony before the committee that the navigation would be improved by raising the head of water, affording the facilities without cost, and under the provisions of the general dam act, under which this expense would be provided by lock and dam free of cost to the United States if it should ever be necessary to make these improvements. These matters were presented to the committee at length. During the hearings the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. James R. Garfield, on behalf of the President, appeared to present the views of the Administration upon this matter. He was heard at length to discuss the objections to the bill. After the hearing conferences were had by the representatives of the company with the officers of the Administration.

The officers of the company have been extremely anxious, from the beginning, to comply with all that the Administration has required. It has only been the difference of opinion between those who doubted the full power of Congress to make charges, and those who believed that Congress had the largest power. This bill does not touch or settle that point at all. It was agreed between the Administration and the committee that any points of difference ought not to be settled or discussed by this bill, because they could not be. The bill itself can not be amended. It must pass exactly as it passed the Senate and House and was acted upon by the President. Under these circumstances the officers of the Rainy River Improvement Company—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, right there I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. While of course you can not take up the same bill and amend it when the question is, "Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?" why could not the committee have brought in a new bill fixing a limitation of time and fixing a charge, either to be paid to the Federal Government, or providing in the bill that there should be a charge paid to the State of Minnesota satisfactory to that State, the latter being in my opinion the preferable course to pursue?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the gentleman asked that question, because the committee have had that very situation in mind. It is the view of many able lawyers that the present dam act is almost as broad as language can make it. I do not wish to discuss the language of the act. I simply read the action of the committee upon the proposition stated by the gentleman from Mississippi. The language of the present law, which is incorporated as a part of this bill, is as follows:

Provided, That in approving said plans and location such conditions and stipulations may be imposed as the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War may deem necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States.

Now, the committee were in doubt as to whether or not that language was as broad and the powers and authority as extensive as it could be under the Constitution. Accordingly, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce directed that its subcommittee, which had charge of those affairs, should investigate and consider this very proposition, which is stated in the report filed with this bill. I will read that language:

Your committee realized that such defects might exist, and directed its proper subcommittee to take this whole subject under consideration, to submit such amendments to such general act at the first meeting in December next as should grant to the proper officials of the War Department the largest authority under the Constitution to fix any definite time limit which should be necessary and such charge as could be made under the circumstances of each particular case.

The committee have done all that they could. They stand ready to bring in a measure before this House to give the largest authority, to do exactly what the gentleman from Mississippi desires; but it could not be done at this time in the session, with the pressure of business. For that reason this company and these officials went to the War Department and agreed to do four things which are set forth in this report:

First. Such reasonable limitations as to the time for such grant as the Secretary of War shall impose, conditioned that the United States shall not be subjected to any expense in the removal of such or any obstruction or improvement caused by said company either at the expiration of said grant or at any other time that the United States may direct the same to be removed.

Second. That the said Rainy River Improvement Company has agreed and will agree to the payment of such charge to the United States as may be required by the Secretary of War, either under the present law or as may be hereafter determined by authority of Congress.

Third. That this grant is expressly made subject to any impositions hereinafter authorized or directed by Congress embodied in any general law or special modification or change of this or other acts, and that a special reservation to this effect shall be an essential part of such approval of said plans by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers.

Fourth. That any application of said company for the approval of its plans and specifications whenever made shall be agreed by said parties to be within the purview of a part of and as authorized by the pending act of Congress whenever the same shall become a law; and that all the provisions of the approval of the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers to said plans and specifications and all conditions as a part thereof shall be a part of the authority of said officers now or hereafter conferred by general or special acts of Congress with reference to this project.

Now, that agreement is in writing, signed by these officers of the Rainy River Company, and approved by the War Department officials.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman think that will make those conditions legally a part of the legislation?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No, Mr. Speaker, but it does this, it binds the officials of the company, when they submit their plans for approval, to subject themselves to those very limitations and conditions, and that is what they want to do. They want in good faith to comply with those very things that they have agreed to do. Of course it can not affect this legislation. Nobody pretends that it does. But in connection with this legislation it does show clearly that the intent of your committee and the intent of the company was to comply in the utmost good faith with the requirements laid down by President Roosevelt as to this particular case. It can not affect any other.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Your proposition is that if it is not legal, it is a moral estoppel?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It is more than that; it is an agreement on their part that if the War Department will agree to and approve their plans, they on their part will agree to submit to these conditions. Now, on the strength of this situation to-day, the Secretary of the Interior, James R. Garfield, sent to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce a letter which I send to the desk to be read in my time. Before that is read I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. I rose to ask the gentleman if this would not operate to estop them from claiming an estoppel on the part of the Government?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I think it would be an estoppel.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., May 23, 1908.

DEAR SIR: I have discussed the report of your subcommittee on the Rainy River Improvement Company bill with the President, and I am authorized by him to say that he recognizes the conditions which mark this case off very sharply from any which may hereafter arise, in view of the fact that under an existing law much capital has already been invested by the Rainy River Improvement Company which will represent a dead loss if there is no extension of the time within which the company is required to complete its work, and, furthermore, in view of the fact that the parliamentary situation in Congress is such that no new bill nor amendment to the present bill can now be passed.

It also appears that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has announced in the report that at the next session of Congress it will endeavor to remedy the defects of the existing general law on the subject by submitting amendments which will permit the Executive to fix definite time limits and impose reasonable charges in all such cases, while on its part the Rainy River Improvement Company, through its president, has filed with the War Department an agreement that it will submit to and abide by such conditions as may be imposed by the Secretary of War, including a time limit and a reasonable charge, when it files as it must, the new plans which must be approved by the War Department before it can proceed under the proposed law.

These conditions having been fulfilled, the President feels that it is safe, from the viewpoint of the public interest, and equitable to the Rainy River Improvement Company to enact the bill into law.

Very respectfully,

JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

HON. FREDERICK C. STEVENS,
Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Alabama, my colleague, Mr. RICHARDSON, who is on the committee and the subcommittee, such time as he desires.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I think in order for the House to fully understand this matter, it is necessary to refer briefly to the conditions and causes that brought it about. I agree in the arrangement that resulted in the work and consultation of the subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee with the President and with the Secretary of the Interior. I do that, Mr. Speaker, simply for the reason that in this proceeding is conceded the fact that the veto by the President of the United States of the Rainy River bill, now under consideration, is to be overridden by this House on the ground that it was not in principle right. That is why I agree to it. If that is not done, then the work and recommendation made in our report is fruitless.

It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that recently, in a special message from the President of the United States, he declared that there had been introduced numerous bills granting water-power rights on navigable streams, and that he intended to veto each and every one of them that did not provide for a rental and a charge in behalf of the Government for the use of the water. The bill, known as the "Rainy River bill," came up after that declaration made by the President. It passed both the Senate and the House and the President vetoed it. The President's veto is based on these reasons:

Every permit to construct a dam on a navigable stream should specifically recognize the right of the Government to fix a term for its duration and to impose such charge or charges as may be deemed necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States in accordance with the act of June 21, 1906. There is sharp conflict of judgment as to whether this general act empowers the War Department to fix a charge and set a time limit. All grounds for such doubt should be removed henceforth by the insertion in every act granting such a permit of words adequate to show that a time limit and a charge to be paid to the Government are among the interests of the United States which should be protected through conditions and stipulations to be imposed either by the War Department or, as I think would be preferable, by the Interior Department.

The veto was sent back to the House and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and a subcommittee was appointed, of which I had the pleasure of being a member, and we made laborious, sincere, and honest efforts to protect an honest company, the Rainy River Improvement Company, that had been acting in absolutely good faith, and at the same time we felt that we were unwilling to sacrifice or compromise one iota of principle on the great question of what jurisdiction the Federal Government has over navigable streams. That is a question that is so vital and far-reaching and so important, and upon which I will not, under any circumstances, surrender the conviction I have until I am convinced I am wrong.

Now, the Rainy River Company was organized in 1898, and the records in the War Department show that the Government engineer had reported in the past few years that it would be unwise and too expensive to the Government to undertake to construct works for the improvement of navigation at the point where the Rainy River Improvement Company had authority to construct its dam. The company has spent, up to date, nearly $1,000,000, and it is in the act of spending five and a half million dollars more for necessary plants to utilize the water power.

Their lease or term expired the 1st of July, 1908, this year. They simply applied in a formal way for an extension of their charter to carry on this work, and it was that bill that the President of the United States vetoed, because it did not make provision for a charge or rental for the Federal Government for the use of the water power. We can not ignore the fact that the Government had declined to spend a dollar at that point for the improvement of navigation, because it was too expensive.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me? That was one of the reasons—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am explaining the bill; I am coming to the results.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. When the President vetoed this bill, is it not a fact that this company had then expended a good deal of money there?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; nearly a million dollars.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. When the bill was vetoed?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Before it was vetoed. It had invested nearly a million dollars before the veto was made.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. One of the reasons given by the President why the veto should be overridden is the fact that they had made this investment there prior to that time?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; that is not the entire reason. The reason given by the Secretary of the Interior, who represented the President, is that the veto was mistaken in a matter of fact. I would have voted to override the veto if it had come up under other circumstances.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The President now says, "In view of the fact that under an existing law much capital has already been invested by the Rainy River Improvement Company, which will represent a dead loss if there is no extension of the time within which the company is required to complete its work," he is willing that this shall become a law.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; that is what the Secretary of the Interior says. And I say if this veto stands, the company goes into bankruptcy and sinks every dollar it has invested, and it is unjust and unfair to this company.

Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia. It is a fact, is it not, although that investment had been made at the time of the veto, that fact was not known to the President.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Then the President vetoed the bill without knowledge of the facts.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am glad of the suggestion of the gentleman from West Virginia, because I have no doubt whatever his statement is entirely correct.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I want the fact made apparent that the President vetoed this bill without knowledge of the facts. This bill was one of two or more applications by the Rainy River Improvement Company to extend the time for the completion of the dam. The company had spent money and time in securing a proper charter or permit from Canada. Rainy River is about 80 miles in length and constitutes a part of the border line between the State of Minnesota and Canada. The Canada permit having been secured, the company commenced work and spent money to a large amount. Then it was that the company applied for an extension of its American charter.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The fact that the War Department, by its engineers, had examined that place in 1905, and reported adversely on any plan for the improvement of navigation at that point on Rainy River, because it was impracticable and too expensive, is a potent fact in the consideration of this question of the veto. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Rainy River company had an absolute right to go there and erect that dam and structures without ever consulting the Federal Government, and why? Because there was no question of navigation involved in it, and the Government has no interest whatsoever in any of our navigable streams save to control, use, and supervise navigation. The Government has an "easement," as it is called in law. But that is not involved in this case, because that is conceded when we pass this bill, notwithstanding the veto of the President. We are doing the best we can equitably and fairly to save that company from bankruptcy and suspend at least for a while consideration of other questions. I understand, Mr. Speaker, the reluctance that any company or citizen feels in erecting any works on a navigable stream, even at a point where navigation is entirely impracticable by reason of natural obstructions, without first getting the consent of the Government.

Now, that is so far as the bill is concerned. I do not agree, and I have said as much to my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], because I think practically we agree—but I do not agree with what the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Garfield, says. He goes in his letter something further, I think, than the committee goes that makes this report. He was representing the President and anxious to treat this company fairly. Well, in the first and foremost place he says in his letter as one of the conditions to be complied with, "to impose reasonable charges in all such cases." I do not admit that the Federal Government, in the matter of navigable streams, has the right to put limits or to put charges unless it involves navigation. A "time limit" enters as an element into the charges or expense. The Government can sell the water.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Has the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee announced that at the next session of Congress it is going to pass such a law?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It has not of my knowledge. I am coming to that now. We have a general law, passed June 21, 1906, to regulate the construction of dams, etc., and you may remember that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] a short time since on the floor of the House asked me the question if I was not a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and had I not agreed to that dam bill, and did the bill not provide the War Department to prescribe stipulations for conditions and limitations, and so forth, and could not a rental charge be one of the conditions. I said, "yes, I had agreed to the bill," but I asked him if he ever heard of anybody contending that that bill provided for the Federal Government to make charges where navigation was not concerned. He said no, he did not, he had not heard of that, and now I contend that when any intimation is made—none is made by my colleagues on this committee—that the present dam bill makes any provision for the Federal Government collecting charges, I dissent to that, and the dam bill does not mean it. For the War Department to prescribe stipulations, conditions, and so forth, applies only to the protection of navigation and prevent it from being interfered with.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] a moment ago, pleading with the House to pass this bill over the President's veto—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Minnesota a moment ago was pleading with the House to pass this bill over the President's veto upon the ground that the President's demands had been complied with by a contract entered into by the officers of the company in the office of the Secretary of War. Now, the gentleman is pleading with the House to override the veto upon the ground that there was no right to make any such condition.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; not that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that one stands here pleading to pass it over the veto because conditions have been made and will be complied with, and the other on the ground of general denial of the right to make them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all. The gentleman does not comprehend the situation. I have not said anything about stipulations or agreements by which this bill becomes a law over the veto of the President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman has just denied that the Federal Government had the right to charge toll—

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, the gentleman's views and mine are entirely different on that question, and that we can agree on. But I say that this whole project, righteous and just as it is, falls to the ground unless this House this evening overrides the President's veto. No one will deny that who comprehends the situation. It is a part and parcel of the programme—

Mr. CLAYTON. And these people will lose a million dollars.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They will lose a million dollars, and we are going to accommodate them by the arrangements, stipulations, and so forth, referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] and let the future settle the balance. I am not trying to interfere with the arrangements they have made to save that company from bankruptcy.

I think the company did right, and they have the right now, in my opinion, to go there under the laws of our country and erect that dam, because it does not interfere with but improves navigation; but are they going to do it? No; they are going to get the consent of the Government, because capital is timid, and they will not go there and spend that amount of money—and I do not blame them—without getting the consent of the Government to the erection of the dam and works. That does not give the Government one iota of jurisdiction more than the Constitution gives it over navigable streams. We all know that consent can not give jurisdiction. To concede to the Federal Government the right to prescribe conditions simply is a part and parcel of the unquestioned authority of the Government to control navigation, because the Government is supreme in its authority to prevent any obstruction of the navigation of its navigable streams. The sovereignty of the respective States over the navigable streams is subject to the superior right of the Government to control navigation. This can not be construed to confer on the Federal Government the right to issue toll or make charges or claim suit for the use of water powers where navigation is not at all interfered with or obstructed.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUBBARD].

Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the questions which arise on this bill in the light of the President's veto are exceedingly serious and important. They are so serious and important that at this period of the session, in my judgment, this House ought not to undertake to deal with those questions. The five questions presented by the President are all rooted in the deeper question, What is the power of the United States with respect to the flowing waters of a navigable stream? That question can not well be determined upon the consideration of this bill, because it involves the question of fact pointed out by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], the question whether this stream is in fact navigable.

But there is a stronger reason, Mr. Speaker, why we should not insist upon determining now the more important question—the question of the power of the United States. This company has put nearly a million dollars into its enterprise. It went out into the wilderness and established there an enterprise to which have been attracted branch roads connecting with two great trunk lines of railroad. It has brought other capital, other industries, other enterprises into that region; and now, sir, the fact is that the company must come to absolute ruin unless it can be permitted to complete this work. That is the reason why I think this bill ought to be passed.

It is suggested that a new bill might be introduced; but, Mr. Speaker, that would not escape the difficulties which surround this one. We should be embarrassed by the same questions that are peculiar to this bill and that are entirely foreign to the great underlying question.

The condition of this company has appealed to our committee, to our subcommittee, to the representatives of the Executive Department, to everyone concerned in this matter. To permit this case to be dealt with upon its peculiar facts, which call for the passage of this bill, no matter what we may think about the general question of the power of the United States, everyone has been willing, so far as possible, to postpone the consideration and the determination of that important question until it can be taken up on its merits without affecting this particular enterprise.

There is still, Mr. Speaker, a word to be said in this country in favor of private enterprise. Where, under conditions prescribed by the laws heretofore in existence, a company has gone on in good faith and obtained not merely rights from the United States, but rights from the Dominion of Canada, all of which will become valueless if it can not be permitted to go on with this now, and where it has expended large amounts in the work, I respectfully submit that we ought not to pause in our favorable action in order to try to do now that which can be far better done in the future. No one in voting for this bill need yield any of his convictions on the general question of power. He can stand by them, as I expect to stand by mine, when the whole question shall be taken up afresh at the next session in connection with the amendment of the general law referred to by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], or with the consideration of any private bill which may be introduced in a case where no work has been done or money spent on the faith of former legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in the Federal or in any government giving away great public utilities, immensely valuable natural resources of power, to corporations without a limit of time and without a dollar of charge, but under the peculiar circumstances of this bill, the fact that it is an international stream, the fact that his company has gone on beforehand and spent this money, the fact that the expenditure was very largely the fault of the Congress of the United States because it had been lax in its use of the powers of the people and in preserving the rights of the people, I am willing to see the bill pass. But if I thought it could be pleaded by that company later on, or by the officers of that company, that the bill had passed because the Federal Government, in giving an easement, had no right to fix the limits and conditions of an easement in the interest of the people, then the President might desert his position forty times before I would desert it once.

If there be a good reason for passing this bill, it is the reason given by the gentleman from Minnesota, and that is that the company is going to comply with the agreement, to wit, a limitation to the life of the grant and a recognition of a right upon the part of either the State of Minnesota or the United States to charge for the power, and that this company shall hereafter be subject, not only to the provisions of the general law and the provisions of this agreement entered into, but be subject to such other general provisions concerning dams and rivers as Congress may hereafter enact. That is the only reason for passing it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You do not object to the veto made by the President of the Rainey River bill being overridden by a two-thirds vote of the House?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not; I am going to be one of the two-thirds in a minute to override it, but to override it upon the ground stated by me, that the general interest has been taken care of and not upon the ground taken in your speech that the General Government has no right to take care of the general interest. I am going to vote to override it on the ground that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] assures me, as well as the balance of the committee, including the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], that this company would be, without fault of its own, ruined, and that in order to comply with the general interest it has consented that the Secretary of War shall fix a limit and shall fix a rate of charge.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I am glad the President found a palliative to reconcile his feelings to the overriding of his veto by Congress in this case. [Applause.] I do not believe he meant any harm when he vetoed the bill. He has individually shown great consideration to me, and personally I feel very kindly toward him. I shall not quarrel with him about the validity of the grounds on which he finds he can stand and consent to the action of the House. But, Mr. Speaker, while all others may vote upon any ground they choose to override this veto, I shall vote to override it for the reason that he ought not to have vetoed the bill. The position he has taken is essentially unsound. The fundamental mistake he makes is that he gets lost in talking about a Federal grant and Federal charter, when the Federal Government has nothing to grant and issues no charters. The Federal Government has the right to regulate the navigation of streams, and there its authority over rivers ends. [Applause.]

Questions of private ownership, regulation locally, and taxation are reserved to the control of citizens and States. I do not care anything about the voluntary contract into which these people are alleged to have entered, nor will I discuss whether they may be held bound by it; but I give notice now that as a precedent or establishment of a doctrine or anything binding anybody else in the future, it is all popycock, not worth the paper it is written on nor the words used to state it. I shall vote to override this veto, because this act is extended in accordance with the general dam act on which I and my committee worked for eight years in order to devise a scheme to facilitate navigation by encouraging riparian owners to build dams to develop their own water power, in order to help the Government develop the navigation of streams which it was either unable or unwilling to expend money enough to improve. By encouraging the owners of shoals to put up the dams on their own property the Government would save the expense of building them, with incidental expense for overflow, and so forth. Then the Government simply puts in a lock and has slack-water navigation on all the streams in which dams are built. I do not want the plan spoiled by any such foolishness.

The general law provides for the protection and exercise of every legitimate right and interest the Federal Government as such has in the stream. If it buys, pays for, and at its own expense improves the property, then it manages the property as owner just like any other private citizen owner would do. But when a citizen is riparian owner and wishes to construct a dam he must, under the general law, comply with such conditions as the Government may prescribe, but it has no rightful power nor authority to present any conditions and requirements except such as affect the question of navigability of the stream. The plan presented in our general law will work wonders, both in utilizing water power and extending inland navigation if the Administration will study the spirit and intention of the law and the necessities which demanded and inspired its passage. Persistence in the President's erroneous notion would inflict a most disastrous blow and setback upon our country and the enterprise of our people.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. BEDE], who introduced the bill, and then I will ask for a vote.

Mr. BEDE. Mr. Speaker, I have stood by President Roosevelt on all of his issues, including the big Navy and the simple life. [Laughter.] I am standing by him here in asking you to pass this bill notwithstanding his veto, because he himself has withdrawn his objections to this measure. Some have not heard the speeches already made, and permit me to cover some of the same ground by saying that this company was first organized in 1898, then owning the riparian right on the Minnesota side of an international stream. They thought that railroads would soon get to that point and thought it was about time to develop the water power. There is a fall there of 24 feet. They got the right from Congress and then waited for railroads that did not come. They spent their time and much of their capital inducing railroads to get there, for they could not build the dam until they had railroads to bring in the material. Then they discovered the fact that they could develop only about a thousand horsepower on the American side alone and about an equal amount on the Canadian side alone, but by making one dam for the whole river they could develop 30,000 horsepower.

So they thought it a good proposition to get the riparian rights of the Canadian side also, and build one dam for the whole river. So they began work to secure the riparian rights on the Ontario or Canadian side, and went to the Dominion Parliament and to the Ontario provincial parliament to secure permits. In seven long years of effort they accomplished these things.

That brings us down to 1905. In the meantime their permit had been extended by Congress, and the very day after they secured their rights from the Canadian government their contractors, already engaged, began work, and worked steadily until last summer, when the contractors failed because of the panic which came upon the country.

Mr. BURLESON. A Republican panic.

Mr. BEDE. Well, we adopted one or two of your planks and ran the country into a panic. [Laughter.] The contractors failed, business was suspended, and the company felt that the dam could not be completed before their term expired in July next. They came here to procure an extension of their time. The bill was passed by the House and the Senate, went to the President, and he vetoed it on the ground that there should be a limit to their license or permit, and that the company should pay some revenue to the Federal Government for the use of the water power.

Now, there is some dispute among lawyers, just a little dispute, because I found most of the opinion on one side as to whether the Federal Government can or ought to tax the use of water power, it being almost universally held that it has only to do with navigation.

This dam, when completed, will be 30 feet high. It will back up the water in Rainy River, submerge the rapids above the falls, thereby improving local navigation for the floating of logs, pleasure boats, and tugs which ply there. It will make a great storage reservoir of Rainy Lake, steady the flow of the river, and thus prevent a low-water stage below the falls and improve the navigation there. It actually does the very thing that was asked of the Government in a recent river and harbor bill, but the War Department rejected the request for a survey.

Are you going to put a cloud upon the title of this company? If you do, it can not go on and build the dam, which will cost a total of $1,200,000, of which $750,000 is already in the river, and then spend five or six million dollars more in industrial plants to make the dam financially profitable.

After the President had vetoed the bill I went to him, and I think the reason he vetoed it was because he wanted me to go to him. [Laughter.] As they say down in Oklahoma, he "made me come across." I went there to see him; it seemed he wanted my society, and I have spent most of the last month at the White House [laughter], down at the Forestry Bureau [laughter], down at the Reclamation Bureau [laughter], in the Interior Department, in the Office of the Chief Engineer, with the Secretary of War and Judge-Advocate-General, and Acting Secretary, while the campaign is on. [Great laughter.] I have been pretty busy this last month trying to remove the objections to passing this bill over the President's veto, so that no man, Republican or Democrat, would feel when he goes back to his district that there would be any feeling that he has been opposing the wishes of the Executive of the nation. After the President had enjoyed my society for about a month he withdrew all objection to the passage of this bill. [Laughter.]

While I am not going so far as to say that I will stand by him in all things, I have, for my part, declared that I will stand by him whenever he determines in the interest of the conservation of natural resources to swap off the Philippines for Ireland and raise our own police. [Great laughter.] I do not know that I have covered every point [laughter], but unless there are questions that some one would like to ask me I shall be glad to stop at this point and ask for the passage of the bill. [Great laughter and applause and cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, in reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? As many as are in favor of the reconsideration and passage of the bill will, as their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "nay;" and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 240, nays 5, answered "present" 6, not voting 136, as follows:

H. J. Res. 176. Joint resolution providing for the printing of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle.

HEARINGS ON THE HEPBURN BILL.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed 1,500 extra copies of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary on the Hepburn amendment to the Sherman antitrust law, the original print having been exhausted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Maine if he can not get that printing done without the passage of any resolution?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; I can not.

Mr. FINLEY. Why not?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The committee are not authorized to have printing done where the cost will be in excess of $200, without special authority.

Mr. FINLEY. I am aware of that.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. This will cost $531.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that I think this matter ought to be printed, and I think the information ought to go to the country. I regard this as a mere perfunctory matter of routine, and I shall not object.

Mr. PAYNE. The House having the opinion of the gentleman from Mississippi, I hope business may now go on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand. Is there objection?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not understand that there is any.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—PHILIPPINE TARIFF.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Rules from the further consideration of House resolution No. 315, and to refer the resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Rules from the further consideration of the resolution, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, what is it? We have not heard it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is apparent that the tariff will be revised at the coming session of Congress; and

Whereas at said session it is declared that tariff legislation affecting tariff rates between the Government of the United States and the Philippine Islands will be proposed; and

Whereas under both contingencies it is necessary and wise that data should be secured for the information of the House; and

Whereas any legislation with reference to the tariff now existing between the Government of the United States and the Philippine Islands will necessarily affect our home industries of beet and cane sugars, rice, tobacco, etc.; and

Whereas, under reports made by the War Department, there appears to be a necessity for legislation to encourage those industries in the Philippine Islands: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of five Members of this House be appointed by the Speaker, whose duty it shall be to proceed to the Philippine Islands and investigate the condition of these industries, and, if in the discretion of said committee it be deemed necessary, to investigate the policy of Japan toward the encouragement of the production of cane sugar in Formosa and beet sugar in Korea, and report to this House at its next session the condition of these industries in the Philippine Islands; and to recommend at the next session of the House a plan for improving the condition of said industries in the Philippine Islands; the expenses and the necessary clerical and expert help to be paid out of the contingent expense fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. The request is to discharge the Committee on Rules and to refer the resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A mere change of reference—I have no objection to that.

There was no objection.

PORTO RICO PROVISIONAL REGIMENT.

Mr. LARRINAGA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 18618) fixing the status of the Porto Rican Provisional Regiment of Infantry, with Senate amendments, and to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken from the Speaker's table and the Senate amendments concurred in.

Mr. LARRINAGA. Then I make that request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to:

Mr. SLEMP, for three days, on account of important business.

Mr. TOWNSEND, for remainder of session, on account of serious illness in family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to:

Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia, to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Enoch S. Blackwell, Fiftieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do take a recess until Monday next at 11 o'clock a. m.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 25, 1908.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. ULYSSES G. B. PIERCE, of the city of Washington.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. KEAN. No, Mr. President; let the Journal be read.

Mr. HALE. I must object, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the Journal will be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (at 11 o'clock and 14 minutes a. m.). The Senate has now been entertained for some time by hearing the Journal read, and I ask that the further reading be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. KEAN. Let the Journal be read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (at 11 o'clock and 26 minutes a. m.). The Secretary has now spent nearly half an hour reading the Journal. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading be dispensed with.

Mr. KEAN. I am sorry the Senator from Indiana was not listening to what the Secretary was reading, because he was reading at that time a most important report, that of the committee of conference on the omnibus public buildings bill. It is eminently proper that those reports should be read and we should know that they are accurately stated in the Journal. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The Secretary will resume the reading.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator from New Jersey—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (at 11 o'clock and 31 minutes a. m.). Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from New Jersey has not for some time been following the Journal and the rest of the Senate are engaged in something else, I again ask that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. CULLOM. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois objects.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator from Indiana may speak for himself. The Senator from New Jersey has been listening to the reading of the Journal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the Journal.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (at 12 o'clock meridian). Mr. President, the Secretary has now been reading the Journal for one hour. It is apparent that not many Senators are paying any attention to it. Except on Saturday last it has not been read in full during the present session. It never is read in full. Reading it in full now only consumes precious time and prevents the consideration of extremely important measures before the Senate. I ask that its further reading be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. KEAN. I trust the Senator from Indiana has been listening attentively to the Journal and that we may continue to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the Journal.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (at 12 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.). Inasmuch as there is seriously important legislation pending—I refer to the bill to compensate Government employees for injuries sustained—I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. KEAN. The Secretary is now reading the message of the President of the United States. Let the reading be proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The reading will continue.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the Journal.

Mr. NEWLANDS (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.). The Secretary has concluded the reading of the President's message in regard to the development of waterways. I think a bill that would promote that object should be passed now—

Mr. GALLINGER. The reading of the Journal can not be interfered with except by unanimous consent.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Rather than that, the reading of the Journal should be continued.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. NEWLANDS. So I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 7112) for the appointment of an Inland Waterways Commission with the view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States.

Mr. KEAN. That can not be done except by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent, under the rule, to dispense with the reading of the Journal. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the Journal.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I move that the Journal be approved.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to make an inquiry. As the clerk read the Journal it should be corrected. Whether it was an inadvertence in reading or otherwise, I do not know.

I refer to the entry where at the evening session Senate bill 4062 was called up. It was upon the question of proceeding to the consideration of that bill which proposes to amend section 5481 of the Revised Statutes. As read from the Journal it was 4481. It was after the approval of the Military Academy conference report and after preliminary discussion of the Territorial bill.

Mr. KEAN. It is the bill for the punishment of extortion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; the bill for the punishment of extortion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The entry in the Journal will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

On motion by Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, the Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill (S. 4062) to amend section 4481 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think it should be to amend section 5481.

Mr. KEAN. It is 5481 in the Record.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Journal will be corrected.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I move that the Journal as corrected be approved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on approving the Journal as corrected.

The Journal as corrected was approved.

Mr. DEPEW. I wish to give notice that immediately after the conclusion of the morning business I shall call up the bill (H. R. 21844) granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is morning business first in order before any motion?

BOARD OF VISITORS TO WEST POINT.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I was honored by the President of the Senate by being appointed a member of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy. I find that my engagements in Kentucky will prevent me from discharging the duties, and I ask to be excused from serving as a member of the Board of Visitors.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 10 of the proposed amendment, after the word "Oklahoma," strike out the balance of the paragraph ending with the word "respectively;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the proposed amendment, after the words "containing ten acres, more or less," add the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue patents in fee to 'The Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions,' organized under an act of the assembly of Maryland entitled 'An act to incorporate the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions,' approved April 6, 1894, for the lands set apart to the Catholic Church on the White Earth and Red Lake Indian reservations, in the State of Minnesota, as follows:

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change the number of the section from 28 to 27 and in line 16 of the proposed amendment, after the word "deceased," insert the following:

MOSES E. CLAPP,
CHARLES CURTIS,
T. H. PAYNTER,

J. S. SHERMAN,
C. L. KNAPP,
JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to explain the changes which have been made by the conference committee.

Mr. CLAPP. Among the amendments some of the important are, first, the amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to Minnesota about twelve hundred acres of land for the purpose of creating a forest reserve. The other amendment is to convey to the Episcopal diocese of Duluth and the Catholic Board of Missions certain sites which they had been using in the Indian reservations in that State. The amendment is to grant this authority so far as the authority of the Department is concerned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit the report of the conferees on the bill (H. R. 21260) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the amendments that have been acted upon by the conference read. It is not material to me whether they are read in the first instance or in the second instance. It is a very important bill, and it is impossible for anyone to know what has been done unless the amendments are read.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection, of course, to the amendments being read, and if they are to be read they may as well be read now as afterwards.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Although I think it might be better to have the report read.

Mr. ALDRICH. The report might be read and then the amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. Or the amendments may be read as they are reached in the report.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does not the report state the amendments?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not except by number, and we can not tell in that way what is the effect of the amendments.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No doubt the Senator from Iowa can explain it more quickly than to have the amendments read.

Mr. ALLISON. If the amendments are to be read, and the report is read, I think the amendments had better be read at the moment, and I think the Senator from Rhode Island will not ask that all the amendments be read. As an illustration of what I mean, the first amendment is amendment No. 9, wherein the Senate recedes. That is an amendment which provided for the purchase of a large tract of land on the southeast corner of Fifteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue. The Senate conferees receded from the amendment, because the whole matter is embraced in another bill which is now pending in the House of Representatives. I think it would hardly be necessary to have that amendment read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am interested in several amendments made in the Senate to the bill. I understand that they have all been given up by the conference committee. I shall not be able to know anything about the result of the conference unless I hear the amendments read, and I ask that all the amendments may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I submit that the best way to facilitate the consideration of the report is to have the amendments read as the Secretary proceeds.

Mr. ALDRICH. That course will be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. ALLISON. That is, for example, that the Senate recedes from amendment No. 9, on page 11, which is as follows.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, which is as follows. I desire to facilitate the consideration of the report as much as possible.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether he wants to have the amendments read that were agreed to by the conferees?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside. Of course I should like to have a vote on it, but I do not want to interfere with the conference report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from New Jersey is that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Secretary will proceed to read the report, and the amendments indicated in the report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21260) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 13, 14, 15, 26, 36, 82, 84, 148, 160.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be read.

The Secretary read amendment No. 9, as follows:

9. Land for buildings for the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the whole of squares Nos. 226, 227, 228, 229, and 230, in the city of Washington, and toward the erection of one or two buildings thereon, $3,000,000. That part of C street, Ohio avenue, D street, and E street lying between the squares named herein is hereby made a part of the site authorized by this provision. That should the Secretary of the Treasury decide to institute condemnation proceedings in order to secure any or all of the land herein authorized to be acquired, such proceedings shall be in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, providing a site for the enlargement of the Government Printing Office (United States Statutes at Large, vol. 26, chap. 837).

That a commission, to be composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney-General, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, which is hereby created, shall report to Congress preliminary plans and an estimate of cost for one or two buildings to be erected on said site for the use of the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor, and for other governmental purposes, said preliminary plans and estimates of cost to be paid for out of the appropriation herein made.

The Secretary read amendment No. 13, as follows:

13. For the construction of one steam revenue cutter of the first class, for duty on the coast of Oregon, $250,000.

The Secretary read amendment No. 14, as follows:

14. For the construction and equipping of a steam revenue cutter, for service in Narragansett Bay and adjacent waters, with headquarters at Newport, R. I., to take the place of the revenue cutter Dexter, $225,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the steamer Dexter, that is now on duty at the collection port of Newport, was built in 1874. It is practically unseaworthy. The Senate has passed bills for the construction of a new revenue cutter for that service on three several occasions. Those bills have never been acted upon in the House of Representatives. If I could properly designate or characterize the action of the House in regard to matters of this kind, I should be glad to do so.

They apparently pay no attention whatever to bills which are sent there from here, and they insist that a rule should be adopted that no appropriation shall be made except for objects of public service that have been agreed to by both Houses. They send bills to the Senate and they are favorably acted upon. They secure appropriations for the purpose for which they desire appropriations, and Members of the Senate, unless they happen to be upon the Committee on Appropriations—and I do not know that that makes any particular difference—are absolutely powerless to secure appropriations for the public service that are absolutely necessary.

The case in point is only one of numberless cases where the Senate finds itself without any means whatever of providing appropriations for necessary public service. I do not find fault with the Committee on Appropriations for not insisting upon this amendment, but I do say that we are fast arriving at a condition which is absolutely intolerable, so far as this body is concerned. There is a similar case on the Pacific coast and another at the port of New York, where it is absolutely necessary that something shall be done, but we find ourselves obliged to either stop the appropriations for the Government or permit another branch of Congress to prevent any appropriations that are desired by the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator propose to resist the report?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; I shall not resist the report, but I make this statement so that there may be an understanding about the matter.

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that this same thing, in principle, has happened repeatedly during my service here, and it is always passed by in this way. Why is not this as good a time as any to assert the right that we certainly have? If the good of the public service be involved, as the Senator states it is, I think it is our duty to stand to that which we believe ought to be embodied in the bill. I do not like to hear the Senator say this is not the right kind of treatment for the Senate to receive about a matter of this nature, but we will acquiesce in it. That only invites a repetition of it. Therefore I hope the Senator will change his mind about it, and we will insist upon it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. Merely for a question. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa if this item has been left out of appropriation bills heretofore?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not sure.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not sure about that; but the Senate on three occasions have passed a bill providing for a new revenue cutter at this point, and the House itself has reported the bills favorably, but they have never been acted on, and we are absolutely powerless to provide a remedy.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand the Senator does not intend to resist the report.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know whether I do or not. There is great force in the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio, and this may be a good time to follow the course he suggests. The House does not seem to be inclined to adjourn, and I do not know that we can take up the time of Congress better than by asserting on the part of the Senate, so far as we can, a certain spirit of independence, if the rights of the Senate are to be considered.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, these appropriation bills, like every other bill that becomes a law, must necessarily pass both Houses. The difference between the appropriation bills, particularly this one, and many other bills, is that the appropriation bill is composed of a great many items. The Senate Committee on Appropriations, I think, have fairly made an endeavor to do what they thought ought to be done as respects a revenue cutter for Narragansett Bay. The committee itself made an examination of this question and inserted the item in the bill and reported favorably upon it to the Senate. We inserted a provision in the bill for four new revenue cutters because we believed, at least the committee believed, that they are all necessary to the commerce of the country. I believe personally that the four that we have surrendered are necessary and that their construction ought to be entered upon.

The House of Representatives, however, presented to us the point that there was no law authorizing their construction, that the House of Representatives had never passed upon this question, and therefore that they were not prepared to agree to the construction of these several revenue cutters.

Mr. ALDRICH. Can the Senator state how many items of appropriation are contained in the bill upon which the two Houses have not acted? There must be hundreds of items in the bill, and in every bill of this character there are new items, inserted without any provision of law governing their insertion.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I do not think there are any items in this bill or in any bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations that are not already covered by a previous statute authorizing the expenditure. Of course I know there are a few in this bill, but there are not a great number, and there never are a great number in the bills which are reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. President, one word more as respects these particular items. When we were confronted in the first conference by the House conferees we were told that they could not agree to these provisions. We endeavored in our way to try to show the House conferees that we thought these revenue cutters were necessary to the commerce of the localities for which they were proposed. The House conferees, however, said to us that we were not very well advised respecting the matter; that there were already in course of construction seven revenue cutters which could be sent to these various places and thus relieve the situation. The response made by us was that the revenue cutters in the course of construction were for the particular harbors indicated in the statute providing for their construction—as, for example, one at San Francisco, one at Savannah, Ga., another at New Orleans—and that it would not be within the power—

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from Iowa is now speaking of the revenue cutters?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. There is none in the bill for San Francisco, as I remember.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that, but that was the argument of the conferees on the part of the other House; and I have a right here to speak of the reasons which were given by the House through their conferees as to why they would not agree to these items. Therefore it was insisted upon by the conferees of the other House that we could draw the revenue cutter from San Francisco that is now in process of construction, and if it was greatly needed, it could be transferred to and used at Portland, Oreg.; that we could draw the revenue cutter from Savannah, Ga., if it was greatly needed in New York Harbor or at Narragansett Bay, and it could be used at either of those places. Our answer to that contention was that these revenue cutters were provided for by law for particular localities as respects their use, and that they could not be thus scattered about by a mere revenue officer.

But, Mr. President, notwithstanding these arguments and suggestions, the committee of conference on the part of the House refused to agree to the items embracing these revenue cutters. We asked them to submit the question again to the House of Representatives, and thus all these revenue cutters were put in disagreement by the conferees on the part of the Senate. We therefore supposed that we were fairly discharging our duty when we insisted that this matter should be again submitted to the House of Representatives. The several items were disagreed to on that ground, and were again submitted to the House.

This conference report embraces some thirty-nine or forty different amendments on one side or the other, many of them important amendments, and all of the provisions for revenue cutters are important amendments. This report now embraces every item that was carried into disagreement by the last conference, and this is the final report on the question.

I wish to say to the Senate that I believe your conferees have exerted whatever influence and power they had to persuade the conferees on the part of the House that these items were necessary. Some of them were surrendered, others were modified, and others were agreed to.

That is the situation of this report. I make this general statement because it applies to practically all the different amendments in controversy.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not doubt that the Senate conferees have done everything in their power up to date. Whether it is advisable to ask them to continue longer in their efforts I am not prepared to say, for I realize that they have had much wider experience in this body than I; but I would be glad, if it were the temper of the Senate, that at least as to some of these items—I only speak of those with which I am personally acquainted—the conferees might be requested—I understand we can not instruct them—to decline to agree to the report.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] speaks of the importance of having constructed an additional revenue cutter on the coast which he immediately represents. He of course can speak for that locality. I can testify to the very great importance of having retained in this bill the appropriation which the Senate inserted of $250,000 for the construction of a revenue cutter for the coast of Oregon. That item was inserted on an amendment offered by me, which read, I think, originally that the cutter should be for the Columbia River. It was designed for the Columbia River, and would of course have been assigned to that river.

It is very well for gentlemen to say that there are revenue cutters elsewhere that may be assigned to this or that port, but I have been endeavoring for two years, Mr. President, to get a revenue cutter assigned to the Columbia River, one of the greatest rivers of the continent and on which is situated one of the three great ports on the Pacific coast, having a commerce of millions and millions of dollars annually. The greatest shipping port in the world for wheat and flour, the greatest shipping port in the world for lumber—as an export point, I mean—is without a revenue cutter. I do not think there is another first-class port which is thus circumstanced and situated.

Over a year ago I went to the Treasury Department and requested it to assign one of the revenue cutters that are now elsewhere on the Pacific coast to the Columbia River. They said they could not spare it. I went there twice before I offered the amendment to the sundry civil bill providing for this revenue cutter, indeed before I introduced the bill, which I should have before said the Senate passed, providing for the construction of that revenue cutter, which bill was sent to the other House. Before all this I went to the Treasury Department and requested that a revenue cutter be assigned to the Columbia River. The officials there admitted the vital importance of it, and yet they asserted that they were without a cutter for that purpose which was suitable for that place and stated that the only thing to be done was to get authority from Congress to construct a revenue cutter. I then introduced a bill, which was referred to and reported by the Commerce Committee. It passed the Senate unanimously, went to the other House, was reported by the committee there favorably back to the House, and there it rests.

There is no item in this bill, Mr. President, of more importance than the item providing for the construction of this revenue cutter for the Columbia River. I wish that the conferees might again take this matter under consideration in view of the vital importance of it to a great section, to a great port, and insist further on the allowance of that item. Aside from the mere current expenses of the Government, I say again there is no item carried in this bill that is more vitally important than that item.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am very familiar with the provision for the revenue cutter the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is interested in, that matter having been before the Committee on Commerce several times, a favorable report having been made on the bill, and it having passed the Senate; but I want to call attention to another phase of this discussion.

The Senator from Rhode Island calls attention to the fact that appropriations are being resisted in another place, which, in his opinion, ought to be allowed. I want to speak of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which passed the Senate with amendments aggregating about $2,000,000. In the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, those appropriations should have been made. They were resisted very vigorously, and the result was that $1,500,000, or thereabouts, was stricken from the bill. I will say frankly that had I not supposed that Congress would adjourn last Saturday, some of those provisions probably would have been retained in the bill; or, at any rate, we should have been in conference now on some of them. After the conference report had passed the Senate and was taken up in another body and agreed to there, a member of the conference committee on the part of that body made a speech calling attention to the extravagance of the Senate, and, among other things, Mr. President, he used these words:

I say that we should take steps, if not at this session, then at the next, to clearly and firmly indicate to the other body that they can not increase these money bills as they have done in the past. I believe that a careful perusal of the history of the making of our Constitution will bear me out in the statement that it was intended by its framers that when the Senate proposed amendments to an appropriation bill, if same were rejected by the House, it was the duty of the Senate to promptly recede.

Mr. President, if this is to be the rule, it is very manifest that not only will revenue cutters hereafter be stricken from appropriation bills, but that every amendment of the Senate that does not commend itself to another body will go out of these appropriation bills. I take it, Mr. President, that the Senate will never agree to that proposition; I take it that the Senate will insist that, under the Constitution, it has the right to amend appropriation bills to any extent it sees fit to do; that those matters become proper subjects of free and full conference between the two Houses, and that the Senate has the same right to insist upon its amendments as the other body has to resist them.

I mention this matter, Mr. President, simply to emphasize the fact that the Senator from Rhode Island, who says that it is time that an issue should be framed, will find in the words I have read an added reason why, in my opinion, it is important, or will be important in the near future, to raise precisely an issue of that kind.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, in regard to the revenue cutter for New York, the Senate adopted an amendment to this bill appropriating $80,000 for the construction of such a revenue cutter. I presented that amendment at the request of the Bureau of Navigation and of the officer having charge of the Revenue-Cutter Service. The reason is that the revenue cutter stationed there performs a special duty in the most crowded harbor there is in the United States. Its business is to so locate vessels that they shall not interfere with each other and shall not be obstructive of navigation. The revenue cutter there now has been there for so many years performing that service, that I am informed by the Department it is practically useless, and that, if it can be used at all, it can only be used with great danger to the engineer, to the crew, and to the officers.

The item is not for a new revenue cutter for a new service, but it is to replace a revenue cutter which as I regard it, from an undue spirit of economy, has been in the Service until its usefulness is gone, and it is dangerous to those who are operating it.

Hon. J. B. Reynolds, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, when asked the opinion of the Department, reported to the Committee on Commerce in regard to the matter. When I introduced the amendment it went to the Committee on Commerce and that committee, following its usual rule, before it would report the amendment and ask that it be put upon the sundry civil bill, asked the Department for its opinion. After Mr. Reynolds's letter was received, the amendment was unanimously reported by the Committee on Commerce to the Senate. The letter of Mr. Reynolds is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 27, 1908.

SIR: I am in receipt of a letter dated January 24, 1908, from the Committee on Commerce, transmitting a bill (S. 4380) "for the construction of a steam vessel for the Revenue-Cutter Service for anchorage duty at the port of New York," and requesting that the committee be furnished with such suggestions as may be deemed proper touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

In reply I have to state as follows:
A new vessel to perform anchorage duty at the port of New York is urgently needed. The small steamer Manhattan, which is now detailed on this anchorage work, is in poor condition and is not worth rebuilding or many repairs. She is 34 years old, having been built in 1873, has been in constant service and is now obsolete and nearly worn out. The machinery of the Manhattan is of an antiquated and uneconomical type and requires frequent and expensive repairs. The boiler is the fifth that has been installed since the vessel was built and is liable to give out at any time. The Manhattan is engaged in important duty in supervising the anchorage system of New York Harbor, which includes the North and East rivers and Kill van Kull, and I recommend that she be replaced by a modern vessel as provided in the bill.

Respectfully,

J. B. REYNOLDS,
Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I trust that the Senate will request that the conferees on the part of the Senate insist on these amendments, and that they insist upon a further conference, especially on this amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, these questions were considered by the committee in the first instance. The items were recommended by the Department, and we put them in the bill for the reason, perhaps, given by the Senator from New York.

The true rule in the consideration of appropriation bills is to put in only such matters as are provided for by law; to make appropriations recommended to Congress to carry out existing law. The custom has grown up, however, of putting in a good many items that do not properly belong to such bills. In the other body, of course, the question of order is raised upon such matters, and if they have not been provided for by law, they promptly go out. We do not quite do that. We sometimes put such items in. The House has that rule. They will not put in an appropriation bill matters that have not been provided for by law. That places the Senate, when it puts items in an appropriation not provided for by law, at a great disadvantage, and practically under control of the House.

Neither body, Mr. President, can say arbitrarily when they put in a provision that it must be adhered to. If you did that, you would have no conference whatever. It would be certainly out of order for the Senate to say, "We put this item in the bill on information that is sufficient to us, and we do not intend to let it go out." The House conferees would be justified by the rules that govern conferences of this kind to say immediately, "We will retire."

Mr. President, we sent these very questions to the House, twice at least, for their action. The House conferees declined to yield to the Senate and took it back to the House. The House sustained their conferees, and then the conferees, of course, made the point on us that we were making exceedingly large appropriations this year, and undoubtedly the appropriations for this session of Congress will greatly exceed the revenues, to the extent, perhaps, of $150,000,000 or $160,000,000. There was great force in that, and we heard from nobody, Mr. President, that these revenue cutters were absolutely necessary.

They have gotten along without them for some time, and they can get along without them for the future.

I was myself anxious particularly to secure for the Western coast the revenue cutter about which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] has spoken, and I would have favored some other things of the same character for the Western coast, but these items were not in pursuance of any statute. There was really no reason for us to say to the House conferees that they must yield, and, after a suitable time, of course we had to yield.

Mr. President, if we return this bill to the House, I do not believe there will be any advantage gained by the Senate. The House will stand for what they have stood for; and if we are to adjourn in the course of a few days this conference report ought to be accepted. The committee did the best they could, and I think, under the circumstances, they did pretty well. So I hope the conference report will be accepted.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I am not intending in any respect to reflect upon the Committee on Appropriations for their action, but I desire in the most emphatic way I can to call the attention of the Senate and of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives to the manner in which Senate amendments to appropriation bills are treated. I have before me a list of the subjects in disagreement between the two Houses upon this bill, which are included in this report, and I find that most of those items are not items provided for by existing law. They were put in the bill contrary to the very rule which the House of Representatives are asserting governed their conduct in the case of the revenue cutters. I desire to read it, so that the Senate will understand what frequent occasions there are for a departure from that rule whenever such action suits the House of Representatives or somebody else in authority.

The first amendment in disagreement is the one in regard to land for buildings for the Departments of State and Commerce and Labor, for which there is no provision of law. The next three items are for revenue cutters, for which there is no provision of law. The next item is for a wharf and storehouse in Neah Bay, Wash., for which there is no provision of law. The next is for a custodian for the public building at St. Paul, Minn., for which there is no provision of law. The next relates to some provision forbidding the payment of details from the secret-service division.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator is now reading amendments—

Mr. ALDRICH. I am reading the items in disagreement upon this very bill.

Mr. TELLER. Put in by the Senate?

Mr. ALDRICH. They were all put in by the Senate, and they were all of them matters which were not covered by existing law, and yet a good many of them have been agreed to by the House of Representatives, contrary to what is here said to be their established rule.

The next item is for anchorage buoys in the port of New York, for which there is no provision of law. The next item is for a tender for light-house depot at San Francisco, for which there is no provision of law. The next is for a light vessel for St. Johns River bar, Florida, for which there is no provision of law. The next is for a survey of Fort Keogh, Mont., for which there is no provision of law. The next is for the establishment of a boundary line between Idaho and Washington, for which there is no provision of law. The next is an item in regard to education in Alaska, for which there is no provision of law. Then a provision for reindeer in Alaska, for which there is no provision of law. Then an item for a survey of Galveston Harbor, for which there is no provision of law. Then for strengthening the levees along the west bank of the Mississippi River between Flint Creek and Iowa River, for which there is no provision of law. Then for erecting new military barracks and quarters, for which there is no provision of law. Then for fixing the salary of the United States attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, for which there is no provision of law. Then follow international investigation of the opium evil, for which there is no provision of law; international commission at Rio de Janeiro, for which there is no provision of law; purchase of two steamships of American registry for use of the Isthmian Canal Commission, for which there is no provision of law; requiring the National Academy of Sciences to make report on scientific surveys, for which there is no provision of law; Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, for which there is no provision of law, and international exposition at Albuquerque, N. Mex., for which there is no provision of law.

I call attention to these facts, not to find fault with the Committee on Appropriations, but to show that the rule to which attention has been called here is not a rule that either the Senate or the House follows, though they try to follow it as well as they can, perhaps, and they may be doing the best they can.

I do not intend to ask the Senate to disagree to this conference report, but I desire to call the attention of the Committees on Appropriations of both Houses to the fact that the treatment of the Senate in these matters is not fair and, in my judgment, it will not continue when it is called to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I did not assert, and no one who has had experience will assert, that the appropriation bills are entirely made up of items to carry out existing law, although that is the theory upon which we originally started. The House of Representatives, to some extent, has maintained that theory, because they have a provision in their rules that will enable any Member to object and raise a point of order on an amendment and have it stricken out. We have never had that rule, Mr. President. We have never claimed it. And a great part of the legislation which we have enacted in these late years has come from the fact that we did not have such a rule and did not attempt to enforce such a rule. We have within the last ten years put some of the most important provisions of law as amendments to this very bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Perhaps I ought to complete my statement by saying that the House of Representatives receded from their disagreement to this class of amendments in fourteen cases out of twenty.

Mr. TELLER. In this bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. In this report which is now under consideration, showing that the rule they have adopted applies only in certain cases.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Rhode Island may complain of that, but no member of the committee will complain of it. We were very glad to get them to recede on some of these items. For myself, I was exceedingly sorry they would not recede on these revenue cutters, and we all did the best we could to secure it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am only finding fault because the House did not recede from their disagreement to the amendments to which I have referred and that they have established a rule to exclude those amendments which they have not followed in any other case.

Mr. TELLER. There never has been an inflexible rule, but they have asserted that that was the rule, and they occasionally graciously allowed us to violate that rule.

I believe, perhaps, it would be better for the country if the rule was established and complied with in both bodies against putting in what amounts to legislation. We put in the Yukon-Alaskan provision at the very earnest request of our Western friends, who wanted it in. There was some reason why they could not get a separate bill through the House. We followed the rule which has been adopted in such cases—to put it in. That is the way we have legislated for these expositions ever since 1877, since I have been acquainted with affairs here.

I do not think there is so much complaint to be made of the House as the Senator from Rhode Island does. They did give way on a majority of the amendments we reported. I think they ought to have given way on a few more, but if they had I suppose there would have been complaints from the sponsors of the others that were not kept in.

There is some considerable force in what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the House, who was chairman of the House conferees, said when he complained that we were making this a tremendously extravagant bill; that we were adding things not absolutely necessary. Do Senators realize that at this session of Congress we are going to have a bill which will be as great as a few years ago an entire Congress appropriated—and it pretty nearly overturned the political parties of this country when you had a billion-dollar Congress. This time, if we do as much next session as we have done at this, we will have a $2,000,000,000 Congress, and you are going to have mighty little to show for it when you get through. That is the fact.

Something ought to be said about the extravagance of Congress in both Houses; for that matter. If we go on at the rate at which we are going on, it will not be long before we will be selling bonds to meet the ordinary current expenses of the Government; and I am pretty sure the people will never consent to that. I remember that when we had a Democratic administration there was great excitement when a couple hundred million dollars of bonds were sold. Mr. President, when we began this Congress we had $250,000,000 in the Treasury in surplus money. When we get through we will have very little, if any, in the Treasury; not more than will be necessary to carry on the daily business of the Government.

Of course, the House of Representatives is charged with a duty in respect to the revenue with which this body is not charged. Revenue legislation must originate there, and after all there is an obligation upon the House to see that there is a proper revenue in the country which does not lie with us.

I think myself we got out of these amendments pretty well. While I should like to have seen the revenue cutter at Narragansett Bay retained, because it struck me as being needed, and while I should like to have seen the revenue cutter on the Pacific coast and Oregon retained, at the same time we could not say to the House conferees that we would not make a final report unless the House men agreed to those items. I repeat, you must have a system that enables the conferees to surrender some things. If you do not, you will cease having conference committees at all. I do not believe our conferees surrendered anything they ought to have stood for, and I can not say, after all, that the House conferees demanded that we should surrender anything that they did not have good reason to say we should surrender.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the amendments.

The Secretary read amendment No. 15, which was to insert the following:

For the construction of one steam revenue cutter for anchorage patrol duty in the harbor of New York, $80,000.

The Secretary read amendment No. 26, which was to strike out the following:

No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used in payment of compensation or expenses of any person detailed or transferred from the secret-service division of the Treasury Department or who may at any time, during the fiscal year 1909, have been employed by or under said secret-service division.

The Secretary read amendment No. 36, which was to insert: Tender, San Francisco, Cal.: For tender for the use of the inspector of the twelfth light-house depot, San Francisco, Cal., $215,000.

The Secretary read amendment No. 82, which was, on page 96, line 1, to strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to read: For geological surveys in the various portions of the United States, $300,000, to be immediately available.

The Secretary read amendment No. 84, which was, on page 98, line 8, to strike out "three" and insert "four," so as to read: In all, for the United States Geological Survey, $1,435,520.

The Secretary read amendment No. 148, which was to insert: (148) International commission at Rio de Janeiro: For the payment of compensation and necessary expenses of a commissioner to represent the United States in the international commission, which, in pursuance of the convention signed at the Third International Conference of American States, on August 23, 1906, approved by the Senate on February 3, 1908, and ratified by the President on February 8, 1908, is to meet at the city of Rio de Janeiro in July, 1908, for the purpose of preparing draft codes of private and public international law regulating the relations between the nations of America: and for the payment of the quota of the United States of the expenses incident to the preparation of the drafts, including the compensation of the experts provided for in Article IV of the said convention, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available.

The Secretary read amendment No. 160, which was to strike out:

(160) SEC. 8. The National Academy of Sciences is required, at their next meeting, to take into consideration the methods and expenses of conducting all surveys of a scientific character, and all chemical, testing, and experimental laboratories and to report to Congress as soon thereafter as may be practicable a plan for consolidating such surveys, chemical, testing, and experimental laboratories so as to effectually prevent duplication of work and reduce expenditures without detriment to the public service.

It is the judgment of Congress that any person who holds employment under the United States or who is employed by and receives a regular salary from any scientific bureau or institution that is required to report to Congress should refrain from participation in the deliberations of said National Academy of Sciences on this subject and from voting on or joining in any recommendation hereunder.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will not insist upon something being done which has never been done before in the history of the Senate, certainly not within the memory of the veteran chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. ALLISON]—the reading of the amendments upon a conference report. A great deal of time has been spent upon it.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will permit me, the reading will be finished in a moment.

The Secretary resumed the reading, when,

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the last sentence be read again.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course, as a matter of history, it is rather important, I suppose, to have this information. But all that has been eliminated.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is all out?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is all right.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate recedes.

I want to submit a request to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. How many more amendments are there?

Mr. ALLISON. A good many more. If there is any particular amendment the Senator from Rhode Island thinks ought to be considered at length or at large or about which he wishes information, I shall be glad to give it. I hope he will allow the report proper to be read.

Mr. ALDRICH. The purpose I had in view has been accomplished. I will not ask for the further reading of the amendments, if the Senator from Iowa desires.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall be much obliged to the Senator if he will refrain from asking for the further reading. If there is any special amendment about which he desires information or as to which he wishes to ascertain the phraseology as finally agreed to, of course it can be read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw the request.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the conference report, as follows:

And the Senate agree to the same.

Employees of the board not otherwise employed by the Government shall be entitled to such compensation as the board may determine, and such employees may be selected and appointed by said board. The disbursing officer shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine for the faithful performance of his duties, said bond to be approved by said Secretary. Said buildings shall be erected from plans prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to contract for said buildings in the same manner and under the same regulations as for other public buildings of the United States, but the contract for said buildings, including the preparation of ground therefor and the approaches thereto and the interior and exterior decorative wiring and lighting thereof shall not exceed the sum of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to dispose of said buildings, or the materials composing the same, at the close of the exposition, giving preference to the State of Washington or to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition corporation or to the city of Seattle to purchase the same at an appraised value to be ascertained in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine.

"Sec. 16. That dies for medals bearing appropriate devices, emblems, and inscriptions commemorative of said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition and of the awards to be made to the exhibitors thereat shall be prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury at some mint of the United States for the board of trustees of Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, a corporation, subject to the provisions of the fifty-second section of the coinage act of eighteen hundred and seventy-three, and upon the payment by said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition of a sum not less than the cost thereof; said medals shall be coined by the coining press located in and being part of the Government exhibit, and without cost to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition: Provided, That said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition shall furnish free of charge the electric power necessary to operate said coining press, and all provisions of law against the counterfeiting or imitating of coins of the United States shall apply to the medals issued under this act. Said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition shall furnish without cost to the United States all materials used by the printing and engraving presses exhibited by the Government at said exposition in the production of the usual souvenirs of appropriate design, and said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition is hereby authorized, through any agent, employee, privilege holder, or concessionaire appointed by its proper officer, to vend and sell at or near the place of manufacture any medal, print, or engraving authorized under the provisions of this act: Provided, That the vending and selling of all such medals, prints, and engravings shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

That the United States shall not be liable on account of said exposition for any expenses incident to or growing out of the same, except for the construction of the building or buildings hereinbefore authorized and for the purpose of paying the expense incident to the selection, preparation, purchase, installation, transportation, care, custody, and safe return of the exhibits made by the Government and for the employment of proper persons as officers and assistants by the Government board created by this act, and for other expenses, and for the maintenance of said building or buildings and other contingent expenses to be approved by the chairman of the Government board, or, in the event of his absence or disability, by such officer as the board may designate, and the Secretary of the Treasury, upon itemized accounts and vouchers: Provided, That no liability against the Government shall be incurred and no expenditure of money appropriated by this act shall be made until the president of said exposition shall have furnished to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury proof that there has been obtained for the purpose of completing and opening said exposition bona fide subscriptions to the stock of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition (a corporation), by responsible parties, contributions, donations, and appropriations, from all sources, aggregating a sum not less than one million dollars: Provided, That no appropriation made by any State or Territory and no appropriation herein made shall be considered as any part of said million dollars.

"Sec. 18. That the United States shall not in any manner or under any circumstances be liable for any of the acts, doings, or representations of said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition (a corporation), its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or for service, salaries, labor, or wages of said officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or for any subscriptions to the capital stock, or for any stock certificates, bonds, mortgages, or obligations of any kind issued by said corporation, or for any debts, liabilities, or expenses, of any kind or nature whatever, attending such exposition corporation, or accruing by reason of the same.

"Sec. 19. That nothing in this act shall be construed so as to create any liability upon the part of the United States, directly or indirectly, for any debt or obligation incurred or for any claim for aid or pecuniary assistance from Congress or the Treasury of the United States in support or liquidation of any debts or obligations created by said United States Government board in excess of appropriations herein made.

"Sec. 20. That the United States shall not in any manner or under any circumstances make any loan, directly or indirectly, to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition or for the benefit of said exposition or for any of the purposes thereof, and shall not appropriate for any purpose whatsoever in connection with said exposition any sum of money other than that provided in this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 163: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"INTERNATIONAL IRRIGATION CONGRESS, ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX.

"Sec. 21. To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the city of Albuquerque, N. Mex., to assist in defraying the expenses of the International Irrigation Congress, to be held in that city commencing September twenty-ninth, nineteen hundred and eight, thirty thousand dollars.

"Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to create any liability upon the part of the United States, directly or indirectly, for any debt or obligation incurred or for any claim for aid or pecuniary assistance from Congress or the Treasury of the United States in support or liquidation of any debts or obligations that may be created on account of said International Irrigation Congress beyond the sum hereby appropriated."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

INJURIES TO GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. BEVERIDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield for morning business.

Mr. GORE. I have two resolutions of a local character which I wish to present.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let them be introduced and referred.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the resolutions be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I decline to yield for their introduction.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. DEPEW. I desire to call up Order of Business 674.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 21844) granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the Senator from Indiana was to call up his Alaskan bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was going to, but I said I would yield to the Senator from New York for this purpose.

Mr. ALDRICH. A motion will have to be made.

Mr. DEPEW. I move—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York for the present consideration of the bill the title of which has just been read?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. In reprinting the bill there are two obvious mistakes. In line 6, page 1, the words occur in italics "or as postal clerks on railway trains." I offered the amendment and withdrew it; and I ask that the words be stricken from the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is one other amendment I offered, and that was agreed to. In the reprint, on page 4, line 19, occur the words "at least once in six months." That was agreed to, as I say, but the words should be inserted on page 5, line 4, after the word "Labor;" and I ask that that transposition be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is agreed to.

Mr. DEPEW. One word about this bill, which I think is misunderstood.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the words "Secretary of Commerce and Labor" and insert "court of the United States in which the injury is inflicted."

Mr. DEPEW. In regard to that amendment, just one word: The principle of this bill, that compensation shall be given to employees who have been injured in the service, has been the principle for a long time—

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] is absent from the Senate Chamber.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have just sent for the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich	Clark, Wyo.	Gallinger	Paynter
Allison	Clay	Gore	Perkins
Ankeny	Cullom	Hale	Piles
Bacon	Depew	Heyburn	Rayner
Bankhead	Dick	Hopkins	Scott
Beveridge	Dillingham	Johnston	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Dixon	Kean	Smoot
Brandegee	du Pont	Long	Stephenson
Briggs	Flint	McCreary	Sutherland
Brown	Foraker	McLaurin	Warner
Burkett	Foster	Nelson	Warren
Carter	Frazier	Newlands	Wetmore
Clapp	Fulton	Overman

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. DEPEW. Let the Secretary state the pending amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the words "Secretary of Commerce and Labor" and insert "court of the United States in which the injury is inflicted," so that if amended it will read:

All questions of negligence or misconduct shall be determined by the court of the United States in which the injury is inflicted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that if amended the clause will read:

All questions of negligence or misconduct shall be determined by the court of the United States in which the injury is inflicted.

It implies that the injury has been received in some court. I suggest it ought to be determined by the "court of the United States for the district," and I move that amendment to the amendment.

Mr. McLAURIN. I approve of the criticism of the Senator from Utah, and I would add "in the district."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. "For the district."

Mr. McLAURIN. "For the district." I have no objection to that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest further to the Senator from Mississippi that he insert before the word "court," the word "circuit," so as to read "circuit court of the United States."

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, if the bill shall pass as it is now, the question of negligence will be determined by the circuit or district court of the United States for the district wherein the injury occurred. Purely the question of negligence is submitted to a jury, and the amount of the recovery under this bill, I presume, would be left to the Department of Commerce and Labor. Is it not a very peculiar situation when we divide up a question of recovery in a case and we submit to a court the right to try the question of negligence, and then after the question of negligence has been passed upon, the amount of the recovery is to be fixed by the Department of Commerce and Labor? Now, is not it a departure entirely from the rules that have been fixed in the trial of causes? If a railway employee is injured, he goes into court and the law fixes the rules of negligence and the methods by which the case is tried. If the employee of a manufacturing establishment is injured, he goes into court and his case is tried under established rules.

In this case we are providing that all of the employees of the Government in Panama and in every State in the Union when they are injured shall have submitted to the court the question of negligence, but as to the amount of the recovery it shall be left to the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

Mr. CLAY. In one minute. How could the Department of Commerce and Labor ever pass upon all of these cases? We have had in the past fixed rules for the trial of causes where employees have been injured, and I believe that the Government ought to be liable where the Government has been negligent and an employee is injured; but ought we not to resort to the usual rules and methods, to the usual procedure in the trial of causes to ascertain the liability and the amount that should be paid?

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] and the remarks made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY].

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. I wish to respond to the suggestion that was made by the Senator from Utah, who asked, I believe, if I would be willing to have the word "circuit" inserted before the word "court."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; I think we should designate the court, as I understand the circuit court of the United States is the court which would have jurisdiction of this class of actions.

Mr. McLAURIN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, the criticism made by the Senator from Georgia is correct if we are to adopt in this bill the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi. This bill was gotten up upon one scheme for giving payment to the employees of the Government who may be injured in the service, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi necessitates an entire remodeling of the bill, because it provides a different scheme for the recovery of compensation.

This measure to provide compensation for the employees of the Government who may be injured in the service was before the other House all winter. Every proposition which could be suggested to meet the case has there been thoroughly considered, and the net result has been this bill, which subsequently passed the House unanimously, and then was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate. While the recovery from corporations and individuals has always been possible for an employee who has been injured, and while defenses have been taken away almost entirely in regard to the employees of an individual of a firm or a corporation, there is not now and never has been any possibility of an employee of the Government who is injured in the service securing any recovery whatever.

That probably arose from the fact that it was never anticipated that the Government of the United States should become one of the largest employers of labor and one of the greatest manufacturers in the country. We are making ships in shipyards, with all that that implies of labor and of risk. We are making guns in the arsenals, with all that that implies. We are placing in position in fortifications those great guns which are to defend our harbors and our coasts. We are engaged in hazardous service in the harbors of the country in building docks and in the Reclamation Service and in digging the Panama Canal. Yet when accidents occur, this just measure, recognized by every country, of payment to the employee who is injured in his employment has never been accorded in our Government.

The question naturally arises, How should that employee receive his compensation if he is injured, and how should it be ascertained? Of course, the only method, so far as corporations and individuals and firms are concerned, is access to the courts, because you can not, as a rule, trust corporations nor firms nor individuals to deal justly with an employee who might be injured in the service. Therefore the application is made to the court, and there is a trial and a jury decides what the compensation may be.

But, Mr. President, it is well known that in these cases the injured party reaches his damages in cash long after the suit has been tried.

There are all sorts of opportunities for the interposition of objections, and all sorts of opportunities for appeals and for reversals and for new trials. I think it will be found that the average time between the bringing of an action for injury or for death and the recovery in cash to the party injured or his representatives is at least five years.

In the meantime, sir, there has grown up in the United States because of the practice in such cases a special bar on negligence, and there are representatives of that bar who are known as ambulance chasers, and they have arrangements with the people in various places, for instance, with coroners and officers of every kind, by which they know first, and are on hand with their contracts for 25 or 33 or 50 per cent of the amount of the recovery in case they succeed. The object of this bill is to do away with that, and enable the injured man to secure speedy examination and payment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will permit me to ask him a question, I ask him how this proposed legislation seeks to avoid that very condition?

Mr. DEPEW. That is just what I am coming to, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It does not seem to me to be relieving it, that lawyers are forbidden to take one of these cases.

Mr. DEPEW. Except that he can not sue the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He can not sue the Government, but he may take the ex parte testimony of the claimant and present it to the Bureau. I see no inhibition upon him.

Mr. DEPEW. But, Mr. President, in this case the employee or his representatives, if he were killed, would be very foolish to do anything of the kind. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is authorized under the bill to make rules and regulations covering the whole question and the whole scheme of recovery; and in every navy-yard, and in every arsenal, and upon every dock and every work in the United States the superintendent in charge is directed, immediately upon an injury, to take the necessary steps to ascertain what it may be and report it immediately to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator if he does not think, however, that the superintendent in charge—or whatever may be his position, the person in charge—will be disposed at all times to report against the employee, because in the nature of things he will want to protect himself. He will have an interest in protecting himself, to show that there was no negligence on his part or on the part of any superior officer. As a result, I ask the Senator if he does not think that these claimants will be compelled to employ counsel to present their cases, to represent them, before the Secretary of Commerce and Labor or whatever so-called court or board he establishes for hearing the cases?

I call the attention of the Senator in this connection to the fact that in every Department where claims are presented against the Government there has grown up in this city a bar practicing before that Department. There are regular claims attorneys here presenting claims to Congress. There are pension attorneys taking charge of pensions. If there is one branch of the Government where it would seem that the benefits the Government wishes to give to its citizens could be obtained without the employment of counsel, one would think it would be the Pension Department.

But we all know as a matter of fact and practice that there are attorneys who do nothing else but practice before the Pension Bureau.

I mention that to call the attention of the Senator to what seems to me will be the result here, that there will grow up right in this city a bar whose sole business it will be to present claims of this character; and I think it will be far more difficult and far more expensive for a claimant to secure his money under this bill than if we referred the whole matter to the court and allowed the court with jurisdiction where the action should occur to hear the case, allowing it to be presented in any court of competent jurisdiction. I make that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am interested in what the Senator from Oregon says, but if he will notice the bill he will observe that the amount allowed the employee is very small. If this matter is allowed to be thrashed out in court, in an indirect way, at least, and possibly in a direct way, we are removing the bar of sovereignty and allowing the United States to be sued. If we do that, does not the Senator believe that the right to recover under the bill should be very, very much enlarged?

Mr. FULTON. Undoubtedly. My own view, if the Senator will allow me right there, and asking permission of the Senator from New York—

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. My own view would be to allow probably whatever is allowed under the State law where the action occurs, and if not that, then frame some general bill of our own and very materially increase the amounts that are allowed under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My suggestion was drawn out from the fact, which is well known by those who have investigated the subject, in this Chamber and elsewhere, that any attempt at this time to pass this bill with the court amendment would be absolutely futile.

Mr. FULTON. I am very decidedly in favor of the Government paying where employees are injured in the service and without their fault. I think the Government should pay as other employers pay; but I would send the matter to the court.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will say, in the first place, that I think it would be a very great misfortune to these men to send their cases to the courts. But I simply want to call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that all these classes of employees have men representing them now who will look after their cases before the Department of Commerce and Labor.

I have a dispatch here from a gentleman in Boston who represents the League of Navy Yard Employees. They have lawyers and others who will, I think, look very carefully after their interests, if this matter is kept out of the courts. But if these men are sent to the courts with claims of from one hundred dollars perhaps to a couple thousand dollars, it is very evident they will never recover enough to warrant the trouble to which they will be subjected.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator from New York allow me?
Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. In reply to the suggestions of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Oregon, I would suggest that the matter can be remedied by limiting the amount that should be paid to any person, lawyer or otherwise, to assist the party who has been injured. Take the case of pension claimants. The law provides that a very limited amount is to be paid to the attorney in such a case. I think experience has shown that the service which has been rendered by the attorneys has very much aided the old soldiers, and the compensation has been so small that it has not been burdensome to the soldier.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question, not in a spirit of opposition to the measure, for I am heartily in favor of it, but I was out of the Chamber for a moment. I ask the Senator whether he favors the amendment printed in lines 10 and 11, on page 2, referring all questions of negligence or misconduct to the court?

Mr. DEPEW. I do not.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it has occurred to me that perhaps it would be going too far to leave the determination of these questions to the Department of Commerce and Labor, to be passed upon, as they necessarily must be passed upon, by subordinates, and that a very simple solution would be to provide that in case of an accident the whole matter should be laid before the district attorney for the district in which the accident occurred.

As he would stand there in a relation between the Government and the injured, it would require no service of an attorney in such a proceeding. Anyone could present the matter to the district attorney. We would then have the judgment and opinion of one familiar with the law and the rules of evidence. Let him then forward the case with his recommendation to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. It strikes me that that would be a very simple proposition, easy to work out, and yet would bring into this matter the judgment of one trained in this kind of work and would entail no additional expense upon the claimant.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have been somewhat impressed by the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], who says that in the case of a claimant for pension provision has been made for the payment of attorneys, and therefore that ought to be done in this case. I want to say that this very remarkable departure from the fixed principles of our Government strikes me as a serious innovation. The suggestion of the Senator from Illinois prompts me to say that if a soldier who served his country in war, in the thick of the fray, when his life was not worth anything every moment, perhaps, of his enlistment, did not serve over ninety days he can not get a penny from the Government, nor can his widow or his children, whereas under this bill a civil employee, in a position of absolute security and safety, may, if he works one day for the Government, demand a year's pay.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me a moment?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Michigan to this difference between the civilian and the soldier. If the soldier was injured within the limits spoken of, the Soldiers' Homes are open to any man who has served the country either in the Army or the Navy.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; but if he lost his life in the war a Soldiers' Home would not do him much good, nor would it do his wife and children any good. His widow and his children, who have been for years trying to get a pension, never can get anything. I have seen during my service in Congress, Mr. President, bill after bill that was refused even consideration by the committee of the Senate or by the House because the soldier had not served longer than ninety days. I want to know what emergency it is that requires us, when a man is culled from every private employment into the public service, where thousands are so eager to come, to insure him absolutely both against the negligence of his fellow-servants and against the negligence of the master.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan allow me to remind him of a fact? I presume that the Congress of the United States has considered the position of a Senator extra hazardous, because it has been the practice of the United States Senate ever since I have been here to appropriate a year's salary to the widow every time a Senator dies.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I hope the Senator's widow will never get that salary.

Mr. BURKETT. If the Senator will yield to me, I want to call his attention to the fact that the soldier who has been injured can get a pension; it makes no difference how short a time he was in the Army.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The ninety days' limit has cut off scores and scores.

Mr. BURKETT. That is only as to a service pension; it does not apply to an injury received in the service.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will allow me, I would like to observe that the bill now before the Senate is a most startling one to me. Stripped of all its verbiage, this act establishes a civil pension list, and will ultimately lead to the placing of every employee of the Government under this or similar provision. While this bill may not cover over 100,000 employees, laborers, and artisans in the public service, it is an entering wedge, and it will be easy to take on all other grades. I must confess that I do not like it.

The Government has steadfastly refused to recognize the services of the soldier who did not happen to serve ninety days, although he may have stood in the face of a deadly fire for eighty-nine days, and I can not understand the theory of justice upon which this is based. If the Government is at fault the laborer should be given his legal remedy, an adequate one, fully compensating the injured person. This bill does not even pretend to do more than tide the poor unfortunate over for a year or less. This is not justice; this is charity, creditable, perhaps, but not just; let the courts be authorized to extend jurisdiction to claimants, but in the name of all that is fair and just do not shield yourself behind a special privilege as an employer, and then treat claimants with scant justice, and thus avoid responsibility. I hope this will be so amended as to be practicable, and, if not, pass an enabling act which will permit employees of the Government to seek such redress as is accorded to employees in every private employment.

I think this is dangerous legislation. It goes too far.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the Senator from Michigan think an employee of the Government should be held liable for the negligence of a coemployee, if he is injured?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I know that under the common-law rule, recognized in our courts for generations, it was thought that a higher degree of care and responsibility would be exercised if employees depended upon their fellow-servants for the exercise of care; and for one I am not ready to abolish it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to say to the Senator that that practice has been outgrown by this Government for many years.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It may have been, but—

Mr. HOPKINS. In most of the State tribunals it is not regarded, and it ought not to be regarded by the Federal Government. The idea, Mr. President—

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President—

Mr. HOPKINS. Just one word further.

Mr. DEPEW. I think the bill we passed here this winter has abolished that rule.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It did as to a certain class of employment that I submit is very hazardous, but not as to any other. I think this opens the door too wide. I do not like to differ with the distinguished Senator from New York, whose experience and large judgment along the lines that this bill follows we must all respect. I dislike very much to disagree with him, but I feel that when we turn the Government over as an insurance company for every employee and every Department of the public service and say that for the hurt of a day he may be compensated for a year, it is going altogether too far.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to say before the Senator from Michigan takes his seat that of course he does not want to incorrectly interpret the bill. I want to say that in the bill as printed and presented to the Senate there is no such interpretation as the Senator from Michigan puts upon it.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President—

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will permit me, if the principle is introduced it will certainly extend to every employment of the Government.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, one would think from the character of this discussion, from the wide range it has taken, and from the alarm which this proposition has created, that this was a new suggestion which had never been tried. But, sir, in 1897 the British Government enacted similar legislation. The British Government has gone further in legislation on the subject of the rights to recovery by an employee than has this Government or any State in the United States or any government in the world.

In 1897 the British Government adopted a bill substantially on these lines, and I understand that none of the evils which are predicted here have resulted, but, on the contrary, that it has worked equitably and justly, and that the Government has been no more damaged than it ought to have been as an employer of labor. That legislation fixes the limit of recovery and this is proposed in this bill. We are simply introducing, in the mildest kind of way, a proposition that the Government shall treat its employees who are engaged in hazardous work with as much justice and equity as we compel a corporation or a firm or an individual to treat its employees.

Now, as to the apprehension that ultimately hundreds of thousands and possibly a million of employees may be affected by this bill, that is impossible. By the investigation which has been made, the whole number of employees in the Government engaged in hazardous occupations is 71,000. Leaving out those in the postal and wrecking service already provided for by law, there are 54,000, and when the Panama canal is completed the number will be much less. The bill originally introduced in the other House, which was rejected by the House, and which is now covered by the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], included the whole civil service, amounting to 330,000 or 340,000 or 350,000 employees, but this bill is designed to reach only those who are engaged in hazardous occupations, say 54,000.

So far as the Government is concerned, I am informed by the representatives of the Department of Commerce and Labor that they see no difficulty whatever in the just administration of the provisions of this bill or in carrying them out in a way which will neither embarrass the Department nor do injustice to the Government or injustice to the employee. Surely no class in the United States are more alert to their own interests, are better organized to protect them, have abler and shrewder men in charge of them wherever they are affected than the labor organizations of this country, and I am authorized to state that the labor organizations have given attention and examination to this bill and that they are unanimously in favor of its passage. Of course it does not grant as much as they would like, because it is very narrow in its limitations, while the recovery, either for injury or for death, so far as the private claimant in private or corporate employment is concerned, is limited only by the discretion of the jury.

This bill limits the maximum recovery either for injury or for death to one year's salary. Instead of being able to recover, as some Senators seem to think, for the slightest injury, a whole year's salary, it is for the Department of Commerce and Labor to decide whether the man shall be paid for thirty days or sixty days or six months or a year.

Sir, as to the number of cases that are likely to arise, in looking over this report, made by the House committee, I find that the number of injuries, so far as they could be ascertained by the Departments which employ labor, amounts to a little over 2 per cent a year on the 71,000 who would be affected by this bill; and, sir, on such a calculation as that, even if it were 3 or 5 per cent a year, the amount which would be paid out of the Treasury would be small.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if this 71,000 he speaks of is predicated upon the bill as it came from the other House?

Mr. DEPEW. Upon the bill as it came from the other House.

Mr. PILES. It does not, then, include those provided for in the bill as amended in the Senate?

Mr. DEPEW. Not included in the amendment as offered in the Senate. The amendment offered to this bill in the Senate would include about 340,000.

Mr. PILES. The bill has been amended in the Senate. I will state, while I am on my feet, that the more I look at this bill the greater dislike I seem to have for it. Take, for instance, the Senate amendments in section 1 relating to postal clerks on railway trains.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is out of the bill, I will say to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DEPEW. Postal clerks on railway trains have been taken out.

Mr. PILES. How about persons engaged in work on fortifications; has that provision been taken out?

Mr. DEPEW. "Fortification" is in the bill.

Mr. PILES. How about those engaged in construction work on the reclamation of arid lands? That is still in, as I understand it.

Mr. DEPEW. Yes; that is in.

Mr. PILES. Turning to section 2, that section provides—

That if any artisan or laborer so employed shall die during the said year by reason of such injury received in the course of such employment, leaving a widow or a child or children under 16 years of age, or a dependent parent—payments may be made under the provisions of the bill. Section 2 limits the right of recovery to the dependent parent, to the widow, or to the child or children of artisans or laborers. It does not include the other persons named in the bill as amended by the Senate. That ought to be changed by all means. It ought to be provided in section 2 that if any person so employed—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Any person named in this act.

Mr. PILES. "Any person so employed" is perfectly clear.

Furthermore, Mr. President, there is another thing about section 2 that does not appeal to me at all. I must say that I do not believe that this bill is of such a character as Congress ought to pass on this subject. If we are to give the persons referred to in this bill anything we ought to give them something substantial. It may be possible, as the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] says, that we can not get any other bill through at this session of Congress, but I want to say now that I do not favor this bill in its present form, although I do not say that I will not support it, but if I do, it will be upon the theory that it is the best bill that can be passed at this session of Congress.

Referring again to section 2, that section provides that the amount of recovery shall be limited to one year's salary. I call the Senator's attention, for instance, to the fact that if an injured person dies during the year his widow or his dependent parent or his children, or all combined, may receive proportionately the balance of his salary for the remainder of the year. But here is a provision which, it seems to me, is harsh, cruel, and unjust. Turning to line 1, on page 3 of section 2, we find the following:

And if any child shall arrive at the age of 16 years during the said year, the portion of such child shall cease to be paid to such child from the date on which such age shall be attained, but shall be added to the amount to be paid to the remaining beneficiaries, if there be any.

In other words, Mr. President, under the provisions of section 2 a child is absolutely cut off as soon as it reaches its sixteenth birthday, irrespective of its condition. Why should that be? There may be three months' pay coming to the dead man. He may have lived nine months, and his child at his death may be a cripple; it may be a little girl who is unable to earn anything for herself, and because, forsooth, she has arrived at the age of 16, this so-called "compensation" which the Government offers ceases absolutely under the language as it reads, even though there be no other beneficiary. It does seem to me that ought to be amended.

Do not cut the child off, as it would be under the provisions of this bill, if there are no beneficiaries. I do not believe that this bill has had the careful consideration its importance demands.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why not strike out that language entirely?

Mr. PILES. Well, strike it out. It should be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had that in view. I think it is a cruel provision.

Mr. PILES. I think it is also an unjust provision.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FORAKER. I thought the Senator from Washington was through.

Mr. PILES. I am entirely through, Mr. President.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I want to ask a question of the Senator having the bill in charge. I see the bill was considered by and reported favorably from the Judiciary Committee. I happened to be ill at the time the bill was considered there, and did not know any such bill had been considered in the committee or that any such bill had been reported until the Senator called it up for consideration. Looking over the bill, it seems to me it is indefinite in some particulars, and I should like to ask the Senator in charge of it, who is no doubt entirely familiar with it, what the provision of the bill is, for I can not understand it from a mere reading of the text—in case of death by accident occurring to one of the employees?

Mr. DEPEW. A year's salary.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not so understand. It is a year's salary when there is an injury as provided in the first section. Then there is a provision in the second section as to how that year's salary shall be distributed in the event the injured person dies within the year.

Mr. DEPEW. If the Senator will look at the third section—

Mr. FORAKER. Then, when we come to the third section I find it to read as follows:

SEC. 3. That whenever an accident occurs to any employee embraced within the terms of the first section of this act, and which results in death or a probable incapacity for work, it shall be the duty of the official superior of such employee to at once report such accident to the head of his bureau or independent office, and his report shall be immediately communicated through regular official channels to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Such report shall state, first, the origin and nature of the accident and the probable duration of the injury resulting therefrom; second, whether the accident arose out of or in the course of the injured person's employment; third, whether the accident was due to negligence or misconduct on the part of the employee injured; fourth, any other matters required by such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe. The head of each Department or independent office shall have power, however, to charge a special official with the duty of making such reports.

That does not say anything about what finding shall follow the making of these reports.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I think perhaps I can answer the Senator's question if I understand it.

Mr. FORAKER. I am not through with what I wanted to read.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wanted merely to see whether I have in mind what the Senator is asking, and that is this: Does the Senator ask what indemnity for the beneficiary is provided in this act in case a man is instantly killed? If so, I will say none.

Mr. FORAKER. I was just coming to that, if the Senator will bear with me for a moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I can not find language in the act to cover that, and I have prepared an amendment covering that very point.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the Senator's explanation will be more in order in a moment. I have read section 3 all the way through, and I find nothing there, except only a provision as to the character of evidence that shall be required with respect to the accident, how it happened, whether it occurred while the injured person was in the course of his employment, or otherwise. I will read section 4.

SEC. 4. That in the case of any accident that shall result in death—This is the case of death from accident—

SEC. 4. That in the case of any accident which shall result in death, the persons entitled to compensation under this act or their legal representatives shall within ninety days after such death file with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor an affidavit setting forth their relationship to the deceased and the ground of their claim for compensation under the provisions of this act. This shall be accompanied by the certificate of the attending physician setting forth the fact and cause of death, or the nonproduction of the certificate satisfactorily accounted for. In the case of incapacity for work lasting more than fifteen days the injured party or his legal representatives desiring to take the benefit of this act shall within a reasonable period after the expiration of such time file with his official superior, to be forwarded through regular official channels to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, an affidavit setting forth the grounds of his claim for compensation, to be accompanied by a certificate of his attending physician as to the cause and nature of the injury and probable duration of the incapacity, or the nonproduction of the certificate satisfactorily accounted for.

All that, Mr. President, refers to the case of an accident resulting in death. None of this section is applicable unless the injured person dies as the result of the accident. Among other things, we are to have set forth the probable duration of his incapacity. Now, further—

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FORAKER. Let me finish the reading of the section, if the Senator please, and then I will yield. The section concludes:

If the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, at least once in six months, shall find from the report and affidavit or other evidence produced by the claimant or his legal representatives, or from such additional investigation as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may direct, that a claim for compensation is established under this act, the compensation to be paid shall be determined as provided under this act and approved for payment by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Now, it seems to me, that that fourth section is not, with all due respect to the draftsman, very intelligently drawn. I find my mind in confusion as to just what it means, and I want to ask the Senator a further question, for I did not have the benefit of hearing the discussion in committee. If I correctly understand this provision, waiving the confusion that I have referred to for the moment, it is a provision that in case of injury resulting in death in the one case and of injury not resulting in death in the other, there shall be reports made to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. These reports shall be made by the superior officer of the workman who is injured, the one, I suppose, who is immediately in control of him—it may be the foreman. He is to report all the facts and circumstances and is to report whether the party was injured on account of his negligence or whether he was free from negligence; and then upon these reports there is to be a determination by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor as to what he is entitled to receive from the Government as compensation.

Now, I want to ask the Senator if in the Judiciary Committee the question was considered whether this was not an exercise, as here provided, of judicial power? I do not understand how anybody, except only a judge, can exercise judicial power; and it appears to me that it is a judicial function to pass on the question whether or not there is negligence or the absence of negligence in determining these questions of liability for an accident, and certainly also judicial power in determining the amount of the liability of the Government, if it be determined that he was injured in the course of his employment while in the line of duty without negligence on his part, unless there is something in the bill that fixes absolutely and arbitrarily the amount. I do not understand that it does, though it may, because to my mind that is an indefinite provision, which I do not clearly understand. It is perhaps because I have not had a chance to study the bill as other Senators have studied it, but it seems to me that it is a judicial power that we are proposing to confer upon the Secretary.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] and in response to what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and other Senators have suggested, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the scope of this bill. This is not a bill that proposes to give a person injured in the Government service a right to get full compensation as in cases between private individuals. It is simply to provide a system of giving such persons what might be called a "pension." The whole amount of the compensation in any case is limited to a year's salary. If a man is injured and is laid off as a result of that injury for more than fifteen days, he gets pay at the rate of his salary for the time he is laid off, not to exceed a year. If he is injured—and that responds to the inquiry of the Senator from Ohio—and dies as a result of that injury, his compensation is only his salary. He gets pay for the time he is laid off and disabled from the date of the injury; and then, if he dies, his family get the balance of the compensation for the remainder of the year.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly I do.

Mr. BORAH. I simply want to ask a question for information. Do I understand that the injured employee receives his pay so long as he lays off from work?

Mr. NELSON. From injury, not exceeding a year.

Mr. BORAH. Who is to determine when he should go back to work and when he is well?

Mr. NELSON. That is determined by a medical examination, as the bill subsequently provides. There is no novelty about this proposed legislation.

Mr. FULTON. I should like the Senator—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NELSON. I wish the Senator would allow me to make a statement of the case, and then he can ask any question he wishes.

Mr. FULTON. I wish the Senator would point out where that provision is.

Mr. NELSON. There is no novelty in this proposed legislation. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that by the act of May 4, 1882, we applied this principle to the men employed in the Life-Saving Service. Section 7 of that act reads as follows:

SEC. 7. That if any keeper or member of a crew of a life-saving or lifeboat station shall be so disabled by reason of any wound or injury received or disease contracted in the Life-Saving Service in the line of duty as to unfit him for the performance of duty, such disability to be determined in such manner as shall be prescribed in the regulations of the Service, he shall be continued upon the rolls of the Service and entitled to receive his full pay during the continuance of such disability, not to exceed the period of one year, unless the general superintendent shall recommend, upon a statement of facts, the extension of the period through a portion or the whole of another year, and said recommendation receive the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury as just and reasonable; but in no case shall said disabled keeper or member of a crew be continued upon the rolls or receive pay for a longer period than two years.

The determination of the question as to whether or not he is injured in the service is left to the Department.

Section 8 of the same act reads as follows:

SEC. 8. That if any keeper or member of a crew of a life-saving or lifeboat station shall hereafter die by reason of perilous service or any wound or injury received or disease contracted in the Life-Saving Service in the line of duty, leaving a widow, or a child or children under 16 years of age, such widow and child or children shall be entitled to receive, in equal portions, during a period of two years, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, the same amount payable quarterly, as far as practicable, that the husband or father would be entitled to receive as pay if he were alive and continued in the service: Provided, That if the widow shall remarry at any time during the said two years, her portion of said amount shall cease to be paid to her from the date of her remarriage, but shall be added to the amount to be paid to the remaining beneficiaries under the provisions of this section, if there be any; and if any child shall arrive at the age of 16 years during the said two years, the payment of the portion of such child shall cease to be paid to such child from the date on which such age shall be attained, but shall be added to the amount to be paid to the remaining beneficiaries, if there be any.

Mr. FORAKER. Does the act from which the Senator has read make any provision in regard to negligence?

Mr. NELSON. No; it speaks about injury. It does not use the word "negligence." The same principle has been applied to the postal employees. For the last five years we have had the following provision in the post-office appropriation bill, and we have acted under it:

For acting clerks, in place of clerks injured while on duty, and to enable the Postmaster-General to pay the sum of $1,000, which shall be exempt from the payment of debts of the deceased, to the legal representatives of any railway postal clerk or substitute railway postal clerk who shall be killed while on duty or who, being injured while on duty, shall die within one year thereafter as the result of such injury, $100,000.

Then, in addition to that, in the Post-Office Regulations there is a provision which I will read.

SEC. 1424. Whenever a railway postal clerk shall be disabled while in the actual discharge of his duties by a railroad or other accident beyond his power to control, he shall send to the division superintendent a certificate of his attending physician or surgeon, sworn to before an officer authorized to administer oaths, who has an official seal, setting forth the nature, extent, and cause of his disability, and the probable duration of the same; and such further evidence as to the character of the disability as may be necessary shall be furnished.

2. The division superintendent will forward the certificate, with his recommendation, to the general superintendent of the railway mail service, who will submit the matter to the Postmaster-General, who may, in his judgment, the facts justifying such action, grant such disabled clerk leave of absence with pay for periods of not exceeding sixty days each, and not exceeding one year in all.

2. A sworn statement from the attending physician must accompany every application for additional leave.

There you have the law, Mr. President, that gives to the families of employees of the railway postal service in case of death a compensation of $1,000, and in case of injury the employees are allowed their salary for one year. That compensation is administered through the Department. They do not have to go into a court to adjudicate those matters. It is just the same as it is in the case of pension claims. All the pension claims in the country are submitted to the Commissioner of Pensions and adjudicated through the Pension Bureau. The question of disability occurs in all such cases. In the Life-Saving Service it is submitted to the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, who passes upon it. If an employee is injured in that service, he can get compensation to the extent of two years' salary. If he is killed in that service, his widow and surviving children get two years' salary. In the postal service in case of death $1,000 is granted to the widow and children, and in case of injury the employees are allowed compensation to the extent of one year's salary.

In the case of the bill under consideration, all that we aim to do is to apply the same principle to this class of people who are engaged in hazardous employment in the Government service. The Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] said it would affect 71,000 employees; but if you take the report of the House and deduct the employees of the railway postal service and the employees of the Life-Saving Service, who are now provided for, it will only apply to 54,000, instead of 71,000.

It seems to me that it would be as idle and mischievous and as much of an impediment to ask the claimants in these cases to go into a court and have their claims adjudicated as it would in the case of the men in the Life-Saving Service and in the railway postal service. It is a matter that can be done through an administrative Department of the Government. There is only one change I can suggest, and that was suggested by the Senator from Illinois. Let us do as we do in the case of pension claims—limit the attorney's fee to a certain amount.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Before the Senator takes his seat, I want to ask him—for I am quite in sympathy with the purpose of the legislation—if it would not be an improvement of this bill to strike out all the provisions about negligence? If a man be injured while in the course of his employment, why should not the Government pay him? That is the only requirement in the laws the Senator has read.

Mr. NELSON. I think myself it would be well.

Mr. FORAKER. We would thereby avoid this question of determining whether or not there is negligence, which certainly is a judicial question. That is the reason I interrupted the Senator to ask about the provision in regard to the Life-Saving Service.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, does the Senator from Ohio mean to say that the Government ought to respond for the death of a person who, through his own sheer negligence, caused his own death?

Mr. FORAKER. Ordinarily not; but evidently the Government is doing so in the case of the Life-Saving Service under the provision that was read by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] a few moments ago. Also in the other cases he mentioned. The point in my mind is simply this, if the Senator from New Hampshire will bear with me a moment: I do not see how we are going to intrust to any administrative officer a judicial power, and, it seems to me, there can not be any question that it is a judicial power to determine for the purpose of fixing liability, whether in a given case there has been negligence or the absence of negligence.

Mr. GALLINGER. The superior officer reports upon that, and in the Life-Saving Service of course the work is performed under such circumstances that there can not be negligence. The men go out to sea to save some one's life, and lose their own lives.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know. I was in charge of one a year or two ago, and I thought he was guilty of very gross negligence. But I was willing to square the account when I got on dry land.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me if we are going to abandon all defense and put fifty or sixty thousand or more employees of the Government where they can be compensated for injuries, or their families in case of their death, without reference to the question of negligence, and when we stop and reflect that this is the entering wedge, which means that almost every Government employee is going to be provided for in the same way in the near future, I think we had better be a little careful.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say in answer to that suggestion that every man is supposed to have regard for his own personal safety, and ordinarily a man is not going to put himself in the way, negligently, of receiving injuries, especially those which may result in death. That would be some protection.

But I was only asking my colleague on the Judiciary Committee for the purpose of getting his opinion with respect to a bill which I did not have an opportunity to consider with him in the committee when it was under consideration there. I noted in the legislation read about the men in the Life-Saving Service and in the other cases mentioned that there was no provision about negligence, and I thought that distinguished that legislation from this legislation.

Any administrative officer could make a finding as to the fact whether or not when the man lost his life he was engaged in the service in which he was employed. It seems to me, however, that when it comes to the question, beyond that, of determining whether or not there has been negligence, or any degree of it, we are on doubtful ground and that we had better pay all claims without regard to negligence than to disregard the separation of governmental powers by which we are bound by the provisions of our Constitution.

Mr. DEPEW. There is a very extraordinary report in one of the New York morning papers—I think the New York Sun—on the workings of the act passed, I think, a year ago by the British Parliament, which removed entirely from a certain class of employees the question of negligence.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from New York perhaps overlooks the fact that the British Parliament can make anything law that it wants to make law. There is no written constitution to prohibit it—

Mr. DEPEW. No; that is not the point.

Mr. FORAKER (continuing). From making a statute in such form as it wants to frame it.

Mr. DEPEW. This act in regard to certain classes of employees made the employer liable, whether the employee deliberately injured himself or not, the supposition being that under no circumstances would an employee deliberately injure himself to recover damages. On that theory the insurance companies began to issue policies against that class of liability. They now find that there is a large number of claims, principally of domestic servants, where the employees have deliberately sustained injuries which would enable them to recover under the act. But the negligence clause in this bill prevents any such methods.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio—

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me just one word, that would be a case of actual fraud.

Mr. DEPEW. Under the terms of that act the employee was entitled to recover damages, no matter how the injury was received, and the courts have so held—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The British act uses the term "serious and willful misconduct."

Mr. FULTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. Suppose that does involve judicial power? Does the Senator have any doubt about our right in a case of this kind (where we are simply waiving rights, allowing people to present a claim) to have the matter submitted to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor? Is it not competent for Congress so to do, even if it does involve judicial power? It does not seem to me there can be any question in a case of this kind.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know that I understand fully the scope of the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon. I understand we are conferring upon an administrative officer in an affirmative way a power which he is to exercise, and by the exercise of which power he is to determine rights of complainants against the Government on the one hand and of the Government on the other. That is purely and solely a judicial power. Now, that is a judicial power, as the Senator says it is—I understand the Senator to agree with me that it is a judicial power—

Mr. FULTON. I do, fully agree that it involves an inquiry of a judicial character.

Mr. FORAKER. It seems to me we have no right to lodge a judicial power anywhere except only in these courts. But the Senator suggests that we may waive our right to intrust this power to the courts and confer it upon somebody else. I fear I do not get the force of that suggestion. If all the judicial power of the Government is to be intrusted to the judicial department of the Government, nobody else has a constitutional right to exercise it, no matter what Congress may see fit to say about the matter, and therefore our legislation would be invalid. That is why I suggested to the Senator from Minnesota that it might be better—I do not know that it would be—to waive the provisions about negligence.

Mr. FULTON. Let me say this in answer to the Senator about the question of judicial power. I think it involves a judicial investigation and the determination in one sense of a judicial question. But it does not follow that we can not lodge it in an administrative officer where it does not involve the determination of legal rights or the determination of rights where the parties have a legal right to have it submitted to a court. Of course if you were seeking to force a party, who has a legal right to go into court to enforce his claim, to go before an administrative officer to determine the question, you could not do it. But here is a case where the Government can not be sued at all. The claim is not one that the law recognizes at all, hence there are no legal rights involved, consequently it is inaccurate to speak of judicial power. No such power is to be exercised.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is a privilege we are conferring.

Mr. FULTON. It is a privilege we are conferring; and we say that we will voluntarily recognize a claim and pay a certain amount if you will go and satisfy this officer that it is just. Now, it may be that he has to exercise what we will call not judicial power, but judicial judgment. Of course it is not judicial power. A judicial question in a sense is submitted to him, because it requires the exercise of judgment to determine just what the evidence establishes, but it is not conferring on this official "judicial power" within the meaning of the Constitution. His action is simply advisory to Congress.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is it any more judicial than the determining of any fact—

Mr. FULTON. No.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to say—

Mr. FULTON. Such as where you refer a matter to the Auditor of the Treasury to determine the matter.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is it.

Mr. FULTON. It is a question which you may say requires the exercise of judgment, but it is not a judicial power within the sense of the Constitution, nor is it the exercise of a judicial function.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator will agree with me, I am sure, that a finding as to whether or not in a given case a party has been guilty of negligence or contributory negligence is not like the finding of a specific fact. It involves a mixed question of both law and fact in every jurisdiction, I suppose.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. And it is not like a finding whether it was raining on a certain day or whether a man was actually in his lifeboat undertaking to save the life of somebody who had been wrecked at the time when he himself met with his death. This is quite different. This is the exercise of judgment, and it seems to me in the nature of judicial power.

But I want to say to the Senator that I have not entered into this debate in any controversial spirit. I was unfortunate enough not to be able to attend the meeting of the committee when this bill was considered there. I do not know what took place there. When I read the bill here in my seat these questions occurred to my mind. I was simply trying to get the benefit of the opinion of those in whose judgment I have confidence, who perhaps did consider these questions in committee.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before the Senator from Ohio takes his seat I want to ask him if it is not a fact that the Comptroller of the Currency passes upon questions of law and fact in more marked degree than the Secretary of Commerce and Labor would be required to pass upon them if this bill should become a law.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know what the Comptroller of the Currency does. I have never had any business with him. I have heard of him as a powerful official, having more authority than even the President; and if that be true, he is really a great power. But beyond that I have no comments to make upon his power. I do not know the nature of it, except in the most general way.

Mr. RAYNER. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I should like very much to vote for this bill, and I should like to vote for a much stronger bill. I would be absolutely in favor of passing an act similar to Lord Campbell's act, as to compensation, allowing the family full compensation in case of death. But is there any doubt that the Senator from Ohio is right upon the proposition he states? It seems to me there can not be any doubt about it in the mind of any man who carefully examines it. This bill seems to be very inartificially drawn.

Mr. FORAKER rose.

Mr. RAYNER. In just a moment.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly. I am obliged to the Senator—

Mr. RAYNER. A number of us want to have this bill passed, and will vote for it. But let me ask the Senator from New York a question. The clause we are on now provides—

That no compensation shall be paid under this act where the injury is due to the negligence or misconduct of the employee injured, or unless it shall continue for more than fifteen days. All questions of negligence or misconduct shall be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. FORAKER. Beyond appeal.

Mr. RAYNER. That is a judicial question. You are vesting in—

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President—

Mr. RAYNER. One moment.

You are vesting in a ministerial officer the right to determine a judicial question. What constitutes contributory negligence is a question of law. When the proof in the case comes up to the standard then it becomes a question of fact.

Mr. FULTON. Let me ask the Senator a question first.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator will let me finish, then I will submit to any interruption.

I read from Maryland cases:

The question of negligence is for the jury. The only province of the court is to define the degree of care exacted of the parties and to leave to the jury to determine whether or not the conduct of the parties concerned was what would have been that of prudent and discreet men under similar circumstances. (B. & O. R. R. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 35 Md., 32.)

The Government has no right to vest in a ministerial officer any judicial function. If it can invest a judicial function in a Cabinet officer, it can invest it in any other officer of the Government. It can repose it in a clerk.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. RAYNER. Will you not kindly let me give these authorities? There will be plenty of time.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes; I suppose so.

Mr. FULTON. Suppose it all be true, suppose it is a judicial question that you are confiding to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, then what? How does that affect the bill?

Mr. RAYNER. It makes the bill unconstitutional.

Mr. FULTON. Then what happens, if that be true? They now have no claim against the Government.

Mr. RAYNER. Does the Senator think that I would like to vote for a bill that I think is unconstitutional?

Mr. FULTON. Let me ask the Senator this: Was the Southern Claims Commission unconstitutional?

Mr. RAYNER. At this late day and hour I do not want to go into a discussion of the Southern Claims Commission. Let me finish with these cases:

Where there is no evidence before the jury of a fact, or the evidence offered is so vague and indefinite that no rational inference of such fact can be deduced from it, the court ought to direct the jury that it is not competent for them to find that fact. (Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co., 7 H. & J., 279.)

Where there is no evidence applicable to the issue or tending to prove any material fact, there is a total failure of evidence, and the court will direct the jury accordingly. (Davis v. Barney, 2 G. & J., 382.)

You understand I am very anxious to vote for this bill. I am not only in favor of this bill, but absolutely in favor of allowing full compensation in case of death. We ought to pass a statute, as I have said, similar to Lord Campbell's act as to compensation, and allow the family full compensation in case of death. Therefore, I am not opposing this bill, but I am afraid of it.

Let us take a case. A claimant comes before the Department of Commerce and Labor. The Government contends that the employee has been guilty of negligence. That is the question before the Secretary—that the employee has been guilty of contributory negligence. That is a question of law—perhaps a mixed question of law and fact—and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in considering whether he has or has not been guilty of negligence is entering upon a judicial inquiry.

The Government is not waiving the question of negligence. The cases the Senator from Minnesota has cited are not cases involving the question of negligence. There is no question of negligence involved in the cases which have been cited by the Senator from Minnesota at all. If the Government waived the question of negligence, I might admit it would be a mere ministerial function, but the Government can not waive the Constitution. Some of the officers of the Government are waiving the Constitution, but the Government can not waive it. That is very evident.

Mr. FULTON. Let me ask the Senator another question. I suggest to the Senator that questions of judicial power do not rise unless you constitute or endeavor to constitute a judicial tribunal and submit controversies of a legal nature or character to it. There is no such controversy whatever here submitted to this official. You simply refer to him a matter to investigate and report; and if his findings are one way the Government makes a voluntary payment. There can be no question of judicial power, because there is no controversy or question which the courts would recognize. There is not any judicial question submitted. It is simply a question of fact submitted for report.

Mr. RAYNER. There is no judicial tribunal under this bill. The Senator from Oregon, I submit, is mistaken when he says we submit no controversy. The Government is bound to defend these cases.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

Mr. RAYNER. Let me finish. If an employee has been guilty of contributory negligence, the Government is bound to make that defense, and the question before the Secretary of Commerce and Labor will be, Has the employee been guilty or not guilty of contributory negligence? You can not invest the Secretary of Commerce and Labor with the trial of that question.

I am in favor of this proposed law. Do not misunderstand me. I am willing to vote for this bill, and I am in favor of a bill giving full compensation in case of death, but let us perfect it.

I now have a case pending before the committee, as the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] knows, where a party was seriously injured, and I have been trying to obtain compensation for him. I am strongly in favor of this bill, but with this clause in it I am afraid the whole law will fall to the ground. That is my judgment, and that is my only ground of opposition to it. Let us frame a statute that will pass the test of the Supreme Court. I will take this if I can not get anything better, but I predict here, now, it will be set aside if it ever gets to the courts.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NELSON. I had the floor. I have been yielding to other Senators. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I am obliged to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. President, it seems to me the contention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] is not tenable—that there is a controversy here. There is a claim preferred against the Government, and evidence is offered in support of the claim, and an officer of the Government is to sit in judgment as to the sufficiency of that proof, presumably as an impartial judge between the Government and the complainant. So I think there is an exercise of judicial power called for, and I think if it be a judicial power, and I understand the Senator to agree with me that it is, it ought not and can not constitutionally be conferred upon a ministerial officer.

Mr. President, I did not think it necessary to say more than once or twice or three or four times that I am in favor of some law of this kind. Every Senator who knows what a battle I had here a year ago to help a constituent of mine who, walking through one of the Government buildings, fell through the floor because of a trapdoor or something of that kind being open, will remember that I have given some attention to this question. I finally succeeded in passing a bill, largely due to the kind consideration given it by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON], who is chairman of the Committee on Claims, by which my constituent was authorized to go into the Court of Claims and bring suit.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to ask the Senator a question right here. Does he not think the submitting of it to the committee was unconstitutional?

Mr. FORAKER. No.

Mr. FULTON. It was a judicial question, was it not, fully as much so as any question that might arise under this measure?

Mr. FORAKER. It was nothing except only authority to go to the Court of Claims and bring a suit in the Court of Claims to recover damages, if he was entitled to them. That was all I asked. That was all I could get; and I got it finally.

The Senate and House passed it and the complainant went to the Court of Claims, and he has been in the Court of Claims now for more than a year. He brought suit there to recover for injuries that have made him a cripple for life. I would not have had the injuries to which he has been subjected for a hundred thousand dollars. The modest sum of $10,000, I believe, is what he has sued for, and yet the Government is meeting him at every turn of the case in the Court of Claims with the claim that he ought to have seen as he walked through the corridor that there was a hole there and that he ought to have walked around it. In other words, that he was guilty of contributory negligence.

His contention is that it was the fault of the Government that it permitted an insecure and unsafe place for the people to walk by, and people were invited to walk there by its being kept open. He had a right to assume, as I thought, that it was safe for him to walk there. He was there in the early morning, before it was light, going to work, he being an employee of the Government.

I think we ought to give an opportunity to men who are injured in the employment of the Government to hold the Government responsible. A man is unfortunate to have a claim against the Government when there is no way to assert it.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Ohio pardon me if I make an inquiry more by way of suggestion?

There has been something said here about the number of cases that would probably come up for determination—I think a good many thousand in the course of a year. If we are to enact any legislation of this kind, would it not be better for us to constitute some tribunal, charged with the duty in a proper way, summarily to determine the question whether there has been negligence on the part of the employee?

Mr. FORAKER. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia is a very proper one and a very important one, and it is a suggestion that ought to be carefully considered in the committee—whether we can not frame a bill that will be free from the objection that it is unconstitutional. I do not—

Mr. BACON. I want to say to him, in making the inquiry, that I myself would favor a bill whereby we could have a court charged with this jurisdiction, charged with no other jurisdiction, if you please, giving its entire time to it, for the field of labor will certainly be large enough to occupy the time of the court.

Mr. FORAKER. Of course I do not know, and neither does anybody else know, how many cases will arise in the course of a year. It has been stated here that this will apply to more than 50,000 employees of the Government employed in hazardous occupations. There are likely to be a great many cases.

I think it is high time the Government was making provision whereby men injured in its employment may have a remedy against the Government when they are injured through the fault of the Government. At least, if we are not to strike out this provision about negligence—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask whether an amendment, in lines 7 and 9, striking out in each instance the words "negligence or" and leaving it "misconduct," would be acceptable to the Senator who has charge of the bill?

Mr. FULTON rose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. To strike out the entire proviso?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to apologize to the Senate again, as I have done two or three times—

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think I have the floor, and I shall have to resume it some time during the debate.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask pardon of the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I have the floor. I want to reply to the constitutional argument of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], and more particularly to the constitutional argument of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. Nobody disputes the constitutional principle that has been invoked. The unfortunate thing about it is that it has no application to the facts in this case. Here are a class of Government employees who to-day are without any remedy at all. We say to those employees, "If you are injured in the Government service and will submit your claim to the Department of Commerce and Labor, we will give you this compensation." It is in the nature of a gift, a gratuity from the Government of the United States, small as it is, and we have a right to prescribe the conditions under which it shall be given. It is not an invasion of any constitutional right any more than it is an invasion of the constitutional right in the case of the men in the Life-Saving Service or in the case of the men in the postal service.

We are not letting these men go into court. We do not say, "You shall have a right of action in court to recover for the injuries sustained in the Government service," or that the widow and children may have the right to go into court to recover for death. We say here to this class of employees, "You have had no remedy heretofore. We will give you this slight relief upon these terms and conditions. Present your claims to the Department of Commerce and Labor, which will pass upon them," just as the Pension Office does in the matter of pensions.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

Mr. NELSON. Let me finish. The Senator has had his time.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. NELSON. Let me finish my argument. We say to the men who are disabled in the military service of the United States, "You shall have a pension. We will allow you such and such a pension if you have been injured in the service of the United States;" but, we say, "You must submit your claim to the Commissioner of Pensions. He must pass upon it, and adjudicate, first, whether you have been in the service of the United States; second, whether you have been injured in the line of duty, and in the third place the degree of injury." He passes upon those questions.

Now, you might as well say that the pension claimants should be required to submit those questions to a court of justice to have them adjudicated as to say so in this case. The principle is exactly the same. We simply lay down in this case a certain rule, as the Pension Office has laid down rules which pension claimants are required to follow.

Pension claimants submit their claims to and they are adjudicated by the Commissioner of Pensions. We say to these parties, "We will give you this small compensation." I grant it is a small one, and I should be glad myself to have it larger. But under present legislative conditions, the approach of the close of the session, that does not seem practicable. We say to these parties, "You can have this small compensation, but you must submit your claim to the Department of Commerce and Labor and have it adjudicated there," just as in the case of pensioners.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the Senator whether the Commissioner of Pensions does not also pass upon questions of negligence—

Mr. NELSON. Certainly he does.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (continuing). In this, that in certain cases the claimant has to show to the Commissioner of Pensions by proper evidence that the affliction under which he is suffering is not due to his own misconduct.

Mr. NELSON. Yes. To his own misconduct. Under the dependent pension law of 1900 that evidence has to be passed upon in all cases. The Commissioner of Pensions has to determine whether the injury was directly caused by his military service or whether it was caused, as the law says, by his own vicious habits. There is a question of fact, and you might say a question of law, to be adjudicated. It is no more an invasion of a constitutional proposition to have the Department of Commerce and Labor investigate and adjudicate in cases of this nature than it is in the matter of pensions.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not think what the Senator has said about the administration of the pension laws is applicable. To entitle one to a pension, the claimant must show how the disability was incurred, and that it was incurred in the service, and in the line of duty. That is a plain, simple fact, and the question is whether in such cases it was incurred in the line of duty, or incurred, as the Senator says, by reason of some vicious conduct or bad habit of the claimant, or while not in the line of duty. That also is a question of fact, pure and simple.

But the question I wanted to ask the Senator goes further than that. And I want to repeat it to the Senator. He need not get excited—

Mr. NELSON. I am not excited.

Mr. FORAKER (continuing). Because I am not arguing this question in a controversial sense. I want to get the benefit of the Senator's opinion. It is provided in the bill that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall pass on the question of negligence. If he finds that the claimant incurred his injuries by reason of his own negligence, there is no liability. Is not that a question of judgment as well as fact?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. It is stated in the bill that there shall be no appeal from this decision by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. If there be no appeal, I want to know what the effect of that decision is, as to whether it is a bar or not; if the complainant, having pursued his remedy before the Secretary, and having failed, then goes into court and brings an action, whether he may be allowed to go into court, as I suppose we will authorize him to do before we get done with this legislation, to recover damages for injuries sustained, on the ground that it was the Government's negligence and not his.

Is it not a clear case of the exercise of a judicial power and the exercise of a judicial power which is final and settles once and for all and without appeal, under the language of the statute, the rights of the complainant as against the Government on that account?

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. In all deference, I suggest to the Senator, and we have all been guilty of it more or less in this controversy, that he is improperly using the words "judicial power." Judicial power is one thing; a question involving the exercise of judicial faculties is another. If men agree to submit a claim to arbitration, the arbitrators may exercise judicial faculties, but judicial power under the Constitution is quite another proposition.

Mr. FORAKER. It is for the purpose of showing that it is judicial power in an absolute and unqualified sense that I cited the provision of the proposed statute, that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is to sit in judgment, in impartial judgment, between the Government and the complainant, and his judgment, if it be against the complainant, is a final judgment against him. Does not that bar him from an appeal to the court?

Mr. FULTON. The claimant has no legal right at all.

Mr. FORAKER. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor may hold that he has no right, just as in the case I cited a moment ago, where I finally succeeded in getting authority for a constituent of mine to bring a suit in the Court of Claims. The United States attorney decided by the defense he interposed that he had no right, but fortunately the law does not authorize the district attorney to render such a judgment.

Mr. FULTON. Does not the Senator from Ohio admit that when the Government is to be sued it can stipulate the terms on which it will permit itself to be sued, and when it permits a claim to be presented against it it can state that it will recognize the claim if it is presented in a certain manner and in a certain way, and that it has an absolute right to so dictate?

Mr. FORAKER. I may concede for the sake of the argument all that the Senator suggests.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator must know—

Mr. FORAKER. That does not reach the question.

Mr. FULTON. It does reach the question, because here is a claim for which the Government is not liable. The Government may say, "If you present that to Senator CULLOM, for instance, and he is satisfied, all right, we will pay it; but if he finds that you are guilty of contributory negligence, we will not pay it." The Government has a right to do that, because it need not recognize the claim at all, but, recognizing it, it has a right to stipulate the terms on which it will pay it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the answer to that, it seems to me, is very simple and very short, so far as it is necessary to make any answer, and that is that there are two parties to this controversy, for it is a controversy in the case put by the Senator. The complainant comes and says, "I have been injured while in the employment of the Government—"

Mr. FULTON rose.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator will let me conclude.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I tried to interrupt him a moment ago and he would not let me. So I hope he will not interrupt me until I get through. I do not want to return in kind, but I do want to finish the sentence. It is not in any other spirit that I decline to yield than that.

The complainant comes and says, "I have been in the employment of the Government; I was injured while I was in that employment, without any negligence on my part; it was the fault of the Government." He submits the case to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. The Secretary acts as a judge between him and the Government, and the Secretary comes to a conclusion that the testimony is not sufficient, or that the testimony shows that he was guilty of negligence. He makes an affirmative finding of that kind.

Now, that is a decision against the complainant. It is not something that the Government has a right to do, that the complainant will be bound by, because the complainant is the other party to the suit.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think the Senator from Ohio has misconceived the purpose of the bill itself. As I read the bill it is not a controversy between the individual who is injured and the Government of the United States where the individual himself is a party to the proceeding. The bill provides that when a person is injured in Government employ under the conditions indicated in the first section, the superior officer or the superintendent of the Department where the employee who is injured is at work at once takes up that question and gathers all the facts in it and sends it to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and then it is determined whether a gratuity shall be given to the man in case of his injury or to his family in case of his death. So from first to last it is a matter of gratuity upon the part of the Government, for there is no controversy whatever, and it seems to me that the rule relating to the question of negligence is simply a rule of guidance upon the part of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

In my State and in many of the States the question of negligence is not a question of law; it is a question of fact; and the Secretary can determine that fact as easily as he can determine the broad fact whether the party whose name is presented by the superintendent or the superior officer in charge of the work has been injured at all.

So I think the whole trouble has come from the assumption on the part of Senators who raise this constitutional question that a lawsuit is to be presented immediately upon a Government employee being injured. That is not the fact.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois has interrupted me to say that I have misconceived the character of this proposed legislation in this that the bill does not provide, as I seem to have assumed, that there should be a controversy and that the complainant should be a party. The Senator said the complainant was not to be a party, within the contemplation of this proposed statute, and he cites us to some of its provisions. Let me call the Senator's attention to the provision that he has apparently overlooked, the fourth section, which provides—

That in the case of any accident which shall result in death, the persons entitled to compensation under this act, or their legal representatives, shall within ninety days after such death file with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, etc.

And then shall prosecute the claim for damages because of the death resulting from the wrongful negligence of the Government.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. FORAKER. In just a moment. If that be not a controversy to which there are two parties, then I do not know how you could provide for one. The person who is authorized by the law to settle that controversy is designated in the statute, and his judgment is to be as to whether or not there was negligence, which is not a specific fact, and his judgment is to be final; there shall be no appeal from it; and therefore the complainants who submit their case are to have judgments rendered against them, if this be a valid statute and he be validly clothed with power, that will be a bar to the prosecution of that claim before any other tribunal.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio just two questions. First, does the Senator think it is competent for the Government to grant either a gratuity, a pension, or any other privilege to any citizen?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I do. I think so without doubt.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the first question. That being true, does he think it competent for the Government to determine the conditions upon which it shall be granted? Is not that the whole question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly, within the constitutional limitations, which should always be observed; and that is all I ask, for I want a law that will stand the test. I want a law under which a constituent of mine, if I have another suffering a misfortune as one did suffer last year here in this city, can go somewhere and get relief, and get substantial relief, and get it without having to spend all he will recover for attorneys' fees and other expenses.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator says that this finding which the Secretary of Commerce and Labor would make would be a bar to any other action on the part of the claimant.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I asked if it would not be a bar. It says there shall be no appeal.

Mr. FULTON. But what other action has he? He has none.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the complainant says, "I was not guilty of negligence." The Secretary of Commerce and Labor says, "You were guilty of negligence, and I so find." The complainant says, "I want to appeal; I want to go to some other tribunal." The law says you shall not go to any other place. It is a good deal like the statement of the President in a letter read here, in which he said, "I do not want any court of inquiry; I have already found the facts."

I think when the complainant is injured, as my constituent was last year, he ought to have the right to be heard and ought not to be cut off and then told, "This is a mere privilege which we have given you." I think we should provide a just remedy for the complainant. He is the party who needs our protection.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HALE. I do not want to take the Senator off the floor, but I wish he would yield to me to make a statement in regard to the order of business.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. The Senate to-day has made this progress: After the House agreed to the conference report on the great sundry civil appropriation bill the Senate took up and passed upon that report, so that that bill has now gone to the enrolling clerks.

Mr. CULLOM. The report having been agreed to by both Houses.

Mr. HALE. It has been agreed to by both Houses, and will be ready for the Presidential signature. The committee of conference between the two Houses has been in session nearly all the day upon the only other great appropriation bill still held back, the deficiency appropriation bill. The committee has finally agreed upon that bill and I am ready to submit the report, which takes it away from Congress and passes the bill, but for one condition. A provision in that bill covers the amounts needed during the year and until the next session of Congress under the public-buildings bill, aggregating something like $12,000,000, distributed in detail, as reported by the Treasury Department from the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. When the bill as reported passes, the money necessary for the different objects embraced in the public-buildings bill will be appropriated and will be expended during the next year.

I should under these conditions submit the report on that bill at once, but I am held up by the fact that the report on the public buildings bill itself, which has passed the Senate, is awaiting the action of the House. It has not yet had upon it the action and approval of that body, so the public buildings bill, which is the basis of the appropriations contained in the deficiency bill, has not yet passed both Houses.

I have sent to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House, who has charge of the measure there, in order to learn whether that report agreed to would come to this body either this afternoon or during the evening, so that I might then report and have the Senate pass upon the deficiency appropriation bill, embracing the money needed for public buildings during the year. I have received a reply from him that in the condition of the business in the House he will not only not be able to take up the bill and pass it this afternoon, but he can give no encouragement that it can be passed before to-morrow morning.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator refers to the public buildings bill?

Mr. HALE. To the public buildings bill, which of course is the foundation of the appropriations under that head in the deficiency bill.

Therefore, under these conditions, as the Senate has been here in a long session since 11 o'clock, I am prepared now, unless there is some necessity for an executive session, to submit a motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will not press the motion.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] endeavored to submit a couple of resolutions in the morning hour. The morning hour, however, was consumed in the consideration of other business. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HALE. I did not expect that so reasonable a proposition as I made would be unattended by expostulation. I will withdraw the motion for the moment, but I know that the majority of the Senators desire to be relieved from further practically useless duty here during this hot day. While I hold the floor, I will yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

RIGHTS TO MINE COAL IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I send two resolutions to the desk, which I ask may be read and agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the resolutions be read, subject to objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma submits a resolution, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas an act of Congress, approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act giving, upon conditions and limitations therein contained, the assent of the United States to certain leases of rights to mine coal in the Choctaw Nation," contains the following quotation, to wit: "That no higher rate per ton than the average rate per ton for which such coal has for the next six months next preceding the 1st day of September, 1890, been sold by said lessees, or those holding under them, shall, during said thirty years, be exacted of any purchaser, except upon the written permission of the Secretary of the Interior: "Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be respectfully requested to advise the Senate whether the provision cited in the preamble herofore has ever been, either directly or indirectly, repealed by Congress;

2. If not repealed, whether the written permission therein provided for has ever been given either by himself or by any of his predecessors, and if given, to furnish a copy of the same;

3. If no such written permission has ever been given, the Secretary of the Interior is directed to investigate and advise the Senate as to the average price of coal during the six months designated in said provision, and also during the six months next preceding the adoption of this resolution; and

4. If it be found that a higher price for said coal has been charged than that prescribed by the provision above set out, the Secretary of the Interior is directed to furnish all available data in his Department to the Attorney-General of the United States and otherwise assist him in all necessary legal proceedings to enjoin the coal companies involved from continuing to charge such excessive price for coal and to recover the excessive price heretofore charged for the benefit of the Chickasaw and Choctaw tribes of Indians.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object to the present consideration of the resolution. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator from Maine to allow me—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the request as to this resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GORE. I have sent another resolution to the desk, which I ask may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, that the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to ascertain whether the provision of an act of Congress approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act giving, upon conditions and limitations therein contained, the assent of the United States to certain leases of rights to mine coal in the Choctaw Nation," said provision being as follows, to wit: That no higher rate per ton than the average rate per ton for which such coal has for the six months next preceding the 1st day of September, 1890, been sold by said lessees, or those holding under them, shall, during said thirty years, be exacted of any purchaser, except upon the written permission of the Secretary of the Interior, is still in force; and if so, whether it has been complied with and is being complied with or not; and if not, the Attorney-General is directed to institute and conduct all necessary legal proceedings for the enforcement of said provision and to recover the excessive price for coal, if any, heretofore charged, for the benefit of the Chickasaw and Choctaw tribes of Indians.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALE. Let it go to the same committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution, and it will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. BACON. By courtesy of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask, by unanimous consent, may be considered at this time.

The joint resolution (S. R. 95) relating to the assignment of space in the House Office Building was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. BACON. The joint resolution relates exclusively to the House Office Building. It is a matter that the House can not control by its rules, because the House is not a continuing body, and therefore this matter requires the action of Congress.

Mr. HALE. It will give rise to no debate, I take it?

Mr. BACON. I do not think it will. I suppose it will not be necessary to read the joint resolution, as I have stated the object of it. It relates exclusively to the other House.

Mr. HALE. Let the joint resolution be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the joint resolution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the joint resolution is to be read, I will object to its present consideration.

Mr. HALE. Then I will insist on my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary is proceeding to read the joint resolution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will withdraw my objection.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the joint resolution, which is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the assignment of rooms in the Office Building of the House of Representatives, which shall hereafter be designated as the House Office Building, heretofore made by resolution or order of the House of Representatives, shall continue in force until modified or changed in accordance with the provisions of this resolution, and the room so assigned to any Representative shall continue to be held by such Representative as his individual office room so long as he shall remain a Member or Member-elect of the House of Representatives, or until he shall relinquish the same, subject, however, to the provisions of this resolution, and no Representative shall allow his office room to be used for any other purpose.

Any Member or Member-elect of the House of Representatives may file with the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds a request in writing that any individual office room be assigned to him whenever it shall become vacant. If only one such request has been made for any room which shall at any time have become vacant, the room shall be assigned as requested. If two or more requests are made for the same vacant room, preference shall be given to the Representative making the request who has been longest in continuous service as a Member and Member-elect of the House of Representatives. If two or more Representatives with equal length of continuous service, or two or more Representatives-elect make request for the same room, preference shall be given to the one first preferring his request. A Representative or Representative-elect making request for the assignment of a vacant room may withdraw the same at any time, and no one shall have pending at the same time more than one such request. The assignment of a new room to a Representative, upon his request, or the appointment of any Representative having an individual office room as chairman of a committee having a committee room, shall act as a relinquishment by him of the room previously assigned to him.

Representatives having rooms assigned to them in the foregoing manner may exchange rooms one with another, but such exchange shall be valid only so long as both Members making the exchange shall remain continuously Members or Members-elect of the House of Representatives. The Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds shall keep a record of the assignment of rooms heretofore or hereafter made, exchanges which may be made, requests for vacant rooms which may be filed, and the assignment thereof, which record shall be open for the inspection of Representatives or Representatives-elect of the House.

In the matter of the assignment of rooms under this resolution, Delegates in Congress and the Commissioners from Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands shall be treated the same as Representatives.

The assignment and reassignment of the rooms and other space in the House Office Building shall be subject to the control of the House of Representatives by rule, resolution, order, or otherwise. Nothing in this resolution shall be construed to affect or repeal the provisions of law heretofore enacted placing said House Office Building under the control of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, subject to the approval and direction of the Commissions provided for respectively in the act of March 3, 1903, and the act of March 4, 1907.

Unoccupied space in said building shall be assigned by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, under the direction of the Commission and subject to the control of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator from Georgia if the joint resolution has passed the House of Representatives?

Mr. BACON. It has passed the House of Representatives, and I introduce it for the purpose of having certain action upon it before we adjourn.

Mr. HALE. Of course it is a House matter.

Mr. BACON. Yes, exclusively; and the only reason—

Mr. HALE. And it has passed the House?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the joint resolution had better go to the Committee on Rules. I was asked by the chairman of the House committee if the Committee on Rules would not consider the joint resolution when it reached the Senate from the House. As I understand, it has not yet reached the Senate from the House. I think it ought to be considered by the Senate Committee on Rules.

Mr. BACON. I may have had misinformation from the Member of the House who gave me the joint resolution and requested that I bring it to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. It has not yet reached the Senate, although it may have passed the House.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, I will ask that it lie on the table for the present.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it had better be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BACON. Very well, let it be referred to the Committee on Rules. That course is satisfactory to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HALE. I do not yield for debate. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am perfectly well aware—that is the reason I ask the Senator kindly to yield to me—that a motion to adjourn is not debatable. I merely want to state two or three things, upon which I shall appeal to the Senator from Maine not at this hour to move to adjourn. In the first place, as the Senator knows, this morning one hour and a half was taken up in the reading of the Journal—

Mr. HALE. Not so much as that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; about that. I marked it down at the time. That was the second time this session that the Journal has been completely read; usually its reading is dispensed with. Only on last Saturday and to-day has any one insisted on its being read in full, and only on Saturday and to-day has precious time thus been needlessly wasted.

Mr. KEAN. I do not think that is an accurate statement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In the second place, when the report on the sundry civil bill, of which the Senator spoke, came to the Senate, not only was the report read, but for the first time in many years—certainly for the first time in the memory of the veteran Senator who is chairman of the committee [Mr. Allison]—the amendments were required to be read. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] insisted on those amendments being read. This took up the time for another hour and more.

Now, we are in the midst of the consideration here—the Senator has been out, and of course perhaps is not aware of that fact—of an exceedingly important measure, a measure which, in some particulars, is as important as any measure that has come before this Congress. It is perfectly patent that Congress is proceeding with speed, and that if the Senate adjourns now for the day in the midst of the consideration of this bill, the bill's life is endangered, if, in fact, it is not certainly defeated by the lapse of time, in view of the apparent determination to adjourn both Houses sine die as early as possible.

For that reason, in view of the fact that, although we met at 11 o'clock this morning, all but a little of the time to-day has been consumed in extraordinary proceedings, the reading of the Journal, and the reading of amendments to appropriation bills—which has never been done before—and that it is now a quarter past 4, I appeal to the Senator not to insist on his motion at this hour, because it would be hazardous to adjourn at this hour.

Mr. HALE. That is all in the discretion of the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is so.

Mr. HALE. I am told that there are some appointments which should be referred to committees, and therefore I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That will be the same thing—result in the same thing.

Mr. HALE. The same thing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the motion will not carry.

Mr. DEPEW. I appeal to the Senator from Maine either that we may go on with this bill or that an hour may be appointed to-morrow for the completion of it.

Mr. HALE. I must insist on my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "ayes" have it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask for a division.

The question being put, there were, on division—ayes 27, noes 8.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CULBERSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Chair how many seconds the call for the yeas and nays?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Six.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is that a quorum?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is not a quorum.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the regular order, Mr. President. Some things can be done without the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know; but the Senate has business to consider, and I insist that we go on with the business before us.

Mr. HALE. That is what we are doing now.

Mr. ALDRICH. I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island will state his question of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. A division having disclosed the absence of a quorum, no business is in order except a call of the Senate or a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 26, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The disbursing officer shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine for the faithful performance of his duties, said bond to be approved by said Secretary. The Secretary of the Treasury shall advance to said officer from time to time, under such regulations as he may prescribe, a sum of money from the appropriation for the Government exhibit herein authorized, not exceeding at any one time three-fourths of the penalty of his bond, to enable him to pay the expenses of said exhibit as authorized by the United States Government board herein created. "Sec. 14. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause suitable buildings to be erected on the site of said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition for said Government exhibit, including an irrigation and biograph building; also a fisheries building complete, with mechanical apparatus; also buildings for the exhibits of the district of Alaska, the Territory of Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands; also buildings for such other purposes in connection with the exhibits herein authorized as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury may be necessary. Said buildings shall be erected from plans prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to contract for said buildings in the same manner and under the same regulations as for other public buildings of the United States, but the contract for said buildings, including the preparation of ground therefor and the approaches thereto and the interior and exterior decorative wiring and lighting thereof shall not exceed the sum of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to dispose of said buildings, or the materials composing the same, at the close of the exposition, giving preference to the State of Washington or to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition corporation or to the city of Seattle to purchase the same at an appraised value to be ascertained in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine.

"Sec. 15. That the allotment of space for exhibitors in the building or buildings erected under authority of this act for the use of the district of Alaska, the Territory of Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands shall be done and performed without charge to exhibitors by the Government board created by this act.

"Sec. 16. "SEC. 18. That the United States shall not in any manner or under any circumstances be liable for any of the acts, doings, or representations of said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition (a corporation), its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or for service, salaries, labor, or wages of said officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or for any subscriptions to the capital stock, or for any stock certificates, bonds, mortgages, or obligations of any kind issued by said corporation, or for any debts, liabilities, or expenses, of any kind or nature whatever, attending such exposition corporation, or accruing by reason of the same.

"SEC. 19. That nothing in this act shall be construed so as to create any liability upon the part of the United States, directly or indirectly, for any debt or obligation incurred or for any claim for aid or pecuniary assistance from Congress or the Treasury of the United States in support or liquidation of any debts or obligations created by said United States Government board in excess of appropriations herein made.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 163: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"INTERNATIONAL IRRIGATION CONGRESS, ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX.

"SEC. 21. To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the city of Albuquerque, N. Mex., to assist in defraying the expenses of the International Irrigation Congress, to be held in that city commencing September twenty-ninth, nineteen hundred and eight, thirty thousand dollars.

J. A. TAWNEY,
WALTER I. SMITH,
JOHN J. FITZGERALD,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the House, in explanation of the conference report, that this is a final report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and as a result of the conference the bill now carries more than $6,000,000 less than it did when it was originally reported to the House from the Senate. In other words, as a result of the conference, $6,000,000 have been eliminated from the sundry civil appropriation bill. In round numbers, it carried $118,000,000 when it came to the House from the Senate. It now carries, in round numbers, about $112,000,000.

The principal Senate amendments that have been modified or taken out of the bill entirely are two amendments for new revenue-cutter boats which were not authorized by law, each authorizing the appropriation of $250,000. Then the amendment authorizing the construction of a light-ship off the coast of Florida was so modified that the bill now authorizes the construction of a gas and whistle buoy, at a cost of $20,000, while the light-ship was to cost $150,000, as I now recall it. The amendment authorizing the construction of a light-house tender at San Francisco, Cal., and appropriating $215,000 for that purpose has been eliminated. Another important amendment was that increasing the amount carried in the bill as it passed the House for barracks and quarters for the seacoast artillery. The Senate amendment increased the appropriation for this purpose as it passed the House $750,000. All of that amount has been eliminated with the exception of $151,000, which the House conferees finally agreed to give for barracks and quarters at Fort Crockett, at Galveston, Tex. Another important amendment was the one authorizing the purchase of two vessels to be owned and operated by the Government for the purpose of transporting supplies and materials and equipment used in the construction, or to be used in the construction, of the Panama Canal.

That provision, as it was reported to the House from the Senate, has been taken out of the bill entirely, and a substitute has been inserted in lieu of the Senate amendment, which substitute I will not stop to read, but which I can state briefly. Instead of the Government buying these ships and operating them as Government vessels, the amendment which has been agreed to authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to purchase these ships for the Panama Railroad Company, to be controlled and used by the Panama Railroad Company in like manner as it uses the ships that the railroad company now owns, including the transportation of materials, supplies, equipments, and employees of the Panama Canal Commission, and then there is this important proviso:

Provided, That when said ships are no longer required for use as aforesaid in the transportation of supplies, equipment, and material for the construction of the Panama Canal, the same shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Navy for use as colliers or other auxiliary vessels belonging to the Navy.

To that the Senate finally agreed.

Mr. FINLEY. To what extent does the Government pay for the cost of these vessels?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Government will pay the entire cost of the vessels, $1,550,000, which is $50,000 less than the Senate amendment authorizes.

Mr. FINLEY. Do I understand the gentleman that the vessels will be nominally owned by the Panama Railroad Company?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; they will be actually owned by the Government, but the purchase is made for the Panama Railroad Company, and then they are to be controlled and used by the Panama Railroad Company the same as the vessels now owned by the Panama Railroad Company are operated and controlled.

Mr. FINLEY. To what extent does the Government own the Panama Railroad?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Government owns the Panama Railroad Company.

Mr. FINLEY. Entirely?

Mr. TAWNEY. Entirely. We own all the stock of the Panama Railroad Company, every share of it. There is not a share of the stock owned by anybody else. There were two reasons for the position taken by the conferees on the part of the House in respect to this particular item. The conferees on the part of the House resisted the Senate amendment on the ground that if the Government owned these vessels there would be no return cargo, for the reason that we could not carry miscellaneous cargo outside of the Government miscellaneous cargo. Another fact was that in going from American ports to Colon or to Panama these vessels could not carry any miscellaneous cargo outside of the Government miscellaneous cargo. The ships can be operated more economically by the Panama Railroad Company, and they can be operated under the same management that is operating the other vessels which are owned by the Government and operated by the Panama Railroad Company.

Mr. FINLEY. Just there. Under the arrangement as carried in the conference report, will it be possible for these vessels provided for to carry as a cargo other than Government supplies and material?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; the same as the Panama Railroad Company's vessels now are doing.

Mr. FINLEY. They carry other cargoes?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; and when coming from Panama to American ports they have a return cargo.

Mr. FINLEY. Why the necessity for this when the Government owns both the railroad and the ships?

Mr. TAWNEY. Because the ships owned and operated by the Panama Canal Company are owned and operated by a private corporation, and while the Government owns the stock of the company, the company is operated under a charter originally obtained from the State of New York.

Mr. FINLEY. As a matter of fact, then, in legal parlance, the vessels will be loaned or hired to the Panama Railroad Company?

Mr. TAWNEY. The effect of this will be equivalent to the chartering of these vessels to the Panama Railroad Company, and when they are no longer required for service in the transportation of materials and supplies to Panama they are to be transferred to the Secretary of the Navy as colliers or other naval auxiliary vessels.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, what does the Panama Railroad Company give to the Government for the use of these ships? Anything?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Panama Railroad Company pays the Government nothing, not any more than it pays the Government for the use of the ships it now operates.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that, but I understand the Panama Railroad Company owns certain ships of its own. Now, the Government charters to this Panama Railroad Company certain ships that are to be provided for under the provisions of the bill. Now, what advantage will the Panama Railroad Company get out of that operation?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, if the Panama Railroad Company gets any advantage whatever out of the operation of these vessels, it will inure to the Government, for the revenues of the Panama Railroad Company over and above the operating expenses belong to the Government of the United States by virtue of its being the sole and only stockholder of the company; and there is another advantage which the Government will get, I will say, that under this plan these ships can be operated at least without a loss, for the reason that now the ships of the Panama Railroad Company are not of sufficient capacity to transport all the materials and supplies for the Panama Canal which we are shipping down there. If, however, the Government operated the ships, they would be, as the chief purchasing agent of the Panama Canal Commission said to me last week, a "white elephant" that could not be operated except at an enormous loss by the Government, and it is to save that loss and also to give the railroad company the facilities necessary to transport all the material possible in the construction of the canal that the House conferees have proposed the change in the proposition as it passed the Senate.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, what control will the Government of the United States have over the operations of the ships provided for and what regulations of freight rates, I mean particularly in the matter of freight rates?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the rates charged by the Panama Railroad Company are fixed under the direction of the board of directors. The board of directors consists of the Secretary of War, the president of the Panama Canal Commission, and other Government officials. The directors of the Panama Canal Company, with the exception, I think, of one man, are all Government officials.

Mr. FINLEY. In the event these vessels are lost after they are chartered to the Panama Canal Company, whose loss will it be?

Mr. TAWNEY. It will be the Government's loss, just the same as if we lost any ships now owned and operated by the Panama Railroad Company it would be a Government loss, because our ownership of the stock of the railroad company makes the Government the owner of the property of the Panama Railroad Company. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the huge total of this bill indicates that it is very properly and very consistently an integral part of the huge total of the expenditures of the Sixtieth Congress. This Congress has demonstrated that it can spend money at the rate of $40,000,000 a minute without a blink of the eye or a pang of conscience, and now, with a brief forty-minute discussion and without exciting the interest of this House, another tremendous appropriation bill is about to be passed. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, vigilant and active in his effort to guard the Treasury of the people, has actually congratulated the House upon the fact that he has been able to reduce that appropriation from $118,000,000 to $112,000,000—a mere bagatelle.

One item of that bill particularly, Mr. Speaker—that which is described as Senate amendment numbered 162, providing for the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition to be held at Seattle, in the State of Washington, and which I presume will meet the approval of a majority of the Members of this House—in my judgment ought not to be in the bill. The country is exposition tired. Hardly a Congress has met and adjourned for twenty years that has not been called upon to make large appropriations for expositions. We are suffocated with them. The people are tired of them. They will not attend them. They are nothing but a transparent effort to boom real estate in certain localities, and they succeed in booming real estate in localities where they are backed by sufficient political influence to open the doors of the Treasury, as evidently will be the case on this occasion.

My recollection is that in the last twenty years we have had two expositions on the Pacific coast—one in San Francisco and one in Portland—and this one in Seattle will be the third, all inaugurated and supported by Government appropriations. There have been in the South one at New Orleans, one at Atlanta, and one at Nashville; in the Middle States one at St. Louis, one at Chicago, and one at Buffalo, and then we had that calamitous venture at Jamestown. The expositions that have been supported by appropriations from the Government have been distributed over the country, and the people have lost interest in them.

This money ought not to be taken away from the taxpayers of Texas, of New York, of Massachusetts, and of Virginia, and of other sections of this country in order to boom the real estate of a city which, if half the tales that are told about it are true, is already having a wonderful degree of prosperity. We are getting the expositions down to the county-fair basis, and if we mean to continue it, if it is to be adopted as a permanent policy of the Government, then let us have a general statute declaring that when a certain number of high-bred bulls and extraordinary pumpkins can be guaranteed for exhibition, the Government will contribute a proportionate share of the expense of maintaining the exposition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in contrast with the exposition bearing this extraordinary name, "the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, to be held at Seattle," and so forth, I want to call the attention of the House to what one small community in a frontier State has done. In the city of San Antonio, for nine years, the people, dipping down into their own pockets for the capital with which to organize and control and manage the exposition, have held an annual international fair; and let me say, sir, in passing, that the word "international" does not figure only on their letter heads, but it is in fact an international fair. For nine years, with the exception of the years in which there were Government-aided fairs in this country, at Buffalo, St. Louis, and Atlanta, the Federal Government of Mexico has made an important exhibit at the San Antonio fair, one which in the amount of stuff on exhibition, one which for its dignity and its importance, one which for the variety of resources shown, and the industrial development displayed, has compared favorably with the exposition of its manufactures and industries made by that same great Government in the city of St. Louis during the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. Each year a committee of gentlemen—possibly, as was suggested by a friend in my vicinity just now, they may have been guilty of treason in that, but I do not know—but each year a committee of gentlemen from the city of San Antonio, paying their own expenses, asking nothing from the Federal Treasury, equipped merely with a letter of introduction from the Secretary of State of the United States and from the governor of the State of Texas, have gone to the capital of the Republic of Mexico, have interviewed the wonderful man who presides over that country, his secretary of the interior, and other officials, and have interested them in the enterprise and have induced a splendid exhibit.

That exhibition will be given again this year, and those of you who do not find it convenient to go to the Pacific coast are invited to come to San Antonio and see how a great international fair can be given by unaided enterprise of a few energetic American citizens. [Applause.] Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we have national exhibits at that fair.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Missouri for his courtesy, but three minutes will not suffice to tell of the glories of the great San Antonio International Fair. I will have to renew my invitation and ask you to come and see for yourselves. I can not tell half its glories in the forty minutes' debate allowed on this bill.

But I wish to say not only do we have international exhibits from the Republic of Mexico as a Republic, but from San Juan Bautista, Coahuila, and Tamaulipas, and other States of that great Republic; and we also, at our own expense, make exhibits of certain industrial features of the Government of the United States. We have built the necessary equipment, and each year have an attractive exhibit by the biological bureaus of the Government Departments of the city of Washington. I yield back my time to the gentleman from Missouri. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has ten minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Missouri also has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret that the House conferees thought it necessary to yield on Senate amendments 101 and 102. The first provides for a survey in Galveston Harbor, the second for a diversion of money for levees on the west bank of the Mississippi River. The chief reason for my regret is that such yielding is a gross injustice to the Members of this House. It was not until after long consideration that it was concluded best to allow surveys to be provided for only in the regular river and harbor bill. In that way every Member of the House and the Senate might be treated fairly and with equality; in that way the Engineer Corps might be allowed to complete the projects already commenced. So we have refused for the last four or five years, save in the case of grave danger to life or property, to authorize any surveys except in the river and harbor bill. But it appears that privilege belongs not only to those who have royal prerogatives, but even to legislators in the Senate. Here this provision, which would have been impossible in the House, has been tacked on in the Senate, and the House conferees have found it necessary to yield in order to secure the passage of the bill. I will not vote for the adoption of a conference report including these items; but at this late day I do not feel like urging others to stand by me in voting against the bill.

I want to give due credit to the members of the House Committee on Appropriations for what they have done in seeking to secure economy in expenditures. What is the reason why we are deploring extravagance? The main reason is the system under which we are working, a system under which one House, charged originally with all responsibility for initiating and passing measures for raising the revenue and disbursing it, must submit their measures to another House that has unlimited authority to make additions, and has added $73,400,000 to the regular appropriation bills at this session. This is the evil in the system, that another House, with different ideas and more readily reached by those who represent local or special interests, has unlimited right to add to all appropriation bills any amount its members choose.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman if he will include the public buildings bill it will amount to $83,000,000.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The figure I gave does not include the public buildings bill. Under the English system the Lords do not even provide for their own clerical assistance, and it is left to the Commons to determine what they shall receive. The upper house can only reject items, or, rather, bills, in toto. The same relation is maintained between the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate in France. But here what is being done to check these large expenditures in order to bring them within reasonable limits? No one should try to make any political capital on the subject of these large appropriations. All parties alike are responsible for this situation. It is further true there is no active sentiment in the country for economy and there are powerful forces behind these numerous demands upon the Treasury—demands for extensions of the activities of the Government, for divers undertakings which heretofore have been prosecuted by municipalities and by States.

There is another contributing condition, which arises from the relation of the Treasury Department to Congress in the very first instance. Estimates are not controlled by any one responsible head, but representatives of any bureau or of any Department can come here and before House committees assert their claims to larger appropriations. There is, besides, no correlation between the committee which provides the revenue and those committees which expend it. It is not to be wondered at in this year 1908, with all these defects in our system, with the growing wealth of the country, with the demands everywhere for these extravagant expenditures, that the appropriations for the coming year should mount up to more than a billion dollars; and it is an impressive lesson to this House that we should call for a halt. [Loud applause.] The first place for action, as I maintain, is not to yield the prerogative of the House to the Senate. [Applause.]

Let the relations between the upper House and the lower House, as they are sometimes called, be fixed, as they should be. Let this House, which is responsible to the country for the initiative of measures for revenue, be also responsible for the aggregate amount of appropriations. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question, and I will lend him a minute to answer it. Does the gentleman believe that that state of affairs that he so much desires, and that we all desire about appropriations, will ever be brought until there is a House elected here that is willing to stay until the beginning of the short session rather than be overridden by the Senate?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, I do not regard that question as particularly bearing on this subject.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is what you are making a speech about.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I have not found, in my experience here, any difference between the two sides as regards staying here until the short session begins.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I was not saying anything about one side or two sides or three sides. I was asking you how you were ever going to attain the end that you seek to attain.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I think the more appropriate way is for the House to insist on its prerogatives, and especially that no Member of this House, when he is disappointed about an appropriation, shall go over to the Senate and have it tacked on there. That is one of the beginnings of extravagance.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That will be done when human nature has been entirely remodeled.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I think this House might well take the initiative in beginning the remodeling of legislative human nature by rejecting any item that is put on in that way.

Mr. DOUGLAS. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thought you were going to ask me a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; I wanted to ask a question of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I can not yield to the gentleman for that purpose. I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the character of this Government is not likely to be changed overnight, and the Republican party will hardly be able in this campaign to escape responsibility for its actions in this House by complaining of the Constitution under which we are operating. The Senate is complaining that the House does not treat it with respect; that it sends legislation here from year to year which receives no consideration. It has an equal right to propose amendments to appropriation bills, and this House can not dodge behind that right in order to escape responsibility for what the party in power does. Before the Congress adjourns a statement will be made showing just what this Congress has done in the way of appropriations, and then gentlemen will be calling to the mountains and rocks to fall on them and hide them from the wrath of their constituents, and will be glad to have some excuse to justify the action of the majority in this session of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio complains of the conferees receding upon two items to which he has referred. One provides for a survey of Galveston Harbor, the cost of which is to be paid from an appropriation already made for an improvement there; the other diverts $10,000 of an appropriation of $500,000 to do some work of an extraordinary character.

The House conferees had to consider 164 amendments made by the Senate to this bill, which amendments carried close to $12,000,000. It was necessary that some concessions be made by the House as well as by the Senate, and I wish to say that as these two items did not carry a single dollar additional of appropriation, the House conferees were well justified in yielding upon them, rather than upon some items that would add to the burdens under which some people will suffer. The result of the conference between the two Houses has been that of the $12,000,000 added by the Senate the House has succeeded in reducing by $8,000,000, in round numbers, the amount added by the Senate to the bill.

I undertake to say that those who will give careful attention to the report of the conference committee, and who will analyze what has been done, will believe that the House conferees were justified in acting as they have. They were not in a position to say to the Senate conferees, You must wait until the House is ready to prepare a general bill, that everybody may be taken care of, before we shall consider items in this bill upon their merits. They were in the bill. They could not have been put in the bill under our rules, but they were in the bill, placed there regularly under the Senate rules. The conferees of the House could not raise the question as to the right or the power or the jurisdiction of the Senate to place such items upon the bill. It would have been a matter of congratulation for the House if the only items the House conferees had been compelled to yield upon were items which would have made possible only the utilization of some of the money appropriated for a little broader purpose than that intended by the House. Had that been possible, then this bill would have carried $12,000,000 less than the Senate proposed, instead of $8,000,000 less than the Senate proposed. While I have no desire that one committee of the House shall encroach upon the jurisdiction of another committee, yet I hardly feel that when a bill carrying $112,000,000 is to be passed upon finally by the House, that any Member would be justified in refusing his assent to the passage of the bill merely because in two items the House consented that the money appropriated should be expended for purposes broader than the language contained in the bill when it passed the House.

Later on, Mr. Speaker, I hope to present a statement which I believe will startle the country regarding the extravagance of this Congress, and I shall challenge gentlemen on that side to evade their responsibility by hiding behind the action of the Senate. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the House heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], a member of the Committee on Rules, announce amid Republican applause that a Republican House would legislate when it pleased and as it pleased, and that it would take full responsibility for what it does and what it fails to do. I ask that the boast then made be now lived up to. Do not try to claim credit for the good things and escape the responsibility for the bad. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] could testify most eloquently as to the amount of support he has had from the majority side in trying to reduce appropriations. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Is it possible that a party that levies taxes, not to raise revenue, not for the purpose of providing means for administering the Government, but for an entirely different purpose, and then makes its expenditures without any regard to the revenues, should conduct the business of the country upon business principles? No individual would dare run his business as this Congress runs the business of the nation. There is no budget brought in, there is no attempt to estimate what the income of the Government will be and then to fit the expenditures to that income, but there is a general grab on the part of the different chairmen of the different appropriating committees to get their full amount and to let the Treasury take care of itself. Here is the real trouble. The fact that there is no opportunity for a proper, scientific discussion of the budget and no consideration of expenditures in accordance with the income is the reason that to-day, with a diminishing Treasury balance, we are having an increased amount of appropriations. Then the suggestion made by the gentleman from Missouri, which was ignored by the gentleman from Ohio, has much of force in it. Jefferson pointed out many many years ago that the length of tenure of Senators would result in giving them an undue power over the House.

The House is always anxious to adjourn, and in the closing days, when it comes to an issue between the two branches, the fact that the House has a political reason for going home makes it willing to yield to the Senate, that has no such reason, and therefore we see the continued adding of appropriations by the other end of the Capitol. It was never contemplated that the right of amendment should be carried to the extent that it has been carried by the Senate in regard to appropriation bills. The makers of the Constitution looked to the House of Representatives to guard the purse strings of the nation, and I repeat that the party in control of the House can not escape its responsibility. If the present system is bad, you have made the system, or at least you permit it to continue. You have the votes; you have challenged us and thrown in our faces the fact that you had the power. Make your answer to an outraged people as to the extravagance of expenditure, and do not undertake to shift the burden upon this side. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas for a question.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to amendment numbered 106 in the bill. I would like to have a definite statement from him as to the limitation proposed by that amendment. It occurs to me, in reading it, that if this amendment is permitted to stand, it will suspend the work of building barracks and quarters at artillery posts. If that is the case, the amendment ought to go out.

Mr. TAWNEY. The amendment was not offered by the Senate for that purpose. It is not agreed to by the House conferees with any thought that it would have that effect, and, as I read the amendment, it does not and will not have that effect. The House provision, which the Senate amendment was intended to limit, was the amount that could be expended for quarters for officers in the Army, from general officers down to quarters for the lieutenants.

Heretofore there has been no limitation whatever upon the amount that could be expended for quarters for officers of the Army, and we found at this session of Congress that at one point in the United States there was an item for quarters for a brigadier-general at a cost of $25,000, which did not include plumbing, or lighting, or heating, and the committee concluded that it was about time some limitation should be placed upon the cost of quarters. The Senate took that amendment, and in reading it came to the conclusion that the limitation did not apply to quarters for officers of the coast artillery, and put in amendment 106 in this language, "or for barracks and quarters for the artillery." There is nothing in the amendment that puts any limitation at all upon barracks. It only has relation to the next paragraph, "for the erection of barracks and quarters for the artillery in connection with the adopted projects for sea-coast defenses." The limitation is intended, and I think will have the only effect of applying to the amount to be expended for quarters in both the Army and the sea-coast artillery. The House provision was intended to apply to both, but the Senate amendment makes that intention certain. The gentleman from Kansas need not fear that there will be any interference at all with the construction of barracks.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I just want to add a word more as to the necessity of being careful in the language that is used in such an amendment. In speaking of quarters for the officers in all appropriation bills and in all legislation, the term has a specific meaning, and the words used are "quarters for the officers." Whenever the term "barracks and quarters" is used in all legislation it has reference to barracks and quarters for enlisted men.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, there is no limitation whatever upon the cost of barracks, and, that being so, the language or word "barracks" in this paragraph has no relation whatever, and will not operate as a limitation at all upon the construction of barracks. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote on the report, which I hope will be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 135, nays 123, answered "present" 8, not voting 121, as follows:

NAVIGATION LAWS.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take up the bill H. R. 21815 for passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair). The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21815) to amend the laws relating to navigation, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2792 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended by adding thereto, thirty days after the passage of this act, the following:

"Any passenger vessel engaged triweekly or oftener in trade between ports of the United States and foreign ports shall be exempt from entrance and clearance fees and tonnage taxes while such service triweekly or oftener is maintained."

Sec. 2. That section 4435 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows sixty days after the passage of this act:

"Sec. 4438. The boards of local inspectors shall license and classify the masters, chief mates, and second and third mates, if in charge of a watch, engineers, and pilots of all steam vessels, and the masters of sail vessels of over 700 gross tons, and all other vessels of over 100 gross tons carrying passengers for hire. It shall be unlawful to employ any person or for any person to serve as a master, chief mate, engineer, or pilot of any steamer or as master of any sail vessel of over 700 gross tons or of any other vessel of over 100 gross tons carrying passengers for hire who is not licensed by the inspectors; and anyone violating this section shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense."

Sec. 3. That section 4467 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 4467. The master of every passenger steamer shall keep a correct count of all the passengers received and delivered from day to day, which count shall be open to the inspection of the inspectors and officers of the customs at all times, and the aggregate number of passengers shall be furnished to inspectors as often as called for: Provided, however, That a correct list of passengers received and delivered from day to day shall be kept, instead of a correct count, by the masters of seagoing passenger steamers in the coastwise trade and by the masters of passenger steamers on the Great Lakes on routes exceeding 300 miles: Provided further, That nothing herein shall affect existing laws relative to vessels running between this country and foreign ports."

Sec. 4. That section 4468 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 4468. Every master of any passenger steamer who fails, through negligence or design, to keep a count or list of passengers as required by the preceding section shall be liable to a penalty of $100."

Sec. 5. That whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States that yachts belonging to any regularly organized yacht club of the United States are allowed to arrive at and depart from any foreign port and to cruise in the waters of such port without entering or clearing at the custom-house thereof and without the payment of any charges for entering or clearing, dues, duty per ton, tonnage taxes or charges for cruising licenses, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may authorize and direct the customs authorities at the various ports and supports of entry of the United States to allow yachts from such foreign port belonging to any regularly organized yacht club thereof to arrive at and depart from any port or support of the United States and to cruise in waters of the United States without the payment of any charges for entering or clearing, dues, duty per ton, or tonnage taxes, but the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may, in his discretion, direct that such foreign yachts shall be required to obtain licenses to cruise in a form prescribed by him, before they shall be allowed under the provisions of this act to cruise in waters of the United States. Such licenses shall be issued without cost to such yachts and shall prescribe such limitations as to length of time, direction, and place of cruising and action, and such other particulars as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may deem proper: Provided, That the privileges of this section shall not extend to any yacht built outside of the United States and owned, chartered, or used by a citizen of the United States unless such ownership or charter was acquired prior to February 5, 1897.

Sec. 6. That section 4216 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

Sec. 7. That thirty days after the passage of this act if a shipowner desires to use for the purpose of a private code any rockets, lights, or other similar signals, he may register those signals and house flags and funnel marks with the Commissioner of Navigation, who shall give public notice from time to time of the signals, house flags, and funnel marks so registered in such manner as he may think requisite for preventing those signals from being mistaken for signals of distress or signals for pilots. The Commissioner of Navigation may refuse to register any signals which in his opinion can not easily be distinguished from signals of distress, signals for pilots, or signals prescribed by laws for preventing collisions.

Sec. 8. That section 3 of the act of August 18, 1894, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows, sixty days after the passage of this act:

"Sec. 3. That section 3 of the act to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses, approved June 29, 1888, shall be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. That in all cases of receiving on board of any scows or boats such forbidden matter or substance as herein described, the owner or master, or person acting in such capacity on board of such scows or boats, before proceeding to take or tow the same to the place of deposit, shall apply for and obtain from the supervisor of the harbor appointed hereunder a permit defining the precise limits within which the discharge of such scows or boats may be made; and it shall not be lawful for the owner or master, or person acting in such capacity, of any tug or towboat to tow or move any scow or boat so loaded with such forbidden matter until such permit shall have been obtained; and every person violating the foregoing provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $500, and in addition thereto the master of any tug or towboat so offending shall have his license revoked or suspended for a term to be fixed by the judge before whom tried and convicted.

"And any deviation from such dumping or discharging place specified in such permit shall be a misdemeanor, and the owner and master, or person acting in the capacity of master, of any scows or boats dumping or discharging such forbidden matter in any place other than that specified in such permit shall be liable to punishment therefor as provided in section 1 of the said act of June 29, 1888; and the owner and master, or person acting in the capacity of master, of any tug or towboat towing such scows or boats shall be liable to equal punishment with the owner and master, or person acting in the capacity of master, of the scows or boats; and, further, every scowman or other employee on board of both scows and towboats shall be deemed to have knowledge of the place of dumping specified in such permit, and the owners and masters, or persons acting in the capacity of masters, shall be liable to punishment, as aforesaid, for any unlawful dumping, within the meaning of this act or of the said act of June 29, 1888, which may be caused by the negligence or ignorance of such scowman or other employee; and, further, neither defect in machinery nor avoidable accidents to scows or towboats, nor unfavorable weather, nor improper handling or moving of scows or boats of any kind whatsoever shall operate to release the owners and masters and employees of scows and towboats from the penalties hereinbefore mentioned.

"Every scow or boat engaged in the transportation of dredgings, earth, sand, mud, cellar dirt, garbage, or other offensive material of any description shall have its name or number and owner's name painted in letters and numbers at least 14 inches long on both sides of the scow or boat; these names and numbers shall be kept distinctly legible at all times, and no scow or boat not so marked shall be used to transport or dump any such material. Each such scow or boat shall be equipped at all times with a life line or rope extending at least the length of and 3 feet above the deck thereof, such rope to be attached to the coaming thereof, also with a life-preserver and a life buoy for each person on board thereof, also with anchor to weigh not less than 275 pounds, and at least 100 feet of cable attached thereto; a list of the names of all men employed on any such scow or boat shall be kept by the owner or master thereof, and the said list shall be open to the inspection of all parties. Failure to comply with any of the foregoing provisions shall render the owner of such scow or boat liable upon conviction thereof to a penalty of not more than $500.

"The supervisor of the harbor of New York, designated as provided in section 5 of the said act of June 29, 1888, is authorized and directed to appoint inspectors and deputy inspectors, and, for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this act and of the act aforesaid, and of detecting and bringing to punishment offenders against the same, the said supervisor of the harbor, and the inspectors and deputy inspectors so appointed by him, shall have power and authority:

"First. To arrest and take into custody, with or without process, any person or persons who may commit any of the acts or offenses prohibited by this section and by the act of June 29, 1888, aforesaid, or who may violate any of the provisions of the same: Provided, That no person shall be arrested without process for any offense not committed in the presence of the supervisor or his inspectors or deputy inspectors, or either of them: And provided further, That whenever any such arrest is made the person or persons so arrested shall be brought forthwith before a commissioner, judge, or court of the United States for examination of the offenses alleged against him; and such commissioner, judge, or court shall proceed in respect thereto as authorized by law in case of crimes against the United States.

"Second. To go on board of any scow or towboat engaged in unlawful dumping of prohibited material, or in moving the same without a permit, as required in this section of this act, or otherwise violating any of the provisions of this section of this act, and to seize and hold said boats until they are discharged by action of the commissioner, judge, or court of the United States before whom the offending persons are brought.

"Third. To arrest and take into custody any witness or witnesses to such unlawful dumping of prohibited material, the said witnesses to be released under proper bonds.

"Fourth. To go on board of any towboat having in tow scows or boats loaded with such prohibited material, and accompany the same to the place of dumping, whenever such action appears to be necessary to secure compliance with the requirements of this act and of the act aforesaid.

"Fifth. To enter gas and oil works and all other manufacturing works for the purpose of discovering the disposition made of sludge, acid, or other injurious material, whenever there is good reason to believe that such sludge, acid, or other injurious material is allowed to run into the tidal waters of the harbor in violation of section 1 of the aforesaid act of June 29, 1888.

"Every person who, directly or indirectly, gives any sum of money or other bribe, present, or reward, or makes any offer of the same to any inspector, deputy inspector, or other employee of the office of the supervisor of the harbor with intent to influence such inspector, deputy inspector, or other employee to permit or overlook any violation of the provisions of this section or of the said act of June 29, 1888, shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than one year.

"Every permit issued in accordance with the provisions of this section of this act, which may not be taken up by an inspector or deputy inspector, shall be returned within four days after issuance to the office of the supervisor of the harbor; such permit shall bear an indorsement by the master of the towboat, or the person acting in such capacity, stating whether the permit has been used, and, if so, the time and place of dumping. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be liable to a fine of not more than $500 nor less than $100."

Sec. 9. That section 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by inserting in the first paragraph thereof, after the words "and Burlington, Vt.," and before the words "one inspector of hulls," the words "Honolulu, Hawaii, and San Juan, P. R.;" and that the said section be further amended by inserting, in the fifth paragraph thereof, after the words "and Norfolk, Va.," and before the words "at the rate of $2,000," the words "Honolulu, Hawaii, and San Juan, P. R."

Sec. 10. That on and after January 1, 1900, the local inspectors of steamboats shall at least once in every year inspect the hull and equipment of every seagoing barge of 100 gross tons or over, and shall satisfy themselves that such barge is of a structure suitable for the service in which she is to be employed, has suitable accommodations for the crew, and is in a condition to warrant the belief that she may be used in navigation with safety to life. They shall then issue a certificate of inspection in the manner and for the purposes prescribed in sections 4421 and 4423 of the Revised Statutes.

Sec. 11. That every such barge shall be equipped with the following appliances of kinds approved by the Board of Supervising Inspectors: At least one lifeboat, at least one anchor with suitable chain or cable, and at least one life-preserver for each person on board.

Sec. 12. That a register, enrollment, or license shall not be issued or renewed by any collector or other officer of customs to any such barge unless at the time of issue or renewal such barge has in force the certificates of inspection prescribed by section 10 and on board the equipment prescribed by section 11.

Sec. 13. That if any such barge shall be navigated without such certificate of inspection, or without any part of the equipment prescribed by section 11, the owner shall be liable to a penalty of $500 for each offense.

Sec. 14. That the chairman of the Light-House Board, the Supervising Inspector-General of the Steamboat-Inspection Service, and the Commissioner of Navigation shall convene as a board at such times as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe to prepare regulations limiting the length of hawsers between towing vessels and seagoing barges in tow and the length of such tows within any of the inland waters of the United States designated and defined from time to time pursuant to section 2 of the act approved February 19, 1895, and such regulations when approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have the force of law.

Sec. 15. That the master of the towing vessel shall be liable to the suspension or revocation of his license for any willful violation of regulations issued pursuant to section 14 in the manner now prescribed for incompetency, misconduct, or unskillfulness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. STAFFORD. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SPIGHT] to twenty minutes.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which comprises several bills that were reported from the committee to the House unanimously, and nearly all of them have passed the Senate. It amends the law in relation to navigation. The first section relates to the bill H. R. 9119, and provides that passenger vessels engaged triweekly or oftener in trade between ports of the United States and smaller ports shall be exempt from entrance and clearance fees and tonnage taxes while such service triweekly or oftener is maintained. On Puget Sound, and possibly between the ports of Maine and Nova Scotia, there are passenger vessels making trips three times a week or oftener, though they are not ferryboats. These vessels are in competition with railroads, and the principle of the bill is to exempt those vessels from charges which railroads are not required to pay. It covers a very small sum, but it is required in order to make the competition proper with the railroads.

Mr. MADDEN. What are the charges made for?

Mr. GREENE. I said that on Puget Sound, and possibly between the ports of Maine and Nova Scotia, there are passenger vessels making trips three times a week or oftener, which, though not ferryboats, serve almost the same purposes. These vessels are in competition with railroads, and this is to exempt them from the fees that the railroads are not required to pay.

Mr. MADDEN. And what does the fee amount to on each vessel?

Mr. GREENE. If the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is here, he can tell. It is a very small amount, but I have not got the exact amount. It is very small, indeed. It is favored by the Department as the proper thing to do, and is recommended by the full committee.

Mr. MADDEN. Has it any reference to ships other than those having pleasure parties on board?

Mr. GREENE. No, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. Does it make that provision for ships entering from a foreign port with pleasure parties?

Mr. GREENE. No; that is not in this part of the bill. Now, section 2 is identical with the bill which has passed the Senate and which was introduced by Senator FRYE.

Mr. MADDEN. Does this affect lake navigation?

Mr. GREENE. No; lake navigation is exempt.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there anything in the bill that affects it?

Mr. GREENE. Not at all. Lake navigation is exempt, and this applies the same provisions to Puget Sound as to the Great Lakes.

Mr. MANN. Outside of the Puget Sound section is there anything in this bill which affects the Great Lakes?

Mr. GREENE. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. I was informed by some member of the committee that it does affect them.

Mr. OLCOTT. Does not the section require a count instead of a list of the passengers?

Mr. GREENE. Sections 3 and 4 provides for a count instead of a list. I am endeavoring to take up each section and to explain the bill.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will not take up all the time on this first section.

Mr. GREENE. I will now take up the other sections.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in respect to the section of the bill relating to mud scows used in New York Harbor. What is the change there?

Mr. GREENE. There is very little change in that. It will be explained, and I will call upon the gentleman from New York to explain it fully when we come to it. I am trying to briefly pass along in the consideration of the bill and give all a chance to find out about the bill.

Section 3 provides for a correct account of all the passengers instead of a list of the passengers. The law requiring a list to be furnished has been in existence a number of years, but it is impossible to successfully carry it out. This provides for a count, which secures all that is necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain the reason for not waiving that exception to the steamers on the Great Lakes now provided in section 3? They still require a correct list to be kept on passenger steamers plying on the Great Lakes on routes exceeding 300 miles.

Mr. GREENE. That covers routes where they have ample opportunity to get the list. This is to cover the case of excursions where it would be impossible to find out the names, just as it is on an excursion train, where there are as many as 2,000 or more passengers. If you require them to furnish a list of the passengers, it would stop all the excursion business.

Mr. MANN. What is the law now in that respect?

Mr. GREENE. The law is that there shall be a list, but it is not complied with.

Mr. MANN. There is often a great deal of complaint in the city of Chicago about overcrowding excursion steamers.

Mr. GREENE. The law provides now clearly that there shall be a list, and in my section there is a count taken of the number of passengers, and they are counted. An excursion steamer is allowed to have a certain defined number on board, and when that number has passed on the boat no more are allowed in my section. I do not know how it is in Chicago. When the number are on board that the vessel is allowed to carry, they are not allowed to take anybody else. If there is any overcrowding in Chicago, it is because the Chicago people do not obey the law.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the Chicago people are like everybody else. The question is what is the law, and whether the Government officials are enforcing the law.

Mr. GREENE. That has been the law. As usual, it rests a good deal on the officers of the vessels to see that it is carried out, but they are liable if it is not enforced.

Mr. MANN. I would like to know what the law is.

Mr. GREENE. The law has been—

Mr. STAFFORD. Why do you waive it as to passenger steamers on the high seas travelling more than 300 miles and do not waive it as to passenger steamers on the Great Lakes?

Mr. GREENE. Vessels on the Great Lakes go a certain length of time, and it allows them to list their passengers. It exempts excursions on the Great Lakes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Do you mean 300 miles from the bank or 300 miles altogether?

Mr. GREENE. Three hundred miles. The officers can get a list of the passengers in that time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You mean 300 miles one way?

Mr. GREENE. Three hundred miles one way.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman, Does the law now provide that these excursion steamers shall furnish a list of passengers?

Mr. GREENE. Yes; and that is impossible.

Mr. MANN. Oh well, it is not a question whether it is impossible. The point is that you seek to change the law so that they shall not be required hereafter to furnish a list.

Mr. GREENE. Only the number—not a list.

Mr. MANN. Hence they will not be required to keep a list.

Mr. GREENE. They will not be required to keep a list, because they can not.

Mr. MANN. Then if the vessel goes down, you do not know who is on board.

Mr. GREENE. Just the same as on a railroad train.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, there is a difference between going to the bottom of the lake and being spilled out onto the ground in a railroad accident.

A MEMBER. The result to the passenger is just about the same. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE. The next is section 5. The principle of reciprocal exemption from tonnage taxes applied to yachts in section 4216, Revised Statutes, is the same as the principle of reciprocal exemptions from tonnage taxes applied to merchant vessels by sections 11 and 12 of the act of June 19, 1886 (Navigation Laws, 1907, pp. 146-147). In the application there is this distinction: The reciprocal exemption in the case of yachts under section 4216 is on the basis of nationality. The reciprocal exemption in the case of merchant vessels under the act of June 19, 1886, is on the basis of the port. S. 5333 extends the basis of reciprocal exemptions in the case of yachts to the port basis, as in the case of merchant vessels. To S. 5333 this section adds the proviso of February 5, 1897, as follows:

Provided, That the privileges of this section shall not extend to any yacht built outside of the United States and owned, chartered, or used by a citizen of the United States, unless such ownership or charter was acquired prior to February 5, 1897.

It was decided by the committee that this was a fair and honorable thing to do, and so it was favorably reported by the committee.

Section 7 provides for an international signal code, giving a means of indicating from a distance at sea the names of vessels.

Section 8 embodies the provisions of a bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS], and I now yield to him three minutes.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, section 8 consists of a bill introduced by me. It is a long section, but the only part of it that is new law is the part in italics on page 8. It relates entirely to the mud scows or boats in the harbor of New York that take garbage out to sea, and the object of the amendment is to require on each one of these scows a life line or rope, which they are now not required to have, and a life-preserver and life buoy for each person on board, and a drag anchor, so that if they get adrift the anchor will retard the progress of the scow, and it will be possible to overtake it. It also requires them to keep a list of all the men employed.

This section was recommended by the Legal Aid Society and the Seamen's Church Institute in New York, which have done a great deal of work among the seamen and which were active a couple of years ago in behalf of the bill that we passed to prevent shanghaiing. There was a hearing before the committee, where the scow people were represented, and the provision that is now in the bill is the compromise provision that was evolved at that time.

Mr. WALDO. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] yield for a question?

Mr. GREENE. Yes.

Mr. WALDO. I see you have extended the length of an excursion of a steamboat from 100 miles to 300 miles. Is not that too much?

Mr. GREENE. It was not thought so by the Department or the committee.

Mr. WALDO. It seems to me that 300 miles on a steamboat is not an excursion, and that a list of the passengers ought to be kept, certainly where the excursion is over 200 miles.

Mr. DOUGLAS. They stop to let passengers on and off, and it is impossible to keep a list.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is the trouble. They stop to let passengers on and off at way ports.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. What is section 4216 of the Revised Statutes, which is hereby repealed?

Mr. GREENE. Section 4216 provides that—

Yachts, belonging to a regularly organized yacht club of any foreign nation which shall extend like privileges to the yachts of the United States, shall have the privilege of entering or leaving any port of the United States without entering or clearing at the custom-house thereof or paying tonnage tax: Provided, That the privileges of this section shall not extend to any yacht built outside of the United States and owned, chartered, or used by a citizen of the United States, unless such ownership or charter was acquired prior to the passage of this act.

You can see the difference that was made in this provision. What I have read is what is repealed.

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN].

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think the sections of the bill under consideration in which, perhaps, the Members of the House are most interested are sections 4467 and 4468. The first provides that instead of keeping a list on vessels traveling 300 miles or less in one direction, a count of the passengers shall be kept. That applies especially in New York City to the Albany Day Line, which has a carrying capacity of over 2,000 passengers. It is utterly impossible for that company to keep a correct list of the passengers going aboard their steamers which run up to Albany and back—a distance of 150 miles each way. It is intended by this section, that instead of a list of the names, which, as I say, it is utterly impossible to keep, they shall have a correct count of all those going aboard, subject to inspection by the inspectors of the Bureau of Navigation and by the officers of customs at all times.

Mr. WALDO. The distance from New York to Albany is only 150 miles?

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes.

Mr. WALDO. There is no need of extending this distance 300 miles, is there?

Mr. GOULDEN. We discussed that at length in the committee and were unanimously in favor of making it 300 miles. There are other cities besides New York on the American continent, and we appreciate the fact that Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Buffalo, and other cities may have day lines of steamers running the same as our line to Albany, which would go a longer distance than 150, or even 200 miles. Again, the law of 1871 allowed a distance of 100 miles. Since then the speed of steamers has more than doubled, so that excursion boats can cover much longer distances by daylight. Hence the necessity of making the distance 300 miles.

Mr. WALDO. There are no cities anywhere that are 300 miles apart which a day line can reach in one day, are there?

Mr. GOULDEN. It is not expected that excursions will be confined to cities alone. With the rapidity with which steamers move they could easily make 300 miles in one day. The Sandy Hook boat, which makes 22 miles an hour, could very easily make 300 miles in twelve hours. The same is true of the Mary Powell, a Hudson River steamer, and many others in and around New York.

The second part to which I wish to direct the attention of the House is that in relation to providing safety lines aboard the mud scows and sea barges that go out, particularly from New York Harbor. All of the refuse of the city of New York is taken out of New York and dumped into the sea, and scores of men are drowned each year by not having the necessary protection on these boats. It provides that life lines shall be put on each scow and barge, kept there at all times, extending the length of the boat and 3 feet above the deck, such rope to be attached to the coaming, and also that a life-preserver and a life buoy shall be kept for each person on board; also an anchor, to weigh not less than 275 pounds and with at least 100 feet of cable attached thereto. Then a list of the names of all the men employed on any such scow or boat shall be kept by the owner or the master thereof, and said list shall be open to the inspection of all parties. Failure to comply with any of the foregoing provisions shall render the owner of any such scow or boat liable upon conviction thereof to a penalty of not more than $500. Now, this has been found absolutely necessary for the protection of human life. As I said, scores of men are drowned or lost or missing each year who work aboard these boats. Something therefore must be done in the cause of humanity and the safety to human life. This was thought to be the best and simplest method of protecting life and giving it some degree of safety. The anchor provision is intended in case the scow breaks loose from its tow, that they can throw out the anchor and drag. We do not mean to say for a moment that they would be able perhaps to keep off the shore, but they would drag slowly so that some tugboat could pick them up and save them from being wrecked.

The other parts of the bill, Mr. Speaker, containing fifteen amendments, have met with the approval of the minority members of the committee, and we believe, upon the whole, that the entire bill is entitled to a favorable consideration on the part of the Members of the House. I commend it to their support and hope that it will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] has discussed the most important feature of this bill, the question of the protection of life on the scows in

New York Harbor. There is another provision of the bill, however, which seems to me to be objectionable. It is a provision which discriminates against yachts constructed in foreign yards and not acquired by American citizens prior to 1897. I think that is objectionable. I think that the provision ought to apply to all American owners of yachts at the time of the passage of this bill, if it is going to apply to any, without regard to when they were built or when acquired. In the main, I think the bill is a good one and ought to pass.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, as was said by the gentleman from New York, there is no opposition to this bill from any of the minority members of the committee. One part of this bill I do not approve of; however, upon the main, I am going to vote for the bill as it is presented. The part of the bill which I do not approve of is the part which provides for the exemption of foreign yacht owners from paying tonnage taxes and clearance dues. I do not approve of that, because I can see no reason why the class of people who are able to own and equip yachts should be permitted to enter and clear without paying tonnage taxes and clearance dues; but upon the principle of comity between this Government and other nations, if they extend to our people the same privilege, probably there is not so much serious objection to it after all. The most important section of this bill, as I consider it, is that part of the bill which relates to New York Harbor.

The evidence disclosed before the committee from whence this bill comes is that for years and years there has been a practice going on in New York Harbor of dumping the refuse of New York City out into the ocean, where a great many human lives have been lost. An opposition was disclosed before the committee upon this part of the bill upon the ground, as usual, that if the scow owners were compelled to safeguard them, so as to protect the lives of their employees, it would add greatly to the expense of the scows. The committee determined that when the question of cost was upon one side and the question of human life upon the other, that the argument in favor of the preservation of human life far outweighed that of the cost of taking such precautions upon the other so as to preserve human life. The evidence failed to disclose the number of people who were lost every year who are engaged in this occupation, but according to the best evidence that we could get hold of not less than one person was lost every month in this hazardous employment by reason of the fact that the scows were not safeguarded with proper safety equipment. Therefore I regard that part of the bill as being the most important, purely, however, of a local nature, affecting only the city of New York, and if there was nothing else in the bill except this it would commend itself to me very strongly. Up until this bill was reported, as I understand the navigation laws, there has been no Federal statute in force giving to the inspectors power to inspect seagoing barges of 100 tons and over. This bill gives to the inspectors power to inspect seagoing barges of 100 tons and over, and the right to inspect each with a view of seeing whether or not they are seaworthy and are safe to operate upon the high seas. The evidence disclosed that by reason of failure to have a Federal statute conferring upon the local inspectors power to inspect seagoing barges the loss of property heretofore has been considerable, as well as the loss of life. These two measures taken together, in my judgment, commends the bill to its passage and appeals to the Members of this House. There is another section of the bill which adds likewise a delinquent statute, as it were—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. SPIGHT. I yield the gentleman two more minutes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And that is the section of the statute which authorizes the Commissioner of Navigation to appoint a board of inspectors at Hawaii and Porto Rico. While that is going to add some additional expense to the Government in maintaining those two boards, yet the proof disclosed the fact that it was exceedingly necessary that he be given the power to appoint these boards of inspectors for Hawaii and for Porto Rico, because the evidence disclosed the fact that for as much as two weeks at a time vessels had been tied up in Hawaii and in Porto Rico awaiting inspectors to be sent from the continent of the United States to inspect the hulls and the vessels, with a view of seeing whether or not they were seaworthy. Therefore, in the main, I believe, the entire bill commends itself to the support of every Member in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. SPIGHT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sulzer].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, all I desire to say is that, in my judgment, this is a most commendable bill, and it ought to receive the unanimous approval of the Members of this House. The bill is designed to regulate, so far as may be feasible at this time, the most dangerous form of navigation along our seaboard. There are between 400 and 450 seagoing barges of over 100 gross tons employed at present. During the past two fiscal years 60 of these barges were lost. Of the 60 vessels lost 49 were built before 1898, and nearly half were over 30 years old. Many of these barges years ago were stanch ships and barks. As they have deteriorated they have been dismantled, and large hatches have been cut in them, rendering them structurally even weaker. When from any cause these towed barges break loose from the towing steamer those on board are practically helpless. Of 192 persons on board these 60 barges 49 lost their lives, or over 25 per cent, a death rate far in excess of the rate in other classes of marine casualties here or abroad. A great demand in favor of this legislation comes from prominent people of New York desirous to more carefully safeguard life on these seagoing barges. It should have been done long ago, and I hope this bill will now pass and go over to the Senate and meet the approval of that body before we adjourn.

Mr. SPIGHT. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi has five minutes remaining.

Mr. SPIGHT. Well, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes].

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. It has been impossible, of course, for me or any other Member of the House not specially interested in this bill to make himself familiar with all its provisions. There is one section, however, with the provisions of which I am familiar, and so far as it is concerned it commends itself to me. Of course I do not like to pass upon the other provisions. I do not like to vote upon the whole bill without having had an opportunity to examine into its provisions and hearing it freely discussed and debated before this House. The situation as it now exists with regard to sailing vessels of any tonnage, as I understand it, is that they are now and may be lawfully in charge of a man who is not a master, not a licensed inspector, or who has not any particular knowledge of navigation. For instance, at the present time there is nothing that I know of to prevent a man from going upon a sailing vessel in the harbor of New York, and if circumstances were such that he could get control of it lawfully, to navigate it up and down that very important highway to the great risk and detriment of other men who are engaged in navigation and are familiar with the rules that obtain upon the waters of the harbors and the high seas. I have sailed small craft myself, and I know the grave danger involved, and how the danger increases as the size of the craft and the traffic increases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. GREENE. I yield one minute more.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. It is really a matter of surprise to me that this very important subject has not long before this had the consideration of Congress. This section provides:

The boards of local inspectors shall license and classify the masters, chief mates, and second and third mates, if in charge of a watch, engineers, and pilots of all steam vessels, and masters of sail vessels of over 700 gross tons, and all other vessels of over 100 gross tons carrying passengers for hire.

So the very language of the act shows that up to this time it has not been necessary for a man, in order to sail a vessel of that tonnage and to carry passengers for hire on the high seas or on any harbor over which we have control or jurisdiction, to pass any sort of an examination at all. I propose to vote for this bill in order to place this provision upon the statute books.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has again expired.

Mr. GREENE. Will the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Spight] kindly use his time now?

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield my time to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Humphrey].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. Humphrey] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say this to the House: There is not time to discuss the details of the bill, but it was reported unanimously. It contains a great deal of very valuable legislation, for which there is great necessity for immediate action. There is no one on the committee who is opposed to the bill, and I trust that the House will pass it, so that it can get to the Senate and become a law before Congress adjourns.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that the House ought to know what the important legislation is that is brought in in a bill of this sort?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think the majority of the House do, excluding the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in that statement.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman from Washington always knows more than anyone else, but I have asked a dozen gentlemen on the floor of the House as to what is in the bill, and I have found no one that knew.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will say to the gentleman that in two minutes I would not undertake to explain to him.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the gentleman could.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. SPIGHT. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is evidently no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors and the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members. Those in favor of suspending the rules and passing this bill will, as their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "nay," those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 230, nays 7, answered "present" 14, not voting, 136, as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18618) fixing the status of the Porto Rican Provisional Regiment of Infantry, with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The amendments have been read. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendments. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. [Applause.]

To the Senate and the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report, by the Secretary of State, with the accompanying papers, concerning the claims of the owners of the Mexican steamship Tabasqueño and of her cargo against the United States.

In view of our admitted liability in principle in this case, I recommend the claim to the favorable consideration of Congress, and that an appropriation of the sum mentioned by the Secretary of State be made in settlement of the claim.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Ways and Means will be discharged and the bill returned to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand this is merely a formal matter between the two Houses, Mr. Speaker, concerning certain papers.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

CEMETERY IN DUBUQUE, IOWA.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration and passage of the bill S. 6363.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Union Calendar the following bill and pass the same. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 6363) granting title to a parcel of land in the city of Dubuque, Iowa, heretofore known as St. Raphael's Cemetery, to the archbishop of Dubuque and his successors in office, and confirming and establishing title thereto accordingly.

Be it enacted, etc., That all that tract or parcel of land in the city of Dubuque heretofore known as St. Raphael's Cemetery, and described as follows: "A tract of land 382 feet in width and 405 feet in length, bounded on the north by Third street, on the south by outlots 698 and 693 A, on the east by outlots 693, and on the west by outlots 723," the same being the identical property which was in use as a Catholic cemetery in 1836, and having been in the open, continuous, and uninterrupted possession of the Catholic Church of Dubuque from said date until the present time, the title of the church to the same having never been contested nor questioned, and the boundaries of the property to-day being identical with those described in the original plat of Dubuque is hereby granted to the Most Rev. John J. Keane as archbishop of Dubuque, and to his successors in office, and the title thereto is confirmed and established accordingly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to explain why I do not object.

Mr. DAWSON. I yield to the gentleman for a brief explanation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand, this is a case where the land has been used ever since 1838 for a cemetery. The dead are resting there, and now it is discovered that there is no patent that can be found from the United States to the land. I think this may come, ethically at least, within the line of exceptions that I have made to the rule that I have adopted, and I shall not object.

Mr. DAWSON. The land referred to, Mr. Speaker, has not only been used as a Catholic cemetery since 1836, but is so used now. It is a tract of land 380 feet in width and 405 feet in length, and has been in the possession of the church of Dubuque from a time prior to the act of July 2, 1836, under which the town site of Dubuque was authorized to be surveyed, and on this survey this particular tract of land was designated "R. Catholic graveyard." There has never been any adverse claim to the same.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21735) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to purchasers of Indian lands under any law now existing or hereafter enacted, and for other purposes.

ASSIGNMENT OF OFFICE ROOMS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 186) relating to the assignment of space in the House Office Building.

Resolved, etc., That the assignment of rooms in the Office Building of the House of Representatives, which shall hereafter be designated as the House Office Building, heretofore made by resolution or order of the House of Representatives, shall continue in force until modified or changed in accordance with the provisions of this resolution, and the room so assigned to any Representative shall continue to be held by such Representative as his individual office room so long as he shall remain a Member or Member-elect of the House of Representatives, or until he shall relinquish the same, subject, however, to the provisions of this resolution, and no Representative shall allow his office room to be used for any other purpose.

Any Member or Member-elect of the House of Representatives may file with the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds a request in writing that any individual office room be assigned to him whenever it shall become vacant. If only one such request has been made for any room which shall at any time have become vacant, the room shall be assigned as requested. If two or more requests are made for the same vacant room, preference shall be given to the Representative making the request who has been longest in continuous service as a Member and Member-elect of the House of Representatives. If two or more Representatives with equal length of continuous service, or two or more Representatives-elect, make request for the same room, preference shall be given to the one first preferring his request. A Representative or Representative-elect making request for the assignment of a vacant room may withdraw the same at any time and no one shall have pending at the same time more than one such request. The assignment of a new room to a Representative, upon his request, or the appointment of any Representative having an individual office room as chairman of a committee having a committee room, shall act as a relinquishment by him of the room previously assigned to him.

Representatives having rooms assigned to them in the foregoing manner may exchange rooms one with another, but such exchange shall be valid only so long as both Members making the exchange shall remain continuously Members or Members-elect of the House of Representatives. The Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds shall keep a record of the assignment of rooms heretofore or hereafter made, exchanges which may be made, requests for vacant rooms which may be filed, and the assignment thereof, which record shall be open for the inspection of Representatives or Representatives-elect of the House.

In the matter of the assignment of rooms under this resolution, Delegates in Congress and the Commissioners from Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands shall be treated the same as Representatives.

The assignment and reassignment of the rooms and other space in the House Office Building shall be subject to the control of the House of Representatives by rule, resolution, order, or otherwise. Nothing in this resolution shall be construed to affect or repeal the provisions of law heretofore enacted placing said House Office Building under the control of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, subject to the approval and direction of the Commissions provided for respectively in the act of March 3, 1903, and the act of March 4, 1907.

Unoccupied space in said building shall be assigned by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds under the direction of the Commission and subject to the control of the House of Representatives.

Mr. ADAMSON. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Georgia is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, some time ago the House passed a House resolution for the assignment of space in the Office Building. That resolution contemplated and provided for the assignment of space beyond the existence of this term of Congress; but, of course, the House can not by simple House resolution make a law effective after the 4th of March next, and there would then be no law covering the assignment of space or that would continue to the Members the use of those rooms until the beginning of the next Congress. Now, the object of passing this resolution is to have in the form of law the resolution already passed by the House, so that the rooms of the Members in the Office Building shall remain theirs practically permanently while they are Members of Congress under the terms of the resolution.

In addition to that there is some unoccupied space in the building yet to be assigned. For instance, as to the folding room of the House and the post-office of the House and to other services in connection with the House. Under the terms of the sundry civil bill of last year the House Office Commission is not authorized to assign space, and it is desirable to have authority to assign this space and make arrangements for it during the summer vacation. So far as the rooms of the Members are concerned, it would be sufficient to pass this resolution at the next session of Congress, but it is desirable to have such resolution passed now in order that the folding room or the other branches under the House may have their space assigned to them during the vacation as it becomes complete, and that is contained in the last provision of the resolution, to which I call attention:

Unoccupied space in said building shall be assigned by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, under the direction of the Commission, and subject to the control of the House of Representatives.

A gentleman has just asked me in reference to that provision of the resolution concerning exchanges, which provides that Members may effect exchanges which shall remain effective so long as they are both Members of the House. That was a matter which was discussed at the time the first resolution was passed by the House. It was not thought desirable by the committee that an outgoing Member of the House should have the permission to grant to somebody else the authority to use his room after his term had expired, as would be the case if an outgoing Member of the House, two days before his term expires, could make an exchange of a room, for he would then determine who would go into that room, and the purpose of the resolution is to place all Members of the House on an equality, preference being given only to longevity of service.

Mr. PADGETT. Take the case that an exchange has been made at the present time and one Member goes out. Does that vitiate the exchange so far as the remaining Member is concerned?

Mr. MANN. The exchanges which are already made are confirmed by the resolution and are not affected by it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. This resolution provides that in case, for instance, there are two or more applications filed for the same room, the Member who has the longest service in the House has the preference?

Mr. MANN. It does.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is strictly laid down in the rule?

Mr. MANN. That is in the resolution, and in case there are two of the same length of service, the one filing the first application has the preference. I may say on that point that that follows the rule in reference to seats in the Senate.

Mr. HARDY. I am not sure what the regulation of the House is, Mr. Speaker, about the matter, but I was applied to for the use of my room during the vacation, to be used by members of the convention on consumption. My recollection is that I wrote they might have it if there was no objection in the way of the rules of the House.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman that so far as that particular case is concerned, the necessity for it, I take it, has gone by. In the general deficiency bill there is a provision that the Tuberculosis Congress shall have the use of the new National Museum, and there is an amendment proposed by the Senate, which I understand will be agreed to, appropriating $40,000 to suitably make temporary preparation of that building for that purpose, but because of the applications which were made to Members in reference to that and for other purposes, this resolution contains the provision that no Representative shall allow his office room to be used for any other purpose. Of course the House at any time could give permission.

Unless some gentleman desires further information, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I suppose there is no doubt that, so far as the work we have already done is concerned, it would remain undisturbed without this additional action, but in order to make sure that nobody could claim that the work was temporary and died with the expiration of the session, we deemed it proper to bring in this resolution in order to make sure that everything was made permanent. Certainly it was necessary to bring it in as to the last proposition and provide permanent control over the unallotted space, and arrange that proper authority should control and allot that if necessary.

If any gentleman desires time, I will cheerfully yield to him. I am satisfied with the explanation made by the gentleman from Illinois, and I do not care myself to talk any further. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

The question was taken.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the point of no quorum. Evidently no quorum is present, and the point is sustained. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absentees, and the question will be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to suspend the rules and pass the resolution. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 202, answered "present" 10, not voting 175, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R.

21260) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 19355. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 1991. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain and other wars, and to the widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 20063. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes;

H. R. 18347. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes;

H. R. 21260. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 18618. An act fixing the status of the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. R. 23. Joint resolution to provide for the remission of a portion of the Chinese indemnity.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken to the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4062. An act to amend section 5481 of the Revised Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AUTHORIZING RESURVEY OF CERTAIN TOWNSHIPS IN THE STATE OF WYOMING, ETC.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendments to the bill S. 6190 with an amendment striking out pages 3 and 4 of the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to suspend the rules, concur in the Senate amendments with an amendment to the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 6190) authorizing a resurvey of certain townships in the State of Wyoming—

And so forth.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the gentleman's motion, it is to concur in the Senate amendments just read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, my motion is to concur in the amendment on pages 1 and 2 and nonconcur in the amendment on pages 3 and 4.

The SPEAKER. There are but two Senate amendments in the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there is a Senate amendment providing for a resurvey—

The SPEAKER. That is the first amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. You want to concur in that?

Mr. MONDELL. In that amendment.

The SPEAKER. And to the next amendment you want to disagree?

Mr. MONDELL. To disagree to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. And ask for a conference?

Mr. MONDELL. No; pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. How can you pass the bill when you disagree to an amendment? The gentleman can agree to the Senate amendments and pass the bill, or disagree and ask for a conference. What does the gentleman want to do?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, my motion was to concur in the Senate amendment, with an amendment striking out the second amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to ascertain—

Mr. MONDELL. There are two distinct amendments, and, Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, concur in the first Senate amendment and nonconcur in the second amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman also ask a conference?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, my understanding was that it would be proper to move to accept the first Senate amendment and to disagree to the second Senate amendment, and so pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. Not at all; it does not pass the bill; it leaves the amendment still hanging to the bill that is disagreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, as I do not seem to make the purpose of my motion clear, I now move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, a second is ordered. The gentleman from Wyoming is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Arkansas to twenty minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take up the time of the House in a lengthy discussion of this matter. This is a Senate bill, to which the House made numerous amendments, all of which were accepted by the Senate with two amendments. My original motion was to concur in one Senate amendment and nonconcur in the other Senate amendment, but as such a motion does not seem to be in order, I move to nonconcur in both amendments and ask for a conference. There is no objection, I believe, on the part of any Member of the House to the first Senate amendment, which simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to make some resurveys, if in his opinion they are necessary. The second Senate amendment refers to the disposition of Fort Keogh and the Fort Keogh Military Reservation. There was some objection on the part of some Members of the House to the amendment, and therefore the House committee was of the opinion that the House should not concur in that amendment. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, this is the omnibus public-lands bill passed by the House of Representatives a few days ago. To that bill the Senate made some amendments, as stated by the gentleman from Wyoming. One of those amendments simply provides for a resurvey of certain public lands within the State of Colorado, I believe, and we have no objection to that. The other amendment, however, is a very important one. It relates to a large reservation in the State of Montana. The latter amendment was before the Committee on Military Affairs in the form of a bill which has not been reported, and for those reasons, among others, perhaps, it was not or could not be incorporated in the omnibus public-lands bill. In view of these considerations the House Committee on the Public Lands did not think proper to urge upon the House a discussion of this amendment at this time. We are opposed to the amendment. We therefore respectfully requested a conference.

There is nothing further that I care to say on the subject. If any Member on either side of the House desires time to discuss it, I will gladly yield to him. Otherwise I will yield the floor and ask for a vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to know what this amendment is. Is it to give away some public lands?

Mr. ROBINSON. Sir, I did not hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is this amendment that you disagreed to?

Mr. ROBINSON. This is an amendment, as I have stated to the gentleman, relating to the disposition of a large military reservation called Fort Keogh, in the State of Montana. There are many provisions to the amendment. Among others it provides for the giving of the buildings on the reservation to the State of Montana, for the giving to a certain fair association of 160 acres of land, or the disposition of it to that association, and makes final disposition, or seeks to do so, of all the lands on that military reservation by opening the remainder to settlement. As I have already stated, the Committee on Military Affairs have had that bill under consideration in the House of Representatives and have not reported it. As a member of the Committee on the Public Lands, I do not feel that it would be proper to insist upon that provision going into this bill, even granting that its provisions are meritorious.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the purpose to which this land shall be dedicated if it is given by the United States to the State? Some eleemosynary institution?

Mr. ROBINSON. One 160-acre tract was to go to the city of Miles and another was to go to the Custer County Fair Association.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How much land is involved?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not remember the area of the entire tract.

Mr. BURLESON. Approximately.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will ask the gentleman from Wyoming what the area of that military reservation is.

Mr. MONDELL. Fort Keogh is quite a large military reservation—about 57,000 acres. It was proposed to open them to settlement under the public-land law. There is no objection to that part of the amendment as a general proposition, but there were some matters in the amendment that the committee did not believe the House ought to agree to, and therefore my motion was to disagree to that amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has your committee passed upon this bill at all, then?

Mr. ROBINSON. No, sir; not this feature of it. I have so stated repeatedly. The bill was before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Except the Senate amendment, and my motion was to disagree to that Senate amendment. That motion not being put, my motion now is to ask for a conference on the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware that in the Fifty-eighth Congress there was a precedent of this kind on a bill I introduced taking a part of the reservation in Texas known as "Fort Elliot Reservation" for a normal school that was defeated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]? Now, I do not understand why this bill should pass when that did not.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I want the House to understand that we do not mean to agree to this amendment. So far as I know, there is not a Member of the House that expects to ask the House to agree to this amendment, the sole object being to eliminate it from the bill and pass the bill without the amendment. I also want to say to my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that I do understand that the proposition to open all of these lands to settlement is without objection. I understand from some members of the Committee on Military Affairs that it is the purpose of that committee, or it seems to be the purpose of that committee, to hold these lands for military purposes, but I want it made distinct that nobody, so far as I know, expects to agree to this amendment, our sole object being to eliminate the amendment from the bill and pass the bill without the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman from Arkansas misunderstood me. I did not mean to say that in this particular case it would be perhaps the best thing to do to open these lands to settlement, but as a general proposition, of course, there was nothing objectionable in that sort of a proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to say that there was no objection to opening these lands for settlement.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules, disagreeing to the Senate amendments, and asking for a conference.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] No quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members. ## SALE OF CLOTHING BY SOLDIERS, ETC.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration and passage of the bill H. R. 19462.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the passage of the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19462) to amend section 5438 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19462) to amend section 5438 of the Revised Statutes.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5438 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 5438. Every person who makes or causes to be made, or presents or causes to be presented, for payment or approval, to or by any person or officer in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, any claim upon or against the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof, knowing such claim to be false, fictitious, or fraudulent, or who, for the purpose of obtaining or aiding to obtain the payment or approval of such claim, makes, uses, or causes to be made or used, any false bill, receipt, voucher, roll, account, claim, certificate, affidavit, or deposition, knowing the same to contain any fraudulent or fictitious statement or entry, or who enters into any agreement, combination, or conspiracy to defraud the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof, by obtaining or aiding to obtain the payment or allowance of any false or fraudulent claim, or who, having charge, possession, custody, or control of any money or other public property used or to be used in the military or naval service, who with intent to defraud the United States or willfully to conceal such money or other property, delivers or causes to be delivered, to any person having authority to receive the same, any amount of such money or other property less than that for which he received a certificate or took a receipt, and every person authorized to make or deliver any certificate, voucher, receipt, or other paper certifying the receipt of arms, ammunition, provisions, clothing, or other property so used or to be used, who makes or delivers the same to any other person without a full knowledge of the truth of the facts stated therein, and with intent to defraud the United States, shall be imprisoned at hard labor for not more than five years, or fined not more than $5,000; and every person who knowingly purchases or receives in pledge for any obligation or indebtedness from any soldier, officer, sailor, or other person called into or employed in the military or naval service any arms, equipments, ammunition, clothes, military stores, or other public property, whether furnished to the soldier under a clothing allowance or otherwise, such soldier, sailor, officer, or other person not having the lawful right to pledge or sell the same, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than two years and by a fine not exceeding $500."

Mr. SLAYDEN. According to this report on the bill H. R. 19462, section 5438 of the Revised Statutes, in which a penalty is provided against the sale of clothing by soldiers has been variously interpreted by the United States courts that have had such cases before them for trial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I object.

Subsequently:

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I renew the request for unanimous consent to consider and pass the bill (H. R. 19462), the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] having withdrawn his objection.

The title of the bill was again read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the bill as amended is passed.

SPOKANE INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from further consideration of the bill (S. 6163) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell and dispose of the surplus unallotted agricultural lands of the Spokane Indian Reservation, Wash., and to place the timber lands of said reservation in a national forest, and that the bill as amended by the House Committee on Indian Affairs do pass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington moves to suspend the rules and pass, with amendments, a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause allotments to be made under the provisions of the allotment laws of the United States to all persons having tribal rights or holding tribal relations and who may rightfully belong on the Spokane Indian Reservation and who have not heretofore received allotments.

SEC. 2. That upon the completion of said allotments to said Indians the Secretary of the Interior shall classify the surplus lands as agricultural and timber lands, the agricultural lands to be opened to settlement and entry under the provisions of the homestead laws by proclamation of the President, which shall prescribe the time when and the manner in which these lands may be settled upon, occupied, and entered by persons entitled to make entry thereof; and no person shall be permitted to settle upon, occupy, or enter any of said lands except as prescribed in such proclamation.

SEC. 3. That the price of the lands classified as agricultural shall be $5 per acre, and said price shall be paid in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the following terms: One-fifth of the purchase price to be paid in cash at the time of entry and the balance in five equal annual installments to be paid in one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, from and after the date of entry. In case any entryman fails to make the annual payments, or any of them, promptly when due, all rights in and to the land covered by the entry shall cease and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited and the entry canceled, and the land shall be reoffered for sale and entry under the provisions of the homestead laws at the same price at which it was first entered: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent homestead settlers from commuting their entries under section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States by paying for the land entered the price fixed herein, receiving credit for payments previously made. In addition to the price to be paid for the land the entryman shall pay the same fees and commissions at the time of commutation or final entry as now provided by law where the price of the land is $1.25 per acre, and when an entryman shall have complied with all the requirements and terms of the homestead laws as to settlement and residence and shall have made the required payments as aforesaid he shall be entitled to a patent for the lands entered: And provided further, That all lands classified as agricultural remaining undisposed of at the expiration of four years from the opening of said lands to entry shall be appraised by the Secretary of the Interior from time to time and sold at public auction or under sealed bids to the highest bidder for cash at not less than the said appraised value, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of the late civil and Spanish wars or the Philippine insurrection as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 1, 1901, shall not be abridged: Provided further, That sections 16 and 36 of the agricultural lands in each township shall not be disposed of, but shall be reserved for the use of the common schools and paid for by the United States at $1.25 per acre, and the same are hereby granted to the State of Washington for such purpose.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior may reserve such lands as he may deem necessary for agency, school, and religious purposes, to remain reserved so long as needed and so long as agency, school, or religious institutions are maintained thereon for the benefit of the Indians; and he is further authorized and directed to reserve and set aside such tracts as he may deem necessary or convenient for town-site purposes, and he may cause any such reservations to be surveyed into lots and blocks of suitable size and to be appraised and disposed of under such regulations as he may prescribe, and the net proceeds derived from the sale of such lands shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of the Spokane Reservation.

SEC. 5. That the lands so classified as timber lands shall remain Indian lands subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior until further action by Congress, and no provision authorizing the sale of timber upon Indian lands shall apply to said lands unless they be specially designated: Provided, That until further legislation, the Indians and the officials and employees in the Indian Service on said reservation shall, without cost to them, have the right, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, to go upon said timber lands and cut and take therefrom all timber necessary for fuel, or for lumber for the erection of buildings, fences, or other domestic purposes upon their allotments; and for said period the said Indians shall have the privilege of pasturing their cattle, horses, and sheep on said timber lands, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell and dispose of for the benefit of the Indians such timber upon such timber lands as in his judgment has reached maturity and is deteriorating and which, in his judgment, would be for the best interests of the Indians to sell, the purpose being to as far as possible protect, conserve, and promote the growth of timber upon said timber lands. The Secretary of the Interior shall deduct from the money received from the sale of such timber the actual expense of making such sale and place the balance to the credit of said Indians, and he is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations for the sale and removal of such timber so sold as he may deem advisable.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby vested with full power and authority to make all needful rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the Indians for the lands granted to the State of Washington, as provided in section 3 of this act, and there is hereby appropriated the further sum of $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of carrying out the other provisions of this act: Provided, That the appropriation other than that to pay for the lands granted to the State of Washington shall be reimbursed to the United States from the proceeds of the sale of the lands described herein, or from any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the said Spokane Indians.

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner bind the United States to purchase any portion of the land herein described, except sections 16 and 36 of the agricultural lands or the equivalent in each township, or to dispose of said land except as provided herein, or to guarantee to find purchasers for said lands or any portion thereof, it being the intention of this act that the United States shall act as trustee for said Indians to dispose of the said lands and to expend and pay over the proceeds received from the sale thereof only as received as herein provided: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive said Indians of the Spokane Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, of any benefits to which they are entitled under existing treaties or agreements not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell and dispose of the surplus unallotted agricultural lands of the Spokane Indian Reservation, Wash., and for other purposes."

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a second, and is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this bill relates to the surplus lands remaining after the allotment to the Indians on the Spokane Reservation, which allotment will be completed some time during the present year. The remaining lands are divided into agricultural and timber lands. The bill provides that the agricultural lands shall be disposed of to homesteaders who, in addition to complying with the homestead law, pay $5 an acre, which money goes to the Indians. Now, this price was fixed upon by the special agent of the Department who was sent out to confer with these Indians last fall, this being the price agreed upon. These lands are arid and semiarid and are not valuable except with irrigation, so that the $5 an acre, without irrigation, is a very fair value for the lands.

This money goes to the Indians. There will be about 5,000 acres of this agricultural land.

The surplus of timber lands will be about 80,000 acres, but these lands are not disposed of under this bill. They are left for future legislation by Congress and are placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, who may allow the Indians and the Indian agents to cut such timber as may be necessary for fuel, building purposes, and matters of that kind of interest to the Indians. The Secretary of the Interior is also authorized to sell, for the benefit of the Indians, matured timber, the purpose of the bill with reference to the timber lands being to conserve the timber and promote its growth and development. Then there are the usual provisions we have in all these bills for opening Indian reservations, providing that the United States is simply acting as a trustee for the Indians, but does not bind itself to find purchasers or anything of that sort, and simply providing for the payment for sections 16 and 36. Unless some one has some questions to ask, I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does this carry the provision in the bill usually carried in these bills opening up Indian reservations, providing that there shall be no charge upon the United States Treasury, but that the money received for the sale of the lands only shall be paid to the Indians?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It does.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is guarded in that respect?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understood the gentleman, there are only about 5,000 acres of agricultural lands that will be disposed of.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the estimate by the Department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This land is semiarid land and is not agricultural except where it can be irrigated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Practically so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman consider that a fair price?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I consider that a high price for these lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the Northern Pacific Railroad run over these lands?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not at all. I think it is 50 miles away. There is no railroad, in fact, to these lands at the present time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I believe the bill has been unanimously reported from our Committee on Indian Affairs, and it corresponds with the other bills we have passed for the same country.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is correct.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There being no substantial difference between them?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is correct.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think it has the unanimous report, as well as I remember.

Mr. FINLEY. To what extent is the land here designated as agricultural land watered?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is no irrigation now.

Mr. FINLEY. Never mind the irrigation, but to what extent is there water on these lands that can be used for irrigation purposes?

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand, there are some small streams coming down from the mountains that can possibly be used for irrigation purposes, although these streams, most of them, are very small and probably all go dry in the summer time.

Mr. FINLEY. How much land is reserved for the Spokane Indians?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Every Indian—man, woman, and child—gets 80 acres of land under the allotment law, and that leaves about 5,000 acres of agricultural lands as surplus, and then about 80,000 acres of the timber land, which will be held for the Indians and looked after by the Secretary of the Interior; but each man, woman, and child is allotted 80 acres under the general allotment law, and that allotment will be completed, I understand, this summer.

Mr. FINLEY. And the price here fixed is $5 per acre?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; that is the price, as I say, agreed upon by the Indians and the special agents of the Department last winter.

Mr. FINLEY. I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago that the Government did not bind itself to do more than act as trustee for the Indians and did not bind itself to find a purchaser.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true; that is the usual provision in these bills. That is put in here.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, for a great many years I have paid some attention to bills opening up Indian reservations for settlement. I have observed that while the position, as stated by the gentleman, as to the attitude of the Government is correct—that is, the Government assumes to act as trustee for the Indians, and that it does not bind itself to find a purchaser for the lands of the Indians—yet invariably it fixes a price, and that price in this case is $5 per acre. Now, I ask this House, would it not be better in the interests of fair dealing, to the end that the Indian receives what belongs to him, as a matter of right, that the Government open these lands, if they are to be opened, and receive bids for them? It may or it may not be that $5 per acre is a sufficient price. I do not know nor do I believe that there is a man in this House who can answer that question accurately.

But I, for one, am tired of the proposition that the Government fix a maximum price on the land of the Indians. I believe that when lands belonging to the Indians are to be opened for settlement there should be a proposition made to sell the lands in the open market at not less than a minimum price. Anything that can be obtained more than that would inure to the benefit of the Indian and would result in fair dealing to him. I think this bill is objectionable.

It is true, no doubt, that these lands are unimproved. It is true, no doubt, they are semiarid, but it is also true there is water there not utilized at present, but water that can be utilized, and who will stand up here and say that he knows for a certainty that none of these lands are worth more than $5 per acre; 5,000 acres to be opened for settlement at $5 per acre? Why would it not be better to receive bids for the land and fix the minimum price at $5 per acre? When Congress is to act as trustees for the Indians, as the gentleman from Washington states, let us be fair, let us give the Indian what belongs to him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The question I would like to ask the gentleman before he sits down is, I notice here that sections 16 and 36 are to be carved out and are to be given by the United States to the State of Washington for school purposes.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And I notice the Government is to pay over to the Indians the sum of $1.25 an acre for that much.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that it furthermore provides that it shall be sections 16 and 36 of the agricultural land. So the bill fixes $5 as the fair value of the land, but when it comes to that part which the United States Government is to pay for it fixes $1.25 as the fair value for it. Now, if $5 be a fair value, then the Government of the United States in sections 16 and 36 is cheating the Indians out of $3.75 an acre.

Mr. FINLEY. And give it to the State of Washington. That is another objectionable provision in the bill. Why should the Government of the United States take over sections 16 and 36 for school purposes at $1.25 an acre? Why should it do that and pay the Indians that amount and then give these sections to the State of Washington? Now, with lands belonging to the Government, where Territories have been created into States, I understand this practice has been followed in the past as to Government lands, but we are asked to indorse a proposition for taking lands from the Indians for school purposes and then give those lands to a State. Why should this be done? Mr. Speaker, this bill is objectionable in many respects.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me, in his time, to suggest that land sections 16 and 36, under the enabling act of this State will permit it to select these sections in each township, and they really belonged to the State when these Indian reservations were made by Executive order, consequently the Indians could not claim this land without a settlement between the State and the Indians, and hence the bill had to be drawn in this way.

Mr. FINLEY. Do I understand the gentleman from Texas to state that sections 16 and 36 of the Indian lands throughout this country belong to the States in which the reservations are?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Under the enabling acts of several Western States they were permitted to select these sections 16 and 36 for school purposes.

Mr. FINLEY. That applies to Government lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Those were Government lands before they were turned over to the Indians by treaty or Executive order. I do not know whether this was a treaty reservation or an Executive order reservation; probably the gentleman from Washington can tell you.

The gentleman is speaking about something he does not understand and which is not applicable to this bill. Does the gentleman know that these lands were turned over to the State of Washington under the agreement set forth in the enabling act? Hence they did not, in my judgment, become Indian lands, because they had been reserved to the State of Washington for school purposes.

Mr. FINLEY. But were they reserved?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand that they were reserved, but I do not know without looking up the treaty and enabling act the exact terms of the reservation.

Mr. FINLEY. If that is true, why should the Government pay $1.25 an acre?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Because that is the valuation set upon the lands at the time the enabling act was passed when such lands were sold to actual settlers as homesteads.

Mr. FINLEY. If that is true, why should the Government pay anything to the Indians for the land?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the value at which the settler was entitled to take the land, and in addition they were required to live upon it five years—

Mr. FINLEY. That is not the question involved here, as I understand it; this is a case of opening up to settlers a part of an Indian reservation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But it was originally public land, the gentleman must remember, that had prior thereto been granted to the State for school purposes.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that. Originally all the land in this country belonged to the Indians, too. There is no doubt about that. So that, according to the gentleman's own contention, if what he states is true, then the Government should pay nothing to the Indians for sections 16 and 36. I do not see that the gentleman's point is applicable at all. Why, the States the gentleman speaks of as a rule obtain lieu land, or lands in place of the lands that were allotted to the Indians for school purposes. Is not that true?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Sometimes.

Mr. FINLEY. Generally it is true. In the States where the lands were allotted the States obtained lieu lands in place of the reservation set apart to the Indians. Now, as to sections 16 and 36, as in this case, you would give additional sections for school purposes, would you not? I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] such time as he desires.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, sections 16 and 36, within this reservation, are or are not a part of the public domain of the United States. If they are a part of the public domain of the United States, then there is no reason why the Federal Government should pay the Indians $1.25 an acre for them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The minute I finish putting the logical horns of the dilemma. If they are not a part of the public domain, but are the property of the Indians, then the Federal Government should not fix the price of $5 per acre upon the agricultural lands for others while it itself pays the Indians only $1.25 per acre for what it so generously takes in order to give the State of Washington, thereby cheating the Indians out of $3.75 upon each acre of the land which the Federal Government gives to the State of Washington. Now, I have no objection giving it to the State of Washington. I am very much in favor of setting aside sections 16 and 36. If I had my way, I would set aside more to each State, to be held for public-school purposes. But it strikes me that one of two things must be true—either this land belongs to the Government already or it belongs to the Indians. If it belongs to the Government, then I have no objection to the Government giving it to the State of Washington without any payment to the Indian at all, because the Indian has not right to any payment for the land which belongs to the Government, whereas if it does belong to the Indian and has been reserved to him, I presume that some time in the past lieu lands were given to the State of Washington for sections 16 and 36; but even if not, it was a lax piece of carelessness, for which the Indian was not responsible, at any rate, and therefore the Government of the United States ought not to fix the price of $1.25 for payment by it to the Indian upon land which it admits by a public act to be worth $5. And that is the point upon which I would like to hear the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say that in the enabling act admitting the State of Washington, sections 16 and 36 were granted to the State, and in case of Indian reservations the grant simply held in abeyance until the reservation was opened. So, in my judgment, the Federal Government is not under any obligation whatever to pay the Indian a dollar for these sections. But as it has been the policy of Congress for a great many years—I know since I have been here—in opening reservations, and States were admitted on similar enabling acts, we have put in this provision giving the Indians $1.25 an acre for these lands. So it was done in this case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman know whether or not, when this particular land was put in reservation for these particular Indians, lieu lands were granted to the State of Washington elsewhere for so much of the land as constituted sections 16 and 36 in the reservations?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They have not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has not been done?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It has not been done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, then, the gentleman's contention is, that the original enabling act gave to the State of Washington this land?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It held it in abeyance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Held it in abeyance; but the gentleman must remember that an enabling act could not give to the State of Washington land which belonged to the Indians without any sort of an agreement by the Indians or any sort of treaty with them agreeing to that.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It would depend on the nature of the reservation, I would say to my friend.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This was an Executive-order reservation, as I understand it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was this land part of the public domain and subject to homestead entry before it was set aside for the Indian reservation?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was, so I understand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or was land never thus far acquired from the Indians?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was public land before and set aside as a reservation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or acquired from the Indians once?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suppose you would consider it that way. It had been taken and considered as public land. But afterwards the Indians were roving all over that country and the Government put them on these lands and established them on this as a reservation.

Mr. FINLEY. What objection would the gentleman have to a minimum price fixed of $5 an acre?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will revert to that point of the gentleman. I want to say, as I said before, that this price was agreed upon between the Indians and the special agents. Now, I would oppose an open sale of these lands in the first instance that the gentleman seems to advocate. We want settlers in this territory if we can get them there. It is better for the Indian and better for the State, and even if the lands should be worth a little bit more than $5 an acre it is better to get $5 an acre and the settler than to get $7 and no settler. As a matter of fact, these lands, in my judgment, are not worth $5 an acre, and that the homesteader who takes these lands will pay really more than he ought to be required to pay, but this was put in there because it was agreed upon between the representative of the Indian Department, who was looking after the welfare of the Indians, and the Indians themselves, and this is a higher price than almost any other reservation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the Indians had a council and agreed to the terms proposed by the Indian Department?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; they had a regular meeting.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And $5 was the amount mentioned as the highest price for these agricultural lands?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And there are only 5,000 acres?

Mr. JONES of Washington. This land is not in a compact body. It is at different points in this reservation. There may be 40 acres here and 80 acres yonder and 100 acres somewhere else.

There is one other point in the bill, and that is that if after five years there is any of this agricultural land that is not disposed of by homestead under the $5 price, then the Secretary is authorized to appraise the land and sell it from time to time—after four years, of course.

Mr. FINLEY. Will not that result in the best land being sold at $5 per acre and the less desirable land be retained for future appraisalment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Where is there any objection to that? The desirable land of course will be taken, and if homesteaders consider it all worth $5 an acre it will all be taken by homesteaders.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman think that none of this land is worth more than $5 an acre?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not believe it is unless irrigation works were put in—that is, none of this agricultural land. I do not know how much the timber land is worth, but we do not dispose of it anyway. It is not involved in this bill. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GREENE in the chair). The question is on suspending the rules, agreeing to the amendment, and passing the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is sustained. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absentees; as many as are in favor of the motion will, as their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "nay," those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 171, nays 61, answered "present" 14, not voting 141, as follows:

CUSTOMS ADMINISTRATIVE LAW.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the conference report on the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 17506, and agree to the conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17506) to amend an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved June 10, 1890, as amended by the act entitled "An act to provide revenues for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

On page 5, lines 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22 of said Senate amendment, strike out the following words: "When a case has been remanded to the Board of General Appraisers as above provided, the United States attorney for the district in which the appeal is pending may appear in the proceedings had before the Board under the order remanding the case."

On page 8, in line 5 of said Senate amendment, strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "nine."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN DALZELL,

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17506) to amend an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved June 10, 1890, as amended by the act entitled "An act to provide revenues for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in the conference report:

The Senate amendment strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts an amendment which follows, substantially, the House bill, the only material changes being that the Senate amendment authorizes an appeal from the decision of the Board of General Appraisers to the circuit court, instead of directly to the circuit court of appeals. It also provides that a rehearing may be ordered before the Board of General Appraisers, and provides, on such rehearing, as follows: "When a case has been remanded to the Board of General Appraisers, as above provided, the United States attorney for the district in which the appeal is pending may appear in the proceedings had before the Board under the order remanding the case." This latter provision is stricken out by the report of the conference.

The House fixed the salary of the general appraisers at the rate of $8,000 per annum. The Senate amendment fixes this salary at $10,000. The conference agree upon a salary of $9,000; and the House agrees to the Senate amendment with the two amendments as noted above.

The effect of this agreement is to provide, according to the original provision in the House bill, that parties must exhaust their evidence before the Board of General Appraisers, and that they can not have a new trial before the circuit court, but simply an appeal on the case as made before the Board of Appraisers. This is the important part of the amendments to the general law by the bill proposed by the House, and your conferees deem it of much more importance than the mere question of salary.

SERENO E. PAYNE,
JOHN DALZELL,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, originally the House bill sought to do what the House has been trying to do for two sessions past, and that is to so amend the general appraisers act that in the hearings before the Board of General Appraisers all the evidence should be exhausted before there was any appeal. Heretofore the importer simply went before the appraiser, perhaps with only one witness, and without sometimes submitting a brief, and left the case for decision, with the sole object of appealing and sending it to the circuit court for trial. Before the appraisers the solicitor of customs appeared for the Government, and before the circuit court the district attorney. Often the district attorney was not informed in the various matters arising in the claim of the importer. We remedied that in the House bill by requiring the importer to exhaust the evidence before the appraiser and send the decision from the Board of Appraisers to the circuit court of appeals in the first instance for review on that evidence.

The Senate have retained that part of the provision of the House which compels all the evidence to be exhausted before the Board of Appraisers, but they will not agree to have the appeal taken directly to the circuit court of appeals, but send it to the circuit court. While the House conferees thought that their plan was much the best, yet, for the purpose of producing good results, which will give an opportunity for these cases on appeal to be heard on their merits on the evidence before the appraisers, we yielded to that part of the change which the Senate made.

The Senate inserted a provision that a rehearing, which was in the House bill, might be ordered before the Board of General Appraisers, and in that they inserted that the district attorney should appear for the Government. We did not consent to that, because the solicitor of customs, being familiar with the facts, was the man to appear in support of the facts which came out before the Board of Appraisers. The Senate conceded this and struck out that provision.

The other matter of disagreement was on the question of salaries. The salaries of the members of the General Board of Appraisers now are $7,000 per annum. The House made the salary $8,000 per annum, convinced that there ought to be an increase in those salaries. The Senate increased it to $10,000, and in order to get an agreement, the House conferees finally split the difference with the Senate and agreed upon a salary of $9,000 per annum, thinking it was much better to pay out this additional amount of $9,000 a year in order to have a better administration of the customs laws, saving, as we believe, annually many thousands of dollars of duties that ought to be paid, and from which importers now often escape because of the loose methods of practice under the present law.

Those are the important changes in the House bill as it comes before the House now, although the Senate amendments struck out the whole of our bill and inserted a provision of their own, nearly all of which is precisely like the original House bill, after a method sometimes employed by legislative bodies I will not mention where.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the conference committee that had this matter in charge, I refused to sign the conference report, because I do not believe that the purposes for which this bill originally passed this House were carried out by the bill as amended by the Senate. More than that, I dissented from the proposition to raise the salaries from $7,000 to $9,000.

The original purpose of this bill was to prevent delays in the decision of these customs cases, to simplify appeals, and to protect the interests of the Government thereby. Under the present law, when an importer is not satisfied with the collector's decision in reference to the classification of goods coming into the United States, he can appeal to this General Board of Appraisers. Their testimony is taken; but if he is still dissatisfied, he can take an appeal to the United States district court, and the whole case is opened de novo, with the result that in many cases the importer merely makes out a fictitious case before the Board, in order to draw the fire of the Government and see what testimony will be developed, and then carries the case to the district court of the United States, and there develops his testimony and brings on the real trial. In the meantime the attorney representing the Government before the Board no longer has anything to do with the case and the United States district attorney, an entirely new man in the procedure, takes it up in the district court.

There was unquestionably a necessity for some legislation for relief against that evil and those conditions, and for that reason, when this bill was before the House, I stated that outside of the increase in salary I thought it was a good bill. But I do not agree with my colleagues on the conference committee that we have carried out the purposes of the House bill by agreeing to these amendments. We provided that the Board of Appraisers should be the court where the case was tried de novo, and that there should be a direct appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals. Instead of that, they have substituted an appeal to the circuit court of the United States. Now, it is true that under this amended bill, which the conferees bring back here, the circuit court can not itself take new testimony, but it can remand the original case, whenever it sees fit, back to the General Board of Appraisers with orders to take additional testimony. In other words, it amounts to the same thing, in my judgment, as if we had provided that when the circuit court tries one of these cases it shall take testimony by a commissioner instead of in the presence of the court and constitute the General Board of Appraisers the commissioners to take the additional testimony. That does not eliminate the two trials of the case de novo and does not accomplish what the committee originally intended it should—that is, that the importer shall have a fair trial before one court, and if an appeal is taken, that it shall be taken on the legal questions involved, and not give him two chances against the Government instead of one.

Therefore I do not agree with the conferees in reference to the changes which have been made, and am in favor of disagreeing to the conference report and carrying the bill back to conference again.

The other question involved is the question of salary. The salary now of this General Board of Appraisers is $7,000 a year each. The Ways and Means Committee, not by a unanimous report, but by a divided committee, reported this bill to the House increasing the salary from $7,000 to $8,000. When the bill went to the Senate the salary was increased to $10,000, and the conferees in this case compromised the matter by making the salary $9,000, which the conference report now provides for. This Board of Appraisers is an important board, an important body of men. I do not deny that proposition, but the district court to which their appeals were taken heretofore was presided over by a judge who receives only $6,000 a year. The judge of the circuit court of appeals who will now try the case, if this conference report is adopted, gets only $7,000, as do the other circuit judges of the United States. The Board of Appraisers in New York, in my judgment, are no more important than the circuit courts of appeal throughout the United States, who are paid $7,000, and I do not think it is wise, just, or equitable for this House to provide a salary of $9,000 for the judges of the inferior court and allow the judges of the superior court only $7,000 a year. I believe that the present salary is sufficient, and if we want to increase these salaries the Committee on the Judiciary ought to bring in a general bill increasing the salaries of the judges throughout the United States, but that we ought not to provide an increase of salary for one set of judges and leave their superiors in office with an inferior amount of salary. For these reasons I am opposed to the adoption of the conference report.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a word in answer to what the gentleman has said. The bill as it comes now, if it is enacted into law, requires all the evidence to be taken before the Board of General Appraisers. The hearing before the circuit court is on that evidence, and nothing more. No evidence can be taken there. They may send it back for additional evidence, and it is then taken before the Board of Appraisers, and the same solicitor of customs appears for the United States. Then all the evidence is certified again to the circuit court, and the circuit court must hear it on the evidence.

That changes the practice from what it is to-day. It does away with one great evil, and I am satisfied to take one long step in this matter. There are some other matters of great importance which I did not mention which were stated to the House when the bill was before the House, and there are other advances along this line. It certainly does very much to clear up the practice and will enable the courts and the Board of Appraisers to make a fair decision between the Government and the importer and will save many thousands of dollars. The bill is a good deal like the original bill when it first went from the House to the Senate, when it first became a law, and the alteration was made by the Senate then. We have taken a long step in advance in the last ten or fifteen years to get this much into the legislation with the other body opposing it. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the bill will pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point is well taken. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absentees, and the question will be taken on the motion of the gentleman from New York to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report. The Clerk will call the roll.

CHILD LABOR BILL.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the conference report on the bill (S. 4812) and to adopt the conference report. I also ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the conference report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the statement.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4812) entitled "An act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same as amended, so that it will read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no child under fourteen years of age shall be employed or permitted to work in the District of Columbia in any factory, workshop, mercantile establishment, store, business office, telegraph or telephone office, restaurant, hotel, apartment house, club, theater, bowling alley, laundry, bootblack stand, or in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages. No such child shall be employed in any work performed for wages or other compensation, to whomsoever payable, during the hours when the public schools of the District of Columbia are in session, nor before the hour of six o'clock in the morning or after the hour of seven o'clock in the evening: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to children employed in the service of the Senate: And provided further, That the judge of the juvenile court of said District may, upon the application of the parent, guardian, or next friend of said child, issue a permit for the employment of any child between the ages of twelve and fourteen years at any occupation or employment not in his judgment dangerous or injurious to the health or morals of such child, upon evidence satisfactory to him that the labor of such child is necessary for its support, or for the assistance of a disabled, ill, or invalid father or mother, or for the support in whole or in part of a younger brother or sister or a widowed mother. Such permits shall be issued for a definite time, but they shall be revocable at the discretion of the judge by whom they are issued or by his successor in office. Hearings for granting and revoking permits shall be held upon such notice and under such rules and regulations as the judge of said court shall prescribe.

"SEC. 2. That no child under sixteen years of age shall be employed or permitted to work in the District of Columbia in any of the establishments named in section one, unless the person or corporation employing him procures and keeps on file and accessible to the inspectors authorized by this act and the truant officers of the District of Columbia an age and schooling certificate, and keeps two complete lists of all such children employed therein, one on file and one conspicuously posted near the principal entrance of the building in which such children are employed.

"SEC. 3. That an age and schooling certificate shall be approved only by the superintendent of public schools, or by a person authorized by him in writing, who shall have authority to administer the oath provided for therein, but no fee shall be charged therefor.

"SEC. 4. That no age and schooling certificate shall be approved unless satisfactory evidence is furnished by duly attested transcript of the certificate of birth or baptism of such child, or other religious record, or the register of birth or the affidavit of the parent or guardian or custodian of a child, which affidavit shall be required, however, only in case such last-mentioned transcript of the certificate of birth be not procured and filed, showing the place and date of birth of such child, which affidavit must be taken before the officer issuing the employment certificate, who is hereby authorized and required to administer such oath, and who shall not demand or receive a fee therefor.

"SEC. 5. That the age and schooling certificate of a child under sixteen years of age shall be in the following form:

"Age and schooling certificate."

"This certifies that I am the (father, mother, guardian, or custodian) of (name of child) _____, and that (he or she) was born at (name of town or city) _____, in the county of (name of county, if known) _____ and State of (or country) _____, on the (day and year of birth) _____, and is now (number of years and months) _____ old.

"Signature of (father, mother, guardian, or custodian).

"(Date.)

"There personally appeared before me the above-named (name of person signing) _____ and made oath that the foregoing certificate by (him or her) signed is true to the best of (his or her) knowledge and belief. I hereby approve the foregoing certificate of (name of child) _____; complexion (fair or dark), _____; hair (color), _____. Having no sufficient reason to doubt that (he or she) is of the age therein certified, I hereby certify that (he or she) can read at sight and can write legibly simple sentences in the English language, and that (he or she) has reached the normal development of a child of (his or her) age, and is in sound health and is physically able to perform the work which (he or she) intends to do, and that (he or she) has regularly attended the public schools, or a school equivalent thereto, for not less than one hundred and thirty days during the school year previous to applying for such school record, or during the year previous to applying for such school record, and has received during such period instruction in reading, spelling, writing, and arithmetic.

"This certificate belongs to (name of child in whose behalf it is drawn) _____ and is to be surrendered to (him or her) whenever (he or she) leaves the service of the corporation or employer holding the same, but if not claimed by said child within thirty days from such time it shall be returned to the superintendent of schools.

"(Signature of person authorized to approve and sign, with official character of authority.)

"(Date.)

"A duplicate of each age and schooling certificate shall be filled out and kept on file by the superintendent of public schools. Any explanatory matter may be printed with such certificate, in the discretion of said superintendent: Provided, That in exceptional cases the judge of the juvenile court, upon the recommendation of the superintendent of public schools or the person authorized to act for him, may, in writing, waive the necessity of the schooling certificate provided for in this act, and in such cases the age certificate shall entitle the holder to be employed without a violation of this act.

"SEC. 6. That whoever employs a child or permits a child to be employed in violation of sections one, two, eight, or nine of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, for such offense, be fined not more than fifty dollars; and whoever continues to employ any child in violation of any of said sections of this act, after being notified by an inspector authorized by this act, or a truant officer of the District of Columbia, shall for every day thereafter that such employment continues be fined not more than twenty dollars. A failure to produce to an inspector authorized by this act, or a truant officer of the District of Columbia, any age or schooling certificate or list required by this act shall be prima facie evidence of illegal employment of any person whose age and schooling certificate is not produced or whose name is not listed. Any corporation or employer retaining any age and schooling certificate in violation of section five of this act shall be fined not more than twenty dollars. Every person authorized to sign the certificate prescribed by section five of this act who knowingly certifies to any materially false statement therein shall be fined not more than fifty dollars.

"SEC. 7. That the inspectors authorized by this act and the truant officers of the District of Columbia shall visit the establishments named in section one and ascertain whether any minors are employed therein contrary to the provisions of this act, and they shall report any cases of such illegal employment to the superintendent of public schools and the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia. The inspectors authorized by this act and the truant officers of the District of Columbia shall require that the age and schooling certificates and lists provided for in this act of minors employed in the establishments named in section one shall be produced for their inspection.

"SEC. 8. That no minor under sixteen years of age shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work in any of the establishments named in section one more than eight hours in any one day, or before the hour of six o'clock antemeridian, or after the hour of seven o'clock postmeridian, and in no case shall the number of hours exceed forty-eight in a week.

"SEC. 9. That every employer shall post in a conspicuous place in every room where such persons are employed a printed notice, stating the number of hours required of them on each day of the week, the hours of commencing and stopping work, and the hours when the time or times allowed for dinner or for other meals begin and end. The printed form of such notice shall be furnished by the inspectors authorized by this act and the truant officers of the District of Columbia, and the employment of any such person for a longer time in any day than that so stated shall be deemed a violation of this section.

"SEC. 10. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to appoint two inspectors to carry out the purposes of this act, at a compensation not exceeding one thousand two hundred dollars each per annum.

"SEC. 11. That no male child under ten and no girl under sixteen years of age shall exercise the trade of bootblacking or sell or expose or offer for sale any newspapers, magazines, periodicals, or goods, wares, or merchandise of any description whatsoever upon the streets, roads, or highways, or in any public place within the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 12. That from and after July first, nineteen hundred and eight, no male child under sixteen years shall exercise the trade of bootblacking or sell or expose or offer for sale any newspapers, magazines, periodicals, or goods, wares, or merchandise of any description whatsoever upon the streets, roads, or highways, or in any public place within the District of Columbia, unless a permit and badge as hereinafter provided shall have been issued to him by the superintendent of public schools of the District of Columbia or by a person authorized by him in writing for that purpose upon the application of the parent, guardian, or other person having the custody of the child desiring such permit and badge, or in case said child has no parent, guardian, or custodian, then on the application of his next friend, being an adult.

"SEC. 13. That such permit and badge shall be issued free of charge to the applicant, but shall not be issued until an age and schooling certificate shall have been issued as provided in this act.

"SEC. 14. Such permit shall state the date and place of birth of the child, the name and address of its parent, guardian, custodian, or next friend, as the case may be, and describe the color of hair and eyes, the height and weight, and any distinguishing facial mark of such child, and shall further state that the age and schooling certificate has been duly examined and filed, and that the child named in such permit has appeared before the officer issuing the permit. The badge furnished by the officer issuing the permit shall bear on its face a number corresponding to the number of the permit and the name of the child. Every such permit, and every such badge on its reverse side, shall be signed in the presence of the officer issuing the same by the child in whose name it is issued. The badge provided for herein shall be worn conspicuously at all times by such child while so working, and all such permits and badges shall expire annually on the first day of January. The color of the badge shall be changed each year. No child to whom such permit and badge are issued shall transfer the same to any other person, nor be engaged in the District of Columbia in any of the trades or occupations mentioned in this section without having conspicuously upon his person such badge, and he shall exhibit the same upon demand to any police or truant officer or to the inspectors in this act provided for.

"Sec. 15. That no child to whom a permit and badge are issued as provided for in the preceding sections shall sell or expose or offer for sale any newspapers, magazines, or periodicals, or goods, wares, or merchandise of any description whatever after ten o'clock in the evening or before six o'clock in the morning.

"Sec. 16. That nothing in this act contained shall apply to the employment of any child in a theatrical exhibition, provided the written consent of one of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia is first obtained. Such consent shall specify the name of the child, its age, the names and residence of its parents or guardians, together with the place and character of the exhibition.

"Sec. 17. That the juvenile court of the District of Columbia is hereby given jurisdiction in all cases arising under this act." And the House concurs in said Senate amendments to the House amendment.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, submit the following written statement, namely:

In view of the fact that the amendment of the House to this bill struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted its own bill, it was necessary in the conference report to print the bill, as agreed upon by the conferees, in full.

The changes in the bill as passed by the House are as follows:

"First. The hour at which children can begin to work is made 6 o'clock in the morning instead of 8 o'clock.

"Second. A provision has been agreed to, as proposed by the Senate, as follows:

"Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to children employed in the service of the Senate: And provided further, That the judge of the juvenile court of said District may, upon the application of the parent, guardian, or next friend of said child, issue a permit for the employment of any child between the ages of 12 and 14 years at any occupation or employment not in his judgment dangerous or injurious to the health or morals of such child, upon evidence satisfactory to him that the labor of such child is necessary for its support, or for the assistance of a disabled, ill, or invalid father or mother, or for the support in whole or in part of a younger brother or sister or a widowed mother. Such permits shall be issued for a definite time, but they shall be revocable at the discretion of the judge by whom they are issued or by his successor in office. Hearings for granting and revoking permits shall be held upon such notice and under such rules and regulations as the judge of said court shall prescribe."

"Third. The provision in section 5 has been agreed to, making provision that in exceptional cases the judge of the juvenile court, on the recommendation of the superintendent of public instruction, may waive the necessity of the schooling certificate and allow employment when only an age certificate is given. This is to provide for families with children coming to the District after the close of the school year, when it would be impossible for any certificate to be given that the child had been in the schools of the District during the year preceding."

Upon the recommendation of the House conferees it is provided that this matter should be left in the hands of the juvenile court, so that it is believed that all protection is accorded.

The Senate has agreed to all of the other amendments recommended by the House conferees, including the provisions from section 11 to section 16, both inclusive, which make provision for children selling newspapers and other goods, wares, and merchandise in the streets.

The statement was read as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the pension appropriation bill submit the folfollowing written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendments Nos. 1 and 2: Appropriates $162,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $150,000,000, as proposed by the House, for the payment of pensions, and inserts the proviso proposed by the Senate with reference to the payment of pensions in State Soldiers' and Sailors' Homes.

On amendments Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, with reference to the abolishment of the pension agents: Appropriates the sum of $72,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for salaries of agents without specifying the number of such agents; reduces the amount for clerk hire from $435,000, as proposed by the Senate, to $410,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; appropriates $4,500 for rent of the New York agency, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and $1,500 for examination and expenses of pension agencies; $65,000 for stationery and other expenses of pension agencies instead of $40,000, as proposed by the Senate, and $30,000, as proposed by the House, and inserts the provision proposed by the Senate for furnishing franked envelopes to pensioners.

J. WARREN KEIFER,
WASHINGTON GARDNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I would ask unanimous consent, unless my colleague on the conference committee desires to be heard—

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from Ohio is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. The conference report is signed by all the conferees on the part of the Senate. It is signed by two of the conferees on the part of the House. This bill went into conference some weeks ago, and there were quite a number of meetings of the conferees, and a report was agreed upon very recently. There was not much radical difference, save on one question, and I can explain a little about it. The first amendment of the Senate, which is concurred in by all the conferees on the part of the House, was to increase the appropriations for the payment of pensions, as fixed in the House bill, from $150,000,000 to $162,000,000. The additional $12,000,000 were put in in consequence of the passage of the widows' pension bill, known as the "Sulloway bill." It was the opinion, it seems, of the Commissioner of Pensions that it would add to the value of the pension roll $12,000,000, and for that reason it was added. I myself was of the opinion that on account of changes in the pension roll from deaths and otherwise it was not necessary to have added so much, at least at this time; but we have agreed to that amendment of the Senate.

The second amendment, also agreed to, provides that all pensions to inmates of Soldiers and Sailors' Homes in States shall receive their pensions directly as all others do. It seems to have been the impression somewhere that pensions were paid to some of these Homes directly instead of to the pensioner. I understand from the Commissioner of Pensions that it has not been the rule heretofore, but in order that there might be no dispute about it the Senate put in the amendment, which is Senate amendment numbered 2.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question upon this subject?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the bill, as agreed upon, prevent a State Soldiers' Home from withholding or exacting any portion of pensions of members of these Homes?

Mr. KEIFER. It does not, but it leaves that wholly as a matter to be arranged with the State Soldiers' Home and the pensioner, but the pensioner is to receive his pension directly whether he is an inmate of the Home or not. I understand that has always been the rule, however.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is it not the custom of some Soldiers' Homes located in the various States to exact a part of the pension when he goes there to protect themselves, or to exclude the man from the Home?

Mr. KEIFER. That is not the effect of the amendment at all. It simply makes it impossible for the pension agencies to pay the Homes directly, leaving the Homes to negotiate with the pensioners. The third amendment of the Senate was on the matter of pension agencies. It will be remembered that the House bill, as it was passed here, provided but $4,000 for the purpose of paying one pension agent.

The number of pension agencies in the United States now is eighteen, and we appropriated in the bill originally for but one. The amendment of the Senate was similar to the law in previous years, mentioning eighteen pension agents to be paid $4,000 each, making the sum of $72,000. This amendment had other provisions in it, but the matter agreed upon between the conferees does not mention any number of pension agents, but appropriates enough money to maintain the present agencies in the United States, with a proviso that of the $72,000 thus appropriated only such part of it shall be used as shall be found necessary. That was the point upon which the conferees differed. It is proper to say that the Senate never discussed this question of agencies, and its conferees claimed that it was too late in the session to take it up and debate it, although in a former Congress it was provided that the whole matter of the continuation of these agencies should be referred to the Secretary of the Interior, and perhaps the Commissioner of Pensions, for a report; and it will be remembered that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions did report in favor of disestablishing all the agencies save one, and that at Washington, and that recommendation was carried into our bill.

But here it is agreed that we provide money enough to carry them all on, if found necessary.

We come to another amendment, which was an addition to the House provision of $100,000 for clerk hire. We appropriated $335,000 in the original bill. The Senate added $100,000. That amendment was agreed to by the conferees by cutting down the amount to $410,000 and providing, as we did in the case of the appropriation for the agents, that only so much of it was to be used as might be found necessary. In another amendment—

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is the matter as to whether or not these agencies shall be maintained left to anybody's discretion?

Mr. KEIFER. Absolutely left to the discretion of the President of the United States, where, as is observed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to me privately, the present law leaves it. That is true in a general way, but not absolutely true. Under the present law (R. S., sec. 4780) the agencies were required to be established by the President of the United States. He could make one, two, or eighteen, or a hundred, if he chose. I think we were unanimously of the opinion that the President, having the right to establish agencies, had the right to disestablish them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you make any changes in this bill?

Mr. KEIFER. We make no change here in that, except I want to say that there are probably four or five of the agencies that were originally established by law, and those he would not, I think, have the right to disestablish. He might reduce the agencies very materially, but perhaps not down to one. I think the matter is left entirely with the President with that exception.

In the original bill we appropriated $30,000 for stationery and other necessary expenses, to be used by the Secretary of the Interior in paying agents and making provision for their payment. The Senate added $10,000 to that, making it $40,000. In the conference report it will be seen we have added $25,000 more, making it $65,000. The purpose of adding the $10,000 on the part of the Senate was to provide for the additional expense that would be incurred by the Department in providing free franking privilege on envelopes that are to be furnished with the voucher to each of the pensioners, so that when he receives his voucher he would receive a penalty frank envelope, addressed to the proper pension agent in which to return the voucher after it is filled up to the proper agent.

That is provided for in Senate amendment No. 8, and we have concurred in that, and I think this will avoid some mistakes and save the pensioners trouble and expense. This $65,000, however, or a part of it, was put in for the purpose of enabling the Department to purchase adding machines and addressers and in reducing the expenses of paying the pensions. In my opinion, that being done and a provision for it being made, the President is at liberty, if not required, to reduce these pension agencies down to at least the number that was provided originally by law, though perhaps not to one. I may say that the conferees on the part of the House were of one mind about this matter. We had frequent conferences, and we have agreed upon this as the best provision that could be made and agreed upon. The Senate has concurred in this conference report already, and I think we should concur now.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, as one of the conferees on the part of the House, I am unable to concur in this report, and I ask the House to reject it, for the reason that it marks a square backdown and recession from the position that this House has twice taken on the subject of the discontinuance of these unnecessary pension agencies, and a backward step in a praiseworthy attempt to abolish useless offices, and thereby prevent a shameful waste of public money.

This report as it comes back to this body carries not only every dollar that was proposed for the maintenance of these agencies and for the payment of their expenses, but carries $10,000 more for administration than was suggested when the bill was originally considered here, that sum being added to the appropriation for stationery for the purpose of furnishing the pensioners with addressed franked envelopes to be used by them in returning their vouchers. As to that particular expenditure I make no special complaint; but I do say that this House, after having twice declared itself by decisive majorities with reference to the abolition of these pension agencies, ought to stand its ground and not permit itself to be run over by the Senate in any such manner as this report instances. [Loud applause.]

Now, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], the chairman of the House conferees, says that this whole matter is in the discretion of the President. Ah, that is true as to all these pension agencies established under the act of 1867 and the subsequent acts, which are practically reprints thereof; but there were pension agencies established by acts of Congress before that time—four or five in number, if I mistake not—which are beyond the President's power. But whether that be true or not, I for one object to putting on the Executive a responsibility that the legislative department of this Government ought to assume. [Renewed applause.] I for one object to asking the President to take the responsibility of destroying these agencies, when it is the duty of Congress to attend to this matter. We should do our duty and not shirk it, in the hope that the President will do it for us. I want to call your attention to the fact that the President has had this matter put up to him in at least as vigorous shape as is proposed by this report and by the language of the bill as agreed on in conference for over a year, and he has done nothing whatever in the premises. The last pension appropriation bill carried this proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall make inquiry and report to Congress at the beginning of its next regular session the effect of the reduction of the present pension agencies to one such agency upon the economic execution of the pension laws, the prompt and efficient payment of pensioners, and the inconvenience to pensioners, if any, which would result from such reduction. This provision shall not be construed to interfere with or limit the right of the President under existing law in respect to reduction or consolidation of existing pension agencies.

Now, in response to that inquiry, an inquiry addressed to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions by the Senate as well as the House, the information comes here in the shape of an emphatic recommendation for the disestablishment of these agencies and an unequivocal statement that no pensioner in the United States will suffer any inconvenience by reason of their abolition. This information was asked by both Houses.

It has been acted on by one, but the Senate passed this bill, as I am advised, in three and one-half minutes without any consideration whatever of the report of the Secretary of the Interior or of the information that he communicated in response to the joint request of the House and Senate; and without debate or division adopted, as a part of the bill, the amendments restoring these agencies and multiplying and increasing the cost of administration.

There has not been an appropriation bill considered by this House during this session that the attention of the Congress has not been called to the facts that the revenues are decreasing, expenditures increasing, and that each day's operations increase the deficit in the Treasury.

What are you going to do about it? The pensioners have to be paid. The amount necessary for their payment is ascertained by a mathematical calculation, but this reform will save hundreds of thousands of dollars in administration annually. Is the House going to stand here and permit itself to be walked over roughshod and the expense of maintaining this useless and expensive machinery continued, when a clear way is pointed out to reduce these expenditures and save money without the slightest inconvenience to the pensioners or anybody else except the useless agents who so vigorously object to being separated from the Public Treasury?

Now, it may be said that we are justified in yielding here, are justified in surrendering the position of the House, because to contend further will endanger the bill, endanger the provisions for the payment of the pensioners.

Mr. HAMLIN. What would be saved in cost if the number of these pension agencies were reduced to one?

Mr. BOWERS. Why, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is authority for the statement that it will save over $400,000 a year. His latest estimates show an annual saving of about $450,000, and from my investigation I am convinced that he is correct.

Mr. HARDY. Without any detriment to the service?

Mr. BOWERS. On the contrary, to the positive improvement and betterment of the service. Now, let me return to this question as to whether the refusal to agree to this conference report will endanger the payment of pensions.

I can not for the life of me see how it can. It is apparent that this Congress is going to sit here several days longer, at least. Two joint resolutions, one carrying every dollar necessary to pay the pensioners, and the other providing for the cost of administration, could be put through this House in less time than it takes to describe it, and I speak for this whole minority when I say that if you will vote down this conference report and resort to one joint resolution carrying enough money to pay the pensioners, and another joint resolution to provide for the expenses of administration, according to the idea of the House of the amount needed for administration, those resolutions will be permitted to go through by unanimous consent, and without a roll call, and the minority leader [Mr. WILLIAMS] nods his approval of that proposition. So it is up to you, gentlemen, to save this money or to waste it, just as you choose.

You can save it by voting down this report and passing a joint resolution providing the money to pay the pensioners, and another joint resolution providing in a lump sum what you think necessary—not what the Senate wants—for the administration of the Pension Office, leaving it for the head of that Bureau to work out the details and method of payment the best way he can, and that, of course, will mean a reduction of these agencies to one. And it must not be understood that the defeat of this report will defeat the bill. It will mean simply that the House refuses to concur in the amendments of the Senate, and the bill can and will go at once back to conference.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Is it not true that in the Fifty-ninth Congress the House abolished these agencies and the Senate pursued the same tactics and forced them back upon the House in a conference report?

Mr. BOWERS. Certainly; and we really got more out of the conference in the Fifty-ninth Congress than we get here. If you adopt this report, you will be one year behind where you were at the beginning of this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used nine minutes.

Mr. BOWERS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the measure now pending, and I take this opportunity to call the attention of the country to the attitude of the Republican floor leader [Mr. PAYNE] toward the farmers and toward their interests generally.

I have a measure here unanimously reported by the Agricultural Committee, a bill that seeks to safeguard the matter of gathering agricultural statistics and the publication of the same, to prevent falsification, and so forth. That bill is unanimously reported and is now on the Calendar, and to-day I asked unanimous consent to call that measure up and to pass it, and objection came not from the Democratic side.

The president of the Farmers' National Congress favors this legislation. The president of the Southern Cotton Association indorses it, and the president of the Farmers' Union is enthusiastically for it. The farmers all over the country favor it, and they want this legislation, but their wants amount to but little with the Republican floor leader [Mr. PAYNE] and his party in this House.

If this were a trust measure or a ship subsidy you could count on the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to give to it his unqualified and enthusiastic support. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But, sir, if the legislation is in the interest of the people generally, or the farmers of the country, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], ever watchful of certain special interests, rises and objects. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

How long, Mr. Speaker, will the people be deceived by the deception that we see practiced by Republican leaders every day? How can any honest man oppose this bill to safeguard agricultural statistics?

Here is the bill and report:

A bill (H. R. 21847) to prevent falsifications in the collection and compilation of agricultural statistics and the unauthorized issuance and publication of the same.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person in the employment of the Government of the United States to divulge, or cause to be divulged, or in any way to give out, or cause to be given out, publish, or make known to anyone not authorized by law to have or receive the same, any information, statistical or otherwise, acquired by virtue of his employment by or official position with any Department of the Government of the United States regarding the reports on crop conditions prior to the hour that the crop estimate is published as is now required by law.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person in the employment of the Government of the United States to divulge, or cause to be divulged, or in any way to give out, or cause to be given out, publish, or make known to anyone not authorized by law to have or receive the same, any information, statistical or otherwise, obtained by virtue of his employment by or official position with the Government of the United States regarding the amount of cotton ginned prior to the day fixed by law for the publication of the ginners' report obtained by the Census Department.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any officer or employee of the United States of America, whose duties require the collection, compilation, or report of statistics or information relative to the products of the soil, knowingly to collect, compile, or report for issuance or issue any false statistics or information relative to such products.

SEC. 4. That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall upon conviction be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for a period of not more than five years, or both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. HASKINS, from the Committee on Agriculture, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 21847:

"The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21847) to prevent falsifications in the collection and compilation of agricultural statistics and the unauthorized issuance and publication of the same, have had the same under consideration and unanimously recommend the passage of the bill."

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to say that the Democrats here are all in favor of it. Here is a petition to the Speaker of the House, signed by the Democratic Members, requesting him to allow me or some one else to call up the bill and pass it. Here is the petition:

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

We, the undersigned, Members of the House, respectfully request that you recognize Mr. HEFLIN or some one else to move a suspension of the rules and pass the bill above mentioned. It is an important measure and ought to pass at this session of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I want the country to know that there is no law now to punish an employee of the Government for obtaining and selling statistical information to the cotton and grain gamblers of this country. There is no law to punish them for giving out false information on the day fixed by law for publishing crop reports, and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, we can pass my bill in one minute, if the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection. Speculation in the coming crop will amount to a great deal to the speculators, and in the absence of some law to protect agricultural statistics the farmers are at the mercy of the smart rascals of the gambling exchanges. If a man can be found like Holmes, who will sell this information, the gamblers will rejoice and the man can not be punished.

Mr. Speaker, in the coming campaign the gentleman from New York, along with the other leaders of your party, must face the charge of deceit and unfaithfulness to the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am very much in sympathy with the attitude taken by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BOWERS] on this question. I agree with him almost wholly in the statement of facts. The conferees of the Senate did declare that they gave no consideration whatever to the question of consolidating the pension agencies, or any other feature of the bill. It is a fact that I think they declared they passed this measure, carrying $162,000,000, in three and one-half minutes of time; that they utterly ignored the fact that they had joined with the House in asking information of the Interior Department concerning the propriety of consolidating the pension agencies; but in the agreement here there is a provision which has not existed in any previous bill. There are two provisions. First, we have heretofore appropriated for eighteen agencies. Now we appropriate an amount of money to carry eighteen agencies—and here is the difference—"or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The Pension Commissioner stated in the hearings, as I remember, that if he had undertaken to consolidate he had no money to meet the necessary expenses attending consolidation. If the consolidation shall take place at any time, there is in the next provision, namely, an appropriation for clerical hire, or so much thereof as may be necessary, something which will give him a contingent fund, or a fund out of which he may meet the expenses necessary to the transfer of the agencies to this city and their consolidation. There is all we have in this bill. It opens the way. It does put it up to the President. In a way it has been there, but it calls his attention directly to it. It is not what we wanted, we are frank to say. It is not what we believe we ought to have, but it is the best that we could get at this time, and therefore we accepted it rather than throw the whole matter over and take the chances of not having the provision with which to meet the payment of the pensioners.

Mr. BOWERS. I yield three minutes, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the adoption of this conference report. I do not agree with the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] that this is the best that we can get at this time. The idea! When a proposition is submitted to this House, as it now is, that we can effect a saving of $400,000 money admittedly to be expended for the payment of useless salaries, that we ought to submit to the payment of these salaries and continue this useless expense because the Senate sees fit to insist upon it, telling us at the same time that they have given the matter no consideration! Mr. Speaker, if this House will maintain its self-respect and insist upon the consolidation of these agencies, I have not the least doubt that the Senate will ultimately recede. When this matter was before the House, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations made it perfectly plain that this saving could be effected if these agencies were consolidated.

I now desire to place the responsibility upon the individual Republicans here, so you can not escape it. In the face of the fact that we are going to have a billion-dollar session of Congress, are you willing to save $400,000 by voting against this report? The issue is now squarely before you. If you vote for the adoption of this report, do not go back to your constituents and say you could not prevent extravagance. The chance is now given you. One more opportunity is afforded the distinguished leaders of the Republican party to come to the aid of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and effect a saving of the public money. Will you do it, or would you rather have the jobs? Will you swing to the jobs that are at the bottom of this $400,000 rather than protect the purses of the people by voting to reject this conference report? I fear you can not resist the temptation.

I say now, again, the responsibility is placed directly upon every individual Republican Representative upon this floor when you vote on this report, and you can not escape the consequence to follow unless you are willing to return to your constituents and deliberately falsify, and that surely you will not do. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the opportunity is given the Republican majority here to save this money that your chairman tells you can be saved without injury to the public service, that the Senate conferees admit they have refused to consider whether it should be saved, that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER], who has just preceded me, tells you ought to be saved. Now, will you do it? If you vote for this conference report, I say to you that the country will know, and every intelligent constituent in your districts will know, that you belie your words when you say you have sought to keep down extravagant appropriations. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I want to make just a few observations in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] that this report marks the best the House can get. I have listened with some care to find out what it was that the House gets in this report and I have not found that it gets anything except every dollar and item of unnecessary expense restored to this bill with $10,000 on top of it, and we are just $10,000 worse off than we were this time one year ago, so far as expense is concerned. I do not believe any gentleman within the sound of my voice is going to deceive himself with the idea that there is anything in the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

I want you to understand that the sum of $72,000 "for the payment of pension agents at $4,000 a year," is put back into this bill by this report, and $72,000 at $4,000 a year means eighteen pension agencies just as surely as figures do not lie; and that $435,000 has been put back into the bill for the clerical force of these agencies, except that $25,000 has been shifted from the appropriation for clerk hire to that for stationery, in order that some of the money that has heretofore been expended for clerks may be used for the purchase of labor-saving devices, such as addressing machines, and the like, for use in the various pension agencies throughout the country.

The suggestion of my friend from Michigan, that this is the best that the House can get, reminds me very forcibly of the division made of the results of a day's hunt between an Indian and a white man. They went out and hunted very faithfully for one full day and killed a buzzard and a turkey, and as they were about to separate the white man said to the Indian, "You can take the turkey and I will take the buzzard, or I will take the turkey and you can take the buzzard, whichever you see fit." The Indian, after thinking about it a little while, said, "Umph, never heard white man say Indian turkey once." [Applause on the Democratic side.] And the House and the cause of economy gets just about as much out of this report as the Indian got out of his hunt. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, It is not worth while to get excited over this matter, nor is it worth while to arraign the Republican party for not getting through good legislation. We have had 224 recent roll calls here, and if we had not had them we could have had twenty-two or twenty-three days, with sessions of five hours each, if it had not been for the opposition and conduct of gentlemen who now are claiming that if we do not get good legislation we are responsible for it. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, let us be fair. My colleague on the conference committee [Mr. BOWERS] was not more zealous than myself in trying to reduce these agencies. We had no dispute among ourselves as to our attitudes, but he now comes and suggests as an alternative that we pass, before we adjourn this session, a joint resolution continuing the appropriation of last year into the next. Why does he do that? That will not discontinue an agency, but make certain the continuance of all of them. That will not touch the question at issue at all; it will leave us just where he complains we are now left, and worse.

But we are not left there, as the law will be if the conference report is agreed to. There was an argument made to a Democratic President in Cleveland's time that he should not discontinue agencies, because Congress had appropriated specifically for eighteen agencies. We appropriate, it is true, $72,000 for the agents, but we provide, "or so much thereof as may be necessary." In that way we put in an entering wedge, and, in my opinion, if the President of the United States remains of the opinion he is said to have expressed, and the Secretary of the Interior remains in the same view, and also the Commissioner of Pensions, it will be their duty to examine and see whether there is any misapplication of money in continuing these agents. It is said that the President has the power to discontinue agencies under the law now. I think he has, and yet a Democratic President refused to act under it at one time. We have the power and we are proposing to make it easier.

The law was first passed in 1867 authorizing the President of the United States to establish agencies, and it was reenacted in 1882 with the same provision with reference to the establishment of agencies, but we have not cut them down lately. We are now proposing to do as my colleague from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] said, the best we can. We have obtained some material concessions from the Senate. The conferees on the part of the Senate reported to the conferees on the part of the House that the Senate was unanimously against it. We were not unanimous here in this House, there was a division on the passage of this bill, and we propose to leave it with the provisions I have mentioned where it belongs, namely, with the administration of the law. Now, that is enough to be said. The suggestion that we could do better by being obstinate and remaining a little longer is a good enough one under some circumstances, but it will not reach this case. The conferees have had seven sessions.

The conferees on the part of the Senate, the original conferees, were wholly changed. The final conferees agreed on this proposition because they could not do any better at this session. We have simply come to a place where the best we can do is to put the responsibility on the Administration in a more emphatic way than hitherto. I understand we have the largest pension appropriation bill that ever passed a Congress of the United States. The total for the payment of pensioners alone is $162,000,000 and something over a million dollars in addition for the purpose of paying pensions, and in that we have had but very little difference among the conferees. We have provided, as my colleague on the other side said, for a step to be taken in the reduction of agencies by giving money enough to the Commissioner of Pensions to purchase addressing machines and equipping them, adding machines, so that the whole work can ultimately be done very much cheaper and with less agencies. This conference has been concurred in on the part of the Senate. To my mind it is impossible to accomplish anything more than we have accomplished in this conference report and I think the wisdom of the House will be shown by adopting it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon suspending the rules and agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BOWERS. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I think there is no quorum present, and I make that point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present and the Door-keeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 152, nays 89, answered "present" 10, not voting 136, as follows:

COAL DEPOSITS IN ALASKA.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands of the House to move, and I do move, to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 6805, an act to encourage the development of coal deposits in the Territory of Alaska.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] moves to suspend the rules and pass the following Senate bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 6805) to encourage the development of coal deposits in the Territory of Alaska.

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons, their heirs or assigns, who have in good faith personally or by an attorney in fact made locations of coal land in the Territory of Alaska in their own interest, prior to November 12, 1906, or in accordance with circular of instructions issued by the Secretary of the Interior May 16, 1907, may consolidate their said claims or locations by including in a single claim, location, or purchase not to exceed 2,560 acres of contiguous lands, not exceeding in length twice the width of the tract thus consolidated, and for this purpose such persons, their heirs or assigns, may form associations or corporations who may perfect entry of and acquire title to such lands in accordance with the other provisions of law under which said locations were originally made: Provided, That no corporation shall be permitted to consolidate its claims under this act unless 75 per cent of its stock shall be held by persons qualified to enter coal lands in Alaska.

SEC. 2. That the United States shall, at all times, have the preference right to purchase so much of the product of any mine or mines opened upon the lands sold under the provisions of this act as may be necessary for the use of the Army and Navy, and at such reasonable and remunerative price as may be fixed by the President; but the producers of any coal so purchased who may be dissatisfied with the price thus fixed shall have the right to prosecute suits against the United States in the Court of Claims for the recovery of any additional sum or sums they may claim as justly due upon such purchase.

SEC. 3. That if any of the lands or deposits purchased under the provisions of this act shall be owned, leased, trusted, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever so that they form part of, or in any way effect any combination, or are in any wise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, mortgage, stock ownership, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres in the district of Alaska, the title thereto shall be forfeited to the United States by proceedings instituted by the Attorney-General of the United States in the courts for that purpose.

SEC. 4. That every patent issued under this act shall expressly recite the terms and conditions prescribed in sections 2 and 3 hereof.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands a second. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to twenty minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this Senate act, as its title indicates, is an act to encourage the development of coal deposits in the district of Alaska. It becomes necessary by reason of the conditions existing in the coal fields there. It authorizes those who have heretofore made valid locations to consolidate their locations in areas not to exceed 2,560 acres, and, by paying the Government price of $10 per acre, obtain a title to the consolidated entry. The Senate act now before the House is in the form proposed by the Interior Department. It is a carefully guarded piece of legislation, required in order to make possible the development of the coal regions of the Territory of Alaska. The second and third sections of the bill are new in our land legislation.

The second section is one which gives the United States the preference right to purchase the products of these mines for the use of the Army and the Navy at a price to be fixed by the President. The third section is, in my opinion, the most drastic, binding, comprehensive, and all-embracing antimonopoly, anticombination statute ever presented to Congress, and the credit of that, as I understand, belongs to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS]. Mr. Speaker, the necessity for this legislation is fully appreciated by all those who know the situation in Alaska. It is highly important that the hardy prospectors who located the coal fields of that far distant country should have an opportunity by combining their original locations to make an entry of sufficient area to make a coal operation profitable. We are now paying, as I understand it, from $9 to $10 a ton for Pocahontas coal alongside of our war vessels in San Francisco Harbor, while we could just as well be using this Alaskan coal, which could undoubtedly be laid down at from $3 to $4 a ton. We are now buying nearly all the coal used on the Pacific coast from the Canadian mines, or at least a large portion of it. The opening and development of the Alaskan field will bring these American coals into competition with the Canadian coals and very greatly reduce the price.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask how much an entryman may take up under this law?

Mr. MONDELL. One hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. What is the law covering the entry of coal lands in Alaska?

Mr. MONDELL. Under the present law entries are limited to 160 acres. It is entirely impossible to carry on a coal operation in that country on 160 acres of land. This will enable them to consolidate a sufficient number of claims in order that it may be possible to establish a working plant.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. The effect of this, then, will be to modify and suspend all the laws and allow the acquisition of large tracts of coal lands.

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all. It applies to the locations made heretofore under the law, and simply enables these people to consolidate those locations so as to make it possible to operate in that region. The maximum area is very much smaller than the area generally occupied by a large coal operation in the gentleman's own State.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any precedent for this legislation?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; the House passed a bill like this a year ago; not so good and not so carefully guarded a bill. It passed the Senate, but did not reach the President until just before adjournment.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. How far are these lands from the means of water transportation?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, one field, as I understand it, is about 125 miles from the coast; the other field is nearer.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Are there means of railroad transportation now?

Mr. MONDELL. There is not any railroad transportation at this time; and those who are contemplating building roads do not feel justified in their construction until the entrymen secure a means of acquiring title to their coal lands.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. How long does the settler have to be upon the 160 acres that you have mentioned before he gets title to the same and is in a position to sell it to others?

Mr. MONDELL. There is no residence required on a coal claim, as the gentleman knows. These locations were made from three to five years ago, but have not been perfected. This simply provides for the perfection of these entries made a number of years ago, and limits the amount which any company or association or combination can acquire to 2,560 acres.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If any gentleman on this side desires time I will yield it to him.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would like to have four or five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Public Lands had very extended hearings on this subject. Those hearings developed the fact that under the limit fixed in the existing law as to the amount of coal land which may be acquired by any person, association of persons, corporation, or association of corporations are inadequate. Many attempts have been made to evade the laws. The hearings also disclosed the fact that for the proper operation of mines or coal lands of the character which probably exist in Alaska it is necessary that the area be enlarged.

There is another feature of this bill which is deemed of considerable importance, and that is the provision which seeks to prevent a monopoly in the coal lands in Alaska. The House committee during the hearings adopted a provision which I myself had the honor to draw, and we were fairly well satisfied with that, but a member of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS], afterwards called attention to the fact that the amendment as drawn would probably not prevent holding corporations from acquiring control of larger areas, and so, as I understand it, he drafted the provision in the Senate bill to prevent monopoly and it was incorporated in the Senate bill as prepared by him.

The Senate bill in that regard is more rigid than the House bill, and the object of that provision is to prevent, if possible, what has already occurred in some parts of the United States—the creation of a monopoly which might control the coal output of the great Territory of Alaska for all time to come. I believe that the provisions of this bill are meritorious. I believe that it will enable honest men who seek to do business in a legitimate way to develop that great country. Many years ago, when the United States acquired the Territory of Alaska, it was universally regarded as an unimportant acquisition. The past forty years have already evidenced a degree of growth and development that is amazing to all the world; and no man, even in this day, can look into the future and tell what possibilities lie locked within the embrace of that great Territory.

I believe that this legislation will result in the development of the coal fields of this country. It will be beneficial to the United States. Instead of securing its coal from foreign countries, from the British provinces, the United States, when it sends its fleet to the Pacific coast, can then secure Alaskan coal. I believe if this bill be adopted, it will prevent the acquisition of a monopoly in the coal mines of Alaska.

I yield back such time as I have not used to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is there any other gentleman who desires to speak on this side?

Mr. HACKNEY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question. I should like to inquire if the purpose of this bill is to apply only to past locations?

Mr. ROBINSON. This applies only to past locations.

Mr. HACKNEY. How about future locations? Do you intend to give the same benefits to persons locating hereafter? Would not the same argument apply to those cases?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; the argument would apply, but it was not thought by the Committee on the Public Lands that it was best to undertake a revision of the general coal laws at this time. That committee has, I believe, under consideration a bill looking to the general revision of the coal laws.

Mr. HACKNEY. I should like to ask another question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I want to make another statement in this connection. I have been asked by some of my friends over here why it was that the limitation of 2,560 acres was placed in this bill. The only answer I can make to that is that some limitation had to be fixed. The Department of the Interior thinks, and that seemed to be the well-supported opinion on the subject, that 2,560 was a fair and reasonable limitation. Some limitation was necessary to be made, and we think that coal operations can be carried on under that limitation profitably.

Mr. HACKNEY. We have had a good deal of talk about the Government giving away its valuable rights. Has the Committee on the Public Lands considered the propriety of making a charge on the coal that these parties take out; the propriety of exacting some revenue to the Government for the vast amount of coal that it gives away?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; we had under consideration a number of matters—a proposition to provide for the leasing of coal lands—but this bill does not contemplate any such action.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman state how much in area these coal fields amount to?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is not known. We can not give definite information as to that. Much of the territory is unexplored.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How many 2,560-acre tracts could be put together under this bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Only one. The object of the bill is, as I tried to make clear, to prevent the putting together of more than 2,560 acres under one management.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How many entries have been made up there on coal lands? Is the number one, ten, or fifty, or what?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How many 2,560-acre tracts could be made under this bill under the entries already made?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there have been 231 surveys made in the district of Alaska of 160-acre tracts, comprising 37,000 acres of land. There are probably a few more entries that have not been surveyed. There is at least that area.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman from Arkansas any information, or has the committee any information, as to the numbers of veins of coal there are on these lands?

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Nor the thickness of the veins?

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Then how does the gentleman arrive at the conclusion or the determination as to what the limitation should be on the amount of land involved if the committee has no means of estimating the amount of coal?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will state to the gentleman that the question presents great difficulty, not alone in Alaska, but in the United States itself. That is a very vital question and a very difficult one to answer. The only answer to it is that some arbitrary limitation must be fixed, but it is thought that past experience in the operation of coal mines, not in Alaska—because there have been no mining operations in coal there to any considerable extent—but in the United States, where surveys indicate that the character of coal is similar to that in Alaska, the area of 2,560 acres would be a fair and reasonable limitation, looking both to the progress and development of the country and at the same time preventing the existence or the creation of monopolies there.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Two thousand five hundred and sixty acres of land with several veins of coal on it from 4 feet in thickness upward would produce an enormous amount of coal. Coal usually produces, after allowing for the waste, about 1,000 tons per foot in thickness per acre. If you have a 4-foot vein on your acreage of 2,560 acres you would have over 10,000,000 tons of coal on that acreage alone. If you have several veins of coal, some of them thicker than that, it runs up to an enormous tonnage, and how the committee or this body is able to determine what the limitation should be on the amount of acreage, when they do not know what the thickness of coal is, is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. ROBINSON. Unquestionably, Mr. Speaker, the existence of the veins are questions to be determined largely hereafter, as well as their thickness. But as I have already stated, it has been definitely determined that 160 acres is not sufficient in area to warrant persons going there and investing their capital in developing the coal mining industries of Alaska. It has been necessary to extend that so as to get transportation facilities.

The Interior Department and those who investigated the matter agree on the limitation of 2,560 acres, which I repeat again is necessarily arbitrary. Many areas of coal lands in Alaska, as in every part of the United States, are more valuable and produce more than other coal lands, but you have to fix some limitation, or at least we thought some limitation ought to be fixed, and we thought that a limitation of 2,560 acres was about the best that could be determined.

Mr. SIMS. Are they vertical or lateral veins?

Mr. ROBINSON. All sorts.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman not think we ought to have some information as to the value of those lands before we determine the limit?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will state to the gentleman that that is a new country. Men who go there and take their picks on their shoulders and go into that wild country take the chances that all explorers take, and you can not get that information until somebody has gone there and started to develop.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. And surveyed it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. And I will state further, proceeding along that line, that at the last session of Congress I sought to get some legislation looking to the Government going there and making those surveys, but the Government is not doing that and is not proposing to do so, and if the Alaskan coal fields are to be developed, and I think they ought to be developed, we ought to permit explorers to go there and take the chances that explorers have taken always since the beginning. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CRAIG].

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, from the investigations made in our committee, as I gather it, these are entries which have already been made and have been made for many years. They were made under the coal-land laws, which provide a flat rate of $10 per acre for the payment for Government coal lands in Alaska. These men went there and entered some 240 or 250 of those 160-acre tracts, and they entered them under the coal laws.

Now, we found out that they can not work these lands prof-itally unless they are allowed to combine these entries which have already been made, and that is what they are asking for. They do not ask in this bill to be allowed to take any more land or to take in large areas, but they ask to be allowed to combine entries which they have now and to develop their claims and go ahead and develop the country. Now, it may be that a very rich vein of coal in this country could be worked profitably on a far less area than 2,500 acres. I do not gainsay that for a moment; but these men are a long way from their supplies. They have to carry all of their material from Seattle. They have to ship everything there now a long way from railroad transportation. Even after they get their supplies from this country up to Alaska, they have to transport them overland for a long ways; and in order to get railroads into this country it is necessary to show them that the mines are to be opened up, and it is impossible to show that unless you show them that there are enough acres combined to justify people in opening the mines.

That is all that this bill is, as I understand it. It does not ask for any more land, but it asks that these prospectors, who have been hardy enough to go up into this frozen country and make these claims to find out what was there, may get together and combine their entries, so that they can make money out of what they have there; and they have paid their $10 an acre under the flat rate in Alaska, as I understand it. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to use any more time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN].

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that there is anything that I can contribute to this debate in addition to what has been already said on this bill. However, there are one or two points which, if well understood by the House in the beginning, would relieve some of the embarrassment regarding the consideration of this bill. In the first place, this bill does not seek to give to any man any more coal land than he is now entitled to under the law.

Under the present law an individual entryman is entitled to 160 acres, and this bill does not seek to enlarge that amount for any individual entryman whatever. Under this bill the entryman simply gets the same amount in area of coal land to which he is now entitled. However, the situation is that men have found out by actual experience in Alaska that no man can go to work up there with any degree of success or satisfaction and develop a coal mine on 160 acres of land. Now, this bill simply seeks by law to give to sixteen individuals, who hold 160 acres each of coal land, the right to consolidate those sixteen entries into one tract and then secure a patent therefor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose sixteen other individuals hereafter take claims, why should they be denied the same right to combine in order to compete with these sixteen?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Well, the Secretary of the Interior in making this recommendation limited his recommendation to entries made prior to November 12, 1906. Personally I have no objection to the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill would tend to give a monopoly to those who made entries prior to the time limit fixed.

Mr. CUSHMAN. As I understand it, practically all the coal land in Alaska has been located, at least in the fields now known. Men have been up there for many years locating in these coal fields, but they have been unable to successfully develop and operate these coal lands by reason of the tremendous cost and lack of railroad facilities. No man would build a railroad that cost several million dollars that reached only one coal claim of 160 acres. The men who are expected to furnish the railroad transportation to get this coal out desire that the men who hold the coal lands shall develop the coal lands until a sufficient tonnage is in sight to justify the building of a railroad.

Mr. TIRRELL. May I ask the gentleman whether these coal lands are in the interior or on the coast?

Mr. CUSHMAN. The Katalla coal field is about 125 miles from the coast, along the line of the railroad that is expected to be built. The other coal lands, farther north and west, lie farther to the interior and farther from tide water. Mr. Speaker, I suggest we now have a vote. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The point is well taken. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absentees; and as many as favor the motion will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 147, nays 38, answered "present" 14, not voting 188, as follows:

REARRANGEMENT OF SEATS IN HOUSE.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 419.

Resolved, That the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds is hereby directed to rearrange in a temporary way before the reassembling of the Congress in December, 1908, under the supervision and direction of the Speaker, the Hall of the House of Representatives and the seating arrangements therein, to conform to the purposes of the plans submitted to the Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, House Report No. 2206, and the expenses of such rearrangement are hereby authorized to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina demands a second. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS] to twenty minutes.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I wanted to know if I could not arrange with the gentleman from Massachusetts to let this matter go over until to-morrow morning. It is very important.

Mr. McCALL. I would be delighted to have it go over until to-morrow, but I would say to the gentleman that I have been endeavoring for a week to bring this up, and at this stage of the session we have got to give way to conference reports. I should be glad to have it voted on to-morrow.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was, as I supposed, reported unanimously by the Committee on the Library, but the gentleman from North Carolina, who has just demanded a second, was not present at our meeting; so that I would say that it was reported by a unanimous vote of the members present, all being present except one member. It is a matter in which many of the Members of the House of Representatives have taken a great interest. It was a favorite plan of one who was a very great figure in the history of this House—Speaker Reed. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] has in a previous Congress introduced a resolution of similar purport to this one; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] proposed to present this very proposition at the present session, but was unable to do so because of his work upon a special investigating committee of the House; and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] has taken a great interest in the matter and has really prepared the resolution which is now pending.

I might mention other Members, but I shall not take the time. The resolution has for its purpose making the Chamber of the House of Representatives suitable for a deliberative body. It is only necessary to say that the extreme dimensions of this House are 139 feet over the galleries by 93 feet, containing an area of nearly 13,000 square feet, by all odds the largest legislative hall existing anywhere in the world—three times as large as the House of Commons in England, with its 673 members; more than twice as large as the Chamber of Deputies of the French Republic, with its 558 members.

Now, it is proposed to put a partition across just this side the door upon the side leading to the cloakrooms and at the corresponding door on the other side. That will leave this Chamber very much larger than that of the House of Commons in Great Britain and larger than the hall of the Chamber of Deputies in France.

Desks were put in the House originally because of the necessity that Members were under of conducting their correspondence while they were in attendance upon the House. By a very close vote, in 1859, those desks were ordered removed; and then, by a very close vote, the size of the Hall not having been changed, they were at the session next following again restored. Mr. Asher Hinds, in the forthcoming edition of his book on Parliamentary Precedents, says that the reason given for the restoration of the desks really was the strongest reason for their abolition, and that was that the Members could frank their documents and write their letters while in attendance upon the House. That was an excuse of some validity at that time, when they had no private secretaries and were compelled to do a great amount of clerical work themselves, and when they had no rooms in close proximity to the House where they might conduct their correspondence.

To-day, Mr. Speaker, we have our private secretaries, and each Member has, very near to the House, an office where his files and his letters are kept, a place to do his correspondence, and there is no reason and no excuse why a Member whose duty it is to pay attention to public business should be engaged in his correspondence in the Hall of the House. Times and conditions have radically changed since that close action of the House was taken to which I have referred.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are gentlemen who have voices sonorous enough to fill this Hall if the House is quiet; but the normal condition is one of confusion, and then there is nobody whose voice can entirely fill the Hall. We have often had the experience of taking people to the galleries, possibly constituents of ours, possibly people from other countries, who are studying the workings of American institutions and who are ready to look sympathetically upon the workings of the great representative body of the American people; and it is almost the invariable rule that they look down upon a scene of noise and confusion and are able to hear nothing that is going on. They look down upon a scene similar to that which the imagination of Milton pictured in another assembly, very different, where the noise was so great that it "frightened the reign of Chaos and Old Night." [Laughter.]

It is unnecessary to argue that we can not deliberate under such conditions as these. Nature aims to distribute her gifts. Sometimes, it is true, she gives to one man a fine brain and a powerful voice, but that is the exception. More often she unites a fine intellect with a slender voice, and she gives a powerful voice to a man to whom she is somewhat parsimonious in the matter of brains. [Laughter.]

And so it happens oftentimes that we can not hear the man whom we desire to hear, while the man whom we do not desire to hear, whose observations would give us about as much pleasure as a severe attack of the toothache, we are compelled to listen to, or else fly from the Hall.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. McCALL. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman inform the House about what will be the cost of making the change?

Mr. McCALL. I wish the gentleman would bring my attention to that a little later. Upon the line on which I was speaking, I intended to cite the case of Governor Dingley, of Maine, with whom many Members now present served, a man of most extraordinary talent, but he had a delicate voice, and it was impossible to hear him unless you were somewhat close to him; and I doubt if in all the service of the gentleman from Maine in this House he was ever heard in the galleries.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman mean to say that Governor Dingley was not heard whenever he made a speech here?

Mr. McCALL. I say Governor Dingley's voice was not able to fill the entire Hall.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman's recollection is different from mine.

Mr. OLMSTED. Governor Dingley was heard over the whole country.

Mr. McCALL. I will cite the case of the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Holman, and I would like the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to this also. The gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Holman, was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and Mr. Reed said of him that he was a man of marvelous information, and yet it was impossible to hear the gentleman unless we crowded about him. That is a statement that I make upon the authority of Mr. Reed, and it was made to this House by Mr. Moody, then a Member of the House, who is now a justice of the Supreme Court.

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman takes his seat—

Mr. McCALL. First, I should like to know how much time I have occupied.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Nine minutes.

Mr. McCALL. I can only yield a moment, because I must give way to other gentlemen.

Mr. MANN. I want to get information.

Mr. McCALL. Certainly; I will give any I have.

Mr. MANN. Is the size of the room to be decreased?

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I should say that the size of the room is to be much decreased. I wish to say further that this change is only proposed, by the resolution, to be a temporary change. The architect says that he can easily make it at a comparatively small expense, and it is designed to have it for the use of the House at its next session. Then, if the House does not like the experiment, the old Hall will not be injured—we can restore it again—while, if the House does like the experiment, there will be an opportunity for the architect to struggle with a question which is vital to the health of the individual Members, and that is to see if he can not give this Hall somewhere a frontage upon the outer air.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says the size of the room is to be decreased. Is the size of the upper part of the room to be decreased?

Mr. McCALL. The size of the room is to be decreased right through, but not the ceiling.

Mr. MANN. What I want to know is, are the galleries to be decreased?

Mr. McCALL. Undoubtedly, the size of the galleries upon the sides would be smaller than now. Mr. Speaker, as there is great interest in this matter I should like to ask unanimous consent that we may have more time for discussion, fifteen minutes more on a side.

Mr. PAYNE. I will not object to that, Mr. Speaker, if a part of that time can be controlled by those on this side who are opposed to the proposition.

Mr. McCALL. This is not coming out of my time—

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. McCALL. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I did not mean to shut off the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts. Although I do not believe much debate will do any good on the subject, I am perfectly willing to have the fifteen-minute extension on each side, but I want the Members to sit down and listen. I was referring to the confusion.

Mr. McCALL. Will the Chair put the request to the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended fifteen minutes on a side.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Coupled with that request, I should like to ask unanimous consent that this matter go over until 11 o'clock to-morrow, in order that all the Members can be heard on both sides.

Mr. NEEDHAM. I object.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, then I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I should be glad if the vote could be taken to-morrow.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to amend that request by making it the first Thursday in December next.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I can not accept that. I am willing to settle it to-morrow, but I do think that we ought to have a full membership present.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended fifteen minutes on a side. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCALL. How much time have I consumed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ten minutes.

Mr. McCALL. I will now reply to the question of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman does that, if he will tell the House what the proposition is, as to how it is to be divided, I think he would add a great deal of enlightenment.

Mr. McCALL. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the proposition is to put a partition across on this side of the first door that leads to the cloakroom near each end of the Hall.

Mr. MANN. How high up is that partition to go?

Mr. McCALL. Up to the level of the gallery.

Mr. PAYNE. And then there is to be another partition above the galleries?

Mr. McCALL. When you get to the proper width of galleries there will be an additional partition to the ceiling, so the Hall will be symmetrical with the floor space to the extent I have given and the galleries of the same width they are now, encircling the Hall.

Mr. MANN. That would narrow the ceiling of the room.

Mr. McCALL. That would narrow the ceiling, but still the ceiling would not be out of proportion in height to the Hall of the House. The House of Commons and the House of Lords, both very beautiful chambers in appearance, with much smaller areas, are higher than the Hall of the House. By the way, I would say that this rearrangement of rooms would leave a lobby upon each side of the House 80 by 40 feet, which would go clear up to the roof, which would be of great use to Members.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand from the gentleman that the present galleries would be floored over and that there would be a partition on this side where the outer wall now is?

Mr. McCALL. The proposition is that it will not be floored over. I do not know just what the plan would be in the temporary arrangement, but in the permanent arrangement the partitions would come at the point I have indicated, and the galleries then would extend about 12 feet beyond that, and then beyond that it would be walled up, and there would be a high room going clear to the ceiling, 80 by 40, on each side of the House.

Mr. MANN. That would shut off the ventilation up above almost entirely.

Mr. McCALL. The architect assures me that the ventilation would be as good as it is now.

Mr. MANN. Every architect always assures that in respect to ventilation.

Mr. McCALL. Well, it could not be worse.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; it has been worse.

Mr. McCALL. If we contemplated a permanent change, then we could easily go to the outer air.

Now, with reference to the cost of this work, it can be done, Mr. Woods thinks, for $25,000 or $30,000, and done in very good shape. As that is only the cost of running the House for perhaps two days, while the Speaker wastes at least seven days in every session rapping for order. The expense would be comparatively nothing. The American people would gain it many-fold over in the increase of the efficiency of the House of Representatives. It is useless for us to delude ourselves. People who come to Washington and want to hear debate go to the Senate, not because the Senate is made up of abler men, but they look down here upon a chronic scene of chaos and confusion, and they do not carry home from the inspection a very exalted opinion of the American House of Representatives.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that this new arrangement proposes to take out the desks and thereby lessen the confusion. Now, my experience for nine years here has taught me that it is not the desks that create the confusion. I never saw a more orderly and quiet set of desks in my life [laughter]; the behavior of the furniture is ideal; it is the Members that create the confusion and not the desks.

Mr. McCALL. Yes; but the desks have operated as a temptation to Members to indulge in work that is not work of deliberation, and therefore I would say to the gentleman that the desks are of no use here whatever but an injury. There is no reason why the Members should have the desks when they are attending the sessions of the House.

I would say furthermore upon that point that the inability to hear in this great Hall leads Members to talk with each other and use their desks rather than to gaze idly upon a scene of confusion when they can hear nothing.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman mean to say that each Member of the House can carry in his mind information on the various subjects that are likely to come up without having memoranda in his desk, documents, and so forth, which he can take up and refresh his memory when the matter comes up?

Mr. McCALL. I think my friend from New York will be able to supply himself with memoranda from the committee room to meet any question that might come before the House.

Mr. PAYNE. Would the gentleman have a Member go to his committee room to get memoranda on every subject coming up before the House?

Mr. McCALL. I do not understand that Members carry full information in their desks—

Mr. PAYNE. A great many of them do.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman—

Mr. McCALL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, may we have order? We would like to hear what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. McCALL. That is an illustration of what we have a hundred times in the course of a session, and every Member knows it. [Applause.] You gentlemen with a beautiful voice like my friend from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN], who could be heard in a hall much larger than this, ought to be generous to those whom nature has not so royally endowed.

Mr. MURDOCK. May I ask the gentleman a question: Is each person under your plan to have an individual seat, or have all seats common?

Mr. McCALL. It is the purpose under this plan to have the change made under the direction of the Speaker. I have refrained from going too closely into details, because some gentlemen were favoring one plan and some another, and there might be danger that we would try none if the resolution dealt too much with details; but there could be either individual chairs provided or benches with divisions in them for each Member and a wide arm upon which he might take notes, with a pocket in the back of the bench in front of him, where, for instance, the gentleman from New York might put his papers.

Mr. MURDOCK. Do you preserve a dividing center aisle?

Mr. McCALL. Yes; we have a large open division there and a desk or table at which the members of the committee who are in charge of the business at the time before the House will have their places, both the majority and minority. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eighteen minutes remaining.

Mr. McCALL. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this resolution proposes not only to remodel this splendid Hall of the House of Representatives of the people of the United States, but also to take out the desks, which have been used in the Hall, except for a brief period, from time immemorial, and to put benches in the place of the desks, similar to the British House of Commons. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is final and sweeping. It proposes that under the supervision and direction of the Speaker of the House, the Superintendent of the Capitol Building shall rearrange the Hall of the House and seating arrangements, that the desks shall be removed, and benches shall be put in before Congress reassembles, so that if the Members of the House vote this resolution through to-night this change will be made during the recess. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the Committee on Library which reported this resolution, but I was not present when the resolution was considered and reported, on account of illness and death in my family, hence I did not vote in the committee for this resolution, nor did I agree to the report. I have not filed any minority report, because I hardly thought the matter would be pressed at this time. I regret to differ with my colleagues on the committee, but I can not now assent, and never have been able to give my assent, to the proposition contained in the resolution. I have had no full opportunity, Mr. Speaker, in the press of other matters during the last few weeks to examine carefully all the arguments pro and con, but I have always been opposed to converting this Hall into practically a British House of Commons. We have not only the greatest legislative body in the world in its personnel, in its ability, in the integrity of its membership, but also one of the best and most imposing Halls in which any parliamentary body in the world holds its sessions. [Applause.] To say the least, Mr. Speaker, and with all due respect to any gentleman who may differ with me, and speaking in a conservative way, the change proposed is a dangerous experiment and likely to prove unsatisfactory.

The resolution is mandatory. If you vote it through to-night or in the morning, this resolution changes the desks and puts benches in their place before the second session of this Congress. The plan proposed for remodeling the Hall and change in seating arrangement according to the resolution is in accordance with a report made by the Hon. Joel Heatwole in the Fifty-fifth Congress, which I have before me. I have here the plan for benches in place of desks proposed in that report, which, I take it, is similar to the map placed in front of the Speaker's desk. The Heatwole plan adopted by the committee proposes benches upon either side of the Hall in the place of desks.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the report declares the ground for the proposed change is to make the House more suitable for the transaction of business. The House tried the benches once, and the plan was unsatisfactory and very soon was abandoned. It appears in the report of the Library Committee that in 1859 the House, by a close vote, directed that the desks be removed and benches substituted for them; but in February, 1860, almost immediately afterwards, the desks were restored. It is true, Mr. Speaker, the dimensions of the Hall were not changed then, but we do not want to change the dimensions.

We want the Hall of the House, not for the people who go to the galleries, but we want it for the membership of the House, and for myself I prefer the Hall of the House of Representatives as it has always existed and as modeled by those who built the Capitol in preference to a hall which is modeled after the British system.

It is said we need a more deliberative body and one less noisy, in which Members can be heard. Mr. Speaker, if a Member has anything to say and knows how to say it, he has never had any difficulty in making himself heard in this Hall. Many a time, when important debates have been before the House, the silence has been so intense here that you could hear a pin drop almost, and no Member had any difficulty in being heard. Take out the desks and with the Office Building, Mr. Speaker, the attendance will be still less than it is now.

The desks are needed, in my opinion, for the convenience of the Members, not to write letters upon and to frank documents, but for convenience and to hold many valuable documents and data to be used in the debates which often unexpectedly arise. I believe to take the desks out would rather destroy than promote interest in debates. Now, what is it proposed to substitute? Benches, with individual chairs. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] says—he does not go into details—there would possibly be an arm on each chair, like the chairs I suppose we had in our school and college days, on which to take notes. The proposed rearrangement, Mr. Speaker, is said to be temporary only, but these benches, with individual chairs, or without chairs, are to be put in the Hall before December 1, which runs the date up to the beginning of the second session of this Congress. And the change once made, it would be difficult to replace the desks. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the gentlemen upon the Committee on the Library—I have the highest respect for all of them—personally I can not bring myself to support this resolution. I prefer the Hall of the American House of Representatives as it now exists. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, that is all I care to say now. How much time have I used?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Seven minutes.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], unless the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] wishes to yield to some one upon that side.

Mr. McCALL. I think the gentleman had better consume some more of his time.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I then yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a service of more than ten years as a Representative has convinced me that there should be some radical changes in the arrangement of this Hall. What we need more than anything else is to arrange it so that it will be healthful, so that it will be wholesome and comfortable. To make the changes proposed in the resolution and report from the Library Committee would not add to our comfort. Gentlemen in their report speak of reason and thought being impaired by vehemence of voice, necessary here in order to be heard. The trouble is that the architect who planned this structure provided for a hall within a hall. What really should be done is this: Tear out that partition immediately behind the Speaker and the one beyond it and give the Members ventilation from the outside. Let the open air of heaven sweep in upon us and give us life and vigor to sustain us through the day. [Applause.]

As it is arranged now, Mr. Speaker, at the end of the day's work we are exhausted. If you are going to make this change, change it so as to make it comfortable and wholesome for Members, no matter if it costs $100,000 or $200,000, or whatever the cost may be. And if we can not properly arrange this Hall, let us construct one above this; add another story if necessary.

But all this is aside from the main proposition. Mr. Speaker, I served in Congress when Mr. Reed was Speaker of the House of Representatives. I remember that whenever he sought to maintain order we always had good order. And I say this without meaning to reflect upon the present Speaker. Order can be maintained by him. When a Member has anything to say that is of great value, my experience is that the House and the galleries are anxious and willing to listen to him.

Whoever heard the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] address this body on a great occasion when he did not have the complete attention of the House of Representatives? Reference has been made to Mr. Dingley, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. I had the honor of serving in this House with him, and say to the present membership that whenever he arose in his place on that side he was listened to by both sides and had the very best attention from every Member on the floor. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, whenever any Member desires to be heard, as a rule, if order is invoked, this House listens to him. Only the other day I was almost at the Senate Chamber and heard some gentleman like my friend from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS] addressing the House, and could hear every word he uttered. The doors were thrown wide open in that direction. [Laughter.] The trouble is not the desks.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It must have been Mr. CLAYTON.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It might have been my friend Mr. CLAYTON, and I am sure we could hear him much farther, and he would be talking sense all the time. The House listens to the gentleman from Alabama as it does to many other Members. There are a number of points to which I would like to revert. However, time forbids.

The gentleman talked about the British Parliament doing its work better than the American House of Representatives. Why, Mr. Speaker, I say that our—

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. McCALL. May I ask who made the observation that the gentleman has just referred to?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] to make it.

Mr. McCALL. I made no such statement.

A MEMBER. It is the plan he spoke of.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. But whether he said it or not, with the splendid working committees and our work being done there, I say that the statutes and the public enactments of the American Congress are not only equal to those of the House of Commons of Great Britain, but they are superior to those of any other legislative body on the earth. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman speaks of confusion on this floor, and the galleries looking down and having a mean and small opinion of the membership. If you arrange the House as he proposes, you do not lessen the real size of the Chamber, and the confusion would be the same. I fail to see where we make any substantial progress in obliterating confusion by that sort of change. My vote shall be against this new plan, and I shall never be content until the House is so constructed by tearing out the partitions to the south and east of me as to give us thorough outside ventilation, giving us God's pure air and bright sunshine. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this is no new proposition. It has been suggested times without number, but I never could bring myself to approve of it in any way. [Applause.] It is no argument to compare the British House of Commons and their house with the Representatives of the United States and their Hall. In the British House of Commons forty constitute a quorum, and they do not often have any more than that number present. Of course a well with benches will accommodate them. Whenever they have an important vote and every member is whipped in, there are not seats enough, even with the gallery and all, to accommodate the members.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this House is a box within a box. The outside walls constitute one box, and this Hall is one within. This proposition is to have a third box inside of the two boxes. I remember the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] made one of the best suggestions the other night I ever heard him make, and that was that the doors of the galleries be opened so that we might have a little fresh air; and every gentleman in this House will remember that in five minutes there seemed to be a change in this Hall and we could breathe.

Now, if the proposition was to run a partition right through the center of this Hall and then clean out the other part of this inside box and run the galleries out to the outside walls, so that we could have windows open to the fresh air, and thus give us a chance to breathe, I would favor it in preference to this proposed plan.

Now, as to this talk about the desks being used by Members for distributing documents and writing letters. A Member scarcely ever writes a letter and never distributes documents from his desk, and there is a very important reason why the desks should be retained here. Every gentleman has to have certain information at his hand. He does not know when a bill is coming up, and he wants this data in his desk. I know some gentleman can carry it in their minds, but some of us have got to have the information where we can put our hands on it at the time we need it, in order to give the House the benefit of any knowledge we have acquired on the subject we are discussing. Without an opportunity to file our papers where they would be available, the House would very often lose a great deal of valuable information upon the subject coming before it.

Seriously, we need the desks. Every Member needs his desk. I do not think this is a step in the direction of improvement. I think it is a step backward. If, instead of a box inside of a box, we could have an extension, with the galleries extending to the outer walls, and doors open and windows open so that we could get the fresh air we so much need, every one of us would not go away from here at 5 o'clock in the evening feeling depressed and tired out from sitting in this Hall and breathing this air; then when we have been out of the room a few minutes we are invigorated, because we have had a chance to breathe the fresh air. Do not make it any worse in that respect than it is now. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts use some of his time now?

Mr. McCALL. I think I have used more time than the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, the events of the last fifteen minutes have indicated what all of us have long observed, that whenever any gentleman has had occasion to address this House upon any subject in which the House is at all interested he has had no difficulty in obtaining a hearing. [Applause.] Once or twice there have been calls for order, because several gentlemen interested in this matter have been striving at the same time to ask questions of the one having the floor.

Now, unfortunately, the Constitution of the United States requires that it shall take a majority of the whole number of Members elected to this House to constitute a quorum to do business. At present it takes something over 190. Until that Constitution is amended so that we can have a quorum of 40 or 50 who may transact business, it is not, in my judgment, at all a good thing to attempt to imitate the arrangement of seats in the hall of the House of Commons in England. Why, here are 190-odd Members sitting now, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has said, in a box within a box, complaining of the ventilation. Now, it is proposed to crowd us into a box within this inner box, having about half the space, with about half the air, and, of course, double the trouble about ventilation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the gentleman think perhaps the wisest thing we could do, instead of having a box within a box here, would be to move the hall of the House of Representatives into the southeast corner of this wing of the Capitol, so that we could have windows opening to the open air on the south and on the east both, and then Members would stay here, because they could do so without having their lungs injured?

Mr. OLMSTED. I think it would be far preferable. But, Mr. Speaker, if you are going to crowd us together, conditions will be worse than they now are. We have been sitting here now continuously for eight hours and four minutes. You could not keep 190 men sitting here on benches eight hours and four minutes, even if you had 40 sergeants-at-arms.

Gentlemen say the desks are no longer of any use. I should like to ask you, What would you do with the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of our proceedings, that gentlemen wish to refer to every few minutes? And what would you do with your Manual that must be consulted whenever a point of order is raised, and the Congressional Directory? Look at the documents on the desks all about you. Look at the 150 pairs of arms on the desks. Even the gentleman from Massachusetts himself is resting his arm upon the desk. We could not sit here eight hours bolt upright on a bench.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. And how would Members draw amendments if they had no place to write?

Mr. OLMSTED. How would you draw amendments?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course we are all interested in getting the thing straightened out. Don't you think it would add very much to the order of this House if we should have what I understand the French have in their Chamber of Deputies—a raised desk, or tribune, in front of the Speaker's desk, where every man who wanted to make a speech should go and get up there?

Mr. OLMSTED. Suppose a gentleman wanted to interrogate me, as you do now, would he want to go and get up there to do it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; and that is not making a speech. I referred to making a speech.

Mr. OLMSTED. In the five-minute debate, where the most important business is discussed, would a man want to get up there for five minutes?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let him get up. What's the difference if he does get up?

Mr. OLMSTED. Most of us are more modest than the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It does not hurt him to be looked at. If the gentleman will permit me to interlard a remark: I have experimented in making speeches here, and by long and short the best place to make a long speech is in that semicircle in front of the Speaker's desk.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is true as to long speeches, but gentlemen would not go down there to make the ordinary five-minute speech.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, no.

Mr. OLMSTED. And it is under the five-minute rule that very important debates occur. Let me suggest also that under our present rules any Member who desires may address the House from the semicircle or from the Clerk's desk. The great trouble is in the acoustic properties of the Hall. If a man sits over there at the side, on the Cherokee strip, he can not be heard whether in a chair or on a bench. If he sits in here and the House wants to hear him, he will be heard, and there will be no trouble about it at all.

Mr. Speaker, I can not agree with this report upon which this resolution is based in all that it says. For instance, it says that this is "the most disorderly and noisiest legislative body in the world." I have read something about the proceeding in other parliamentary bodies in other countries which, if the newspaper reports are correct, are far more disorderly than this.

Now, the disorder comes not from the desks, but from the fact that there are so many of us required to be here to do business, and sometimes from the fact that somebody wants to talk, and does talk in a loud voice, making a speech in which speech we have no interest and are not expected to have, as it is purely for home consumption. You can not pass an act of Congress which will make 190 people sit still and listen to a speech that they do not care to hear. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON].

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we ought to try to understand as nearly as possible the plan proposed. The present length of this Hall is 139 feet over the galleries, and it is 93 feet wide over the galleries. The floor space is 113 feet long by 70 feet wide. The proposition is to shorten that space; that is, to draw in the length of the Hall, east and west, and bring the galleries forward accordingly. The floor plan, as I understand the plan, would practically be to have a space some 15 by 40 feet long in front of the Speaker's desk, which would remain as it now is. A long table would be in this open space.

The seats would rise as they recede on each side. Aisles would open from this space between the seats. Some gentleman behind me asks what the table would be for. Suppose the Committee on Ways and Means or the Committee on Appropriations, or any other committee, should have consideration of some bill. The majority would arrange itself on one side of that table and the minority on the other. Suppose a gentleman under general debate desired to make a set speech. It would seem to me preferable, and more convenient than the present arrangement, for that gentleman to step back to the end of this long table, facing the Speaker, having the House on his right-hand, and on his left, and address the House from that place. If he wanted to refer to papers, he could have them on the table before him.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That would leave him absolutely with nobody in front of him, would it not?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. No; that would leave him with the table in front of him. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What does he want with a table in front of him?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. And all the membership of the House on the right and the left hand of him, unless there should be an arrangement for Members behind him, and in that case it would be as easy for him to turn around and face the few who may be behind him as it is now for a gentleman addressing the House to turn around and address a large section of the House behind him.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If he would stand down there in that semicircle where he ought to be, he would have the whole House in front of him.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. But a great many Members do not care to do that in making a speech.

Mr. OLMSTED. You could do that without changing the arrangement of the Hall.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It strikes me that as far as order is concerned, that would guarantee much better order than at present. It is useless to try to hypnotize ourselves into the idea that we have good order here. We constantly have illustrations of disorder. The man has to have leather lungs—harveyized lungs—in order to make himself heard here, and ordinarily he gets a hearing from only a small section of this House. Gentlemen know that. Gentlemen who want to hear what is taking place on the floor day after day come in here and have to gather down in little groups to ascertain what gentlemen are saying, even though the gentlemen speaking may be endowed with strong lungs.

We all know that. Why pretend we do not know it? We do not hear each other. The men who can be heard on the floor of this House are few and exceptional, and the ordinary man has to make so much exertion in making himself heard on the floor of this House that it frequently subtracts somewhat from his mental product. In the disturbance that frequently prevails here Members who try to make themselves heard are a good deal like the steamboat down on the Illinois River described by Lincoln. He said that steamboat had a 6-foot boiler and a 6-foot whistle and every time the whistle blew the boat had to stop. I agree with the gentleman from Texas that the light is bad. I maintain that some people have had their eyesight impaired by service on the floor of this House.

I agree that the ventilation of this House is about as bad as it could be, but the ventilation could certainly be made no worse by the plan proposed here and the lighting might be better. Certainly it would introduce a new era so far as deliberation is concerned and give an opportunity to Members to know what is going on. The gentleman says that certain Members can be heard here. That is true. He says that some men, when they have a speech to deliver, can get a hearing. Occasionally that is so. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, this Hall is distinctly a success. The trouble is that it is used for the wrong purpose. It was made for a cellar and it is utilized as an auditorium. As a cellar it is a success, with no air to reach us or sunlight to touch us.

With its great, spacious galleries and flat roof to kill sound and stagnant ventilation to decay air, and it does both. I will add also, to kill Members. Nothing but the exalted patriotism of the Members of this House induces them to stay here. [Applause.] The last one of you now has the prison pallor on you, but your high sense of duty and your realization of the fact that your successor can not be found in your district is the only thing that induces you to risk your life to serve your country longer in this place.

Mr. Speaker, speaking seriously, the trouble with this Hall is that it is unhealthy; that it is a cellar, and Members become dead and heavy and leave it. The trouble here is that with the Office Building immediately adjacent, with the calls upon us elsewhere, with the incapacity for debate, nobody is here, and the House is brought into disrepute by having just a few Members scattered throughout the Hall.

Now, to take out your books, making a man hunt the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, making him hunt for a paper, making him hunt for a book of rules and everything else, every time he needs any of those things he will have to go and get it, and when he gets it something else will call him, and he will be going back and forth and—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. I can not yield in three minutes. Mr. Speaker, the greatest trouble with this Hall is the confusion of moving about from one place to another. You put the ablest man in an uncomfortable seat, where he can not get his hands on anything, and he will move about much more. [Applause.] You take the most religious, most pious man in this House and put him in a comfortable chair, and he will listen to four hours of opera and never complain, but you take him to church and in fifteen minutes he is wiggling around. The difference is between the chair and the bench, not that he does not enjoy the church more than he does the opera. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAMILTON. I will say to the gentleman it is not necessary to have benches; we can have chairs.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Does the gentleman wish to use any more of his time?

Mr. McCALL. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Thirteen minutes.

Mr. McCALL. How much time has the gentleman from North Carolina?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Eleven minutes.

Mr. McCALL. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the resolution. I believe the experiment is well worth a trial. It will not involve an expenditure to exceed $25,000, and after having given the new plan a fair trial, if the House is not satisfied it can bring back the desks. This Hall is too large and the facilities are such as to detract from the public business. It can hardly be styled a good share of the time a hall for serious deliberation; it is more like a private workshop.

These papers and books scattered around upon the desks of Members are not used in the deliberations of the day. Members bring novels, fiction, poetry, and that sort of thing here, and read during the progress of consideration of public bills. What would be thought of the proposition of having members of a church take newspapers and books and women carry their sewing to religious services every Sunday morning? I can hardly conceive of a place that is more unsuited for the proper transaction of the public business than this Hall. There is always noise and confusion and distracting influences, and, in my judgment, if the desks should be taken out and the Hall be brought down in size to something in reason, we could dispatch the business with much less time than it requires now.

Why not make the experiment? Why not vote the desks out for one session of Congress and try it? It will not cost much, I repeat, and I believe that every Member of the House is satisfied in his own mind that this is not an ideal place in which to do public business. We can only improve by experiment. Let us try it. Let us adopt the resolution this evening and make the experiment at the next session of Congress. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEALE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to interrogate him?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My time has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may come under the category denominated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] as one of the unfortunate individuals who possesses a feeble voice. [Laughter.] I am glad that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] possesses a strong voice. I deplore the fact that he said that sometimes some of those with his strength of voice are given feeble intellects. The gentleman from Massachusetts has both a strong voice and a strong intellect, and he is always able to make himself fully understood in this House or in any hall much larger than this.

I had not intended, Mr. Speaker, to say anything on this occasion, but it seems to me that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] has taken us back to our schoolboy days in his reference to the boys sitting on the benches, when we all read from the old blue-backed spelling book, that "six small boys can sit on one long bench," and to old days when we were taught—

Reading, writing, and arithmetic
To the tune of the hickory stick.

Instead of this being a step forward it is distinctly a step backward.

Mr. Speaker, the trouble in this House is not the inability of any man to make himself heard and understood. The difficulty is that when the Members of this House do not want to hear anybody, they resolve themselves into a confusion like unto the confusion of a women's sewing society, and all go to talking at once. That is the whole trouble. Now, let us specify.

Take our eloquent young friend from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], a man of small stature, and not of very large voice. Who has any difficulty in hearing him when he delivers one of his convincing arguments or splendid orations? Who had any difficulty in hearing that magnificent tribute that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], a man of small physique, paid to "Uncle Joe" CANNON here in this Hall a few weeks ago? We can hear anybody here when we want to hear him, and we do not hear anybody when we do not want to hear him. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] use some of his time?

Mr. McCALL. How much time is remaining to each side, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] and nine minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Will the gentleman use all of his time in one speech?

Mr. McCALL. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to the House as an auditor. I have never known a time when a man who wanted to make a speech was ever daunted by a lack of audience or by noise or anything else. Whenever a man wants to make a speech in this House he will make it whether he has attention or not. But most of us here want to hear some of the time. This plan will afford us the opportunity. There are two kinds of speeches here—the speeches made in general debate and the speeches, largely conversational, relating to appropriation bills—and I submit to all of you that when appropriation bills are under discussion the only place to hear clearly is in the region around the first two or three rows of seats in front.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks anybody failed to hear him on yesterday, when he was discussing the mail-weighting question?

Mr. MURDOCK. Well, probably the Members could hear me, because there was not much noise.

Mr. PARSONS. You stood right in the center aisle.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; I had to leave this part of the House and had gone down there to the charmed circle to make myself heard. Who ever knew of a chairman of a committee coming away back here, or here, or here [indicating], to explain his bill? It is impossible for him to be heard from this part of the Hall. He is always to be found down there in the immediate circle surrounding the Speaker's desk. Give us a chance to hear; give us a chance to hear the little conversations which go on when we are making up the great appropriation bills.

Get us together! Why, there is some fear expressed here that we are copying the British House of Commons. I am not copying the House of Commons in favoring the adoption of this scheme. Why, I am copying after the Roman Senate and the theater of ancient Athens. Cicero did not have a desk. [Laughter.] Cicero did not have at hand the rules of the House and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. [Great laughter.] Give us benches; get us together, if you want us to hear. [Laughter and applause.] I would go even further, possibly, and have the tribune of the French Deputies for general debate.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I understand that this side has nine minutes remaining. I would like to ask if the gentleman proposes to use the remainder of his time in one speech.

Mr. McCALL. I think I have eight minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. McCALL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this proposition, not so much because I sometimes am unable to hear gentlemen who are speaking, as because I am deprived of hearing gentlemen who, were the conditions in this Hall more favorable, would more often speak. [Applause.] I would be in favor of this resolution, Mr. Speaker, if for no other reason than we would be able to hear more frequently from gentlemen like the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] whom we listened to with the greatest pleasure the other day, and who does not care to take part in debate frequently, because he is not gifted with what, I believe, Speaker Reed once termed "lungs and language" to an equal degree with which many gentlemen who often occupy this floor. There are many gentlemen like the gentleman from Georgia, whose voices are not often raised and whose views would be of real value to this House did they have an opportunity to express them. If we pass this resolution the opportunity will be afforded. [Applause.]

Mr. McCALL. I would like to ask if the gentleman is going to have more than one speech?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Yes, sir; I have a number of speeches.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? I merely wish to call attention to the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri and to say that under the present rules of the House—

Mr. RODENBERG. I ask for order. It is impossible to hear the gentleman. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. OLMSTED. It is owing to some defect in the gentleman's organs of hearing and not to the desks. I merely desire to call attention to our Rule XIV, which provides that any Member, "on being recognized, may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk." No change in the arrangement of this Hall is necessary to carry into effect the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry. Does not this resolution provide that if this change is made it shall be made under the supervision of the Speaker?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. It does.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then, if that is true, I submit before the vote upon this proposition is taken we ought to ask the Speaker, the Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, to use five minutes to explain this scheme, so that Members can intelligently vote upon the resolution. [Laughter and applause.] That is all I want to say.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE].

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, in the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress a question similar to this was under discussion. On the 20th of February, 1901, I used this language:

Seats are placed here for the use of Representatives. The settees were placed in the Hall, and after a trial of about three months the seats were all removed and seats like the kind we have now, only larger, were put in the place of them, and the seats or settees that were used on that occasion can be found in the Supreme Court room to-day and can be found at St. Elizabeth's Insane Asylum.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman have the kindness to tell us why the seats were taken out, and whether the House was reduced in size—and whether the Hall was reduced in size?

Mr. PRINCE. In 1859 the vote was 103 ayes and 73 noes. The desks remained out for three months, and by a vote of 95 yeas to 86 nays they were restored.

Mr. McCALL. Was the Hall of the House reduced in size at that time?

Mr. PRINCE. I want to go on in my own way. We discussed that once before. At that session, on February 20, 1901, on page 2708 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], now Speaker of the House, spoke as follows:

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, with some length of service in this House, I have noticed that when any Member had a message to his fellow-Members that they wanted to hear, there was no difficulty in their hearing it. So much for that. We have heard gentlemen quite well during this little debate of twenty minutes on a side. Now, the Architect of the Capitol tells me he can a little decrease the size of the desks and put them into blocks of four or five, and then it is quite practicable to seat all the Members in the Hall under the new apportionment. Three legs is enough for a bunch of these desks, and my own judgment is, with the necessity for a quorum, that we will get along better to retain the seats a little bit decreased in size and put closer together, and have more room than we now have. I ask for a vote.

A vote was taken, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] called for a division. The committee divided and there were—ayes 45, noes 161. That was on the 20th of February, 1901, when this Hall was the same size that it is now.

Mr. McCALL. That was a proposition to make a permanent change, was it not?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, the moment allotted does not permit of more than one or two suggestions. I have observed in this House frequently, when points of order were made that required serious consideration, that gentlemen who made them took the Manual from the desk and cited authorities from the Digest, which could not be done if we had the bench system. Then, again, as effective work as any that is done on this floor is when the appropriation bills are under discussion under the five-minute rule. Members follow the appropriation bills as they are read; they are required when a paragraph is concluded to raise the point of order, if it is raised at all. Again, upon the spur of the moment, they draw amendments, and amendments to amendments, and substitutes, all of which could not be done if the bench system prevailed. [Applause.] This is the American House of Representatives, which operates under rules quite different from those in the English House of Commons. I am opposed to the adoption of the English system, which is far at variance with the system we have thus far successfully followed in this American House. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. This is a scientific question. Ventilation is one of the latest sciences, acoustics is the very latest. Ventilation is the most difficult problem we have in naval construction. We take advantage of the law of gases and secure natural ventilation, as far as possible, and supplement this by the use of power. I submit that the problem of ventilation in this Chamber can be solved by extending on the south side, and perhaps also on the east and west sides, to the outer wall. In acoustics it has been discovered that size is but a small factor. Form is more important, and surface is even still more important. I have seen auditoriums many times the size of this one in which a conversation could be heard across in any part, while I have seen halls smaller than the one proposed where the acoustics were wretched. I have applied to be placed on the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics. By extending this auditorium, as indicated, to the fresh air, by using the parabolic form in the rear and in the ceiling, and by taking advantage of other modern discoveries in acoustics and ventilation, we can get a magnificent result, in keeping with the heroic proportions of the building, and I ask that this question be allowed to go to a committee having authority to call in architects and engineers, and that after thorough investigation a full report be made before we take any hasty measures that might injure this magnificent Hall.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS] has three minutes remaining, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. McCALL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, no civilized country in the world is cursed with such an assembly room for its legislative body as we have here.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it is blest if it has one like this.

Mr. BURLESON. I know that I am safe in saying that in no assembly room in the world is so little attention given to what is being said during the time the legislative body is deliberating. The principal reason for this want of attention to what is taking place is that some of its Members are engaged in reading newspapers or books, some are writing, and others are engaged in conversation, and to those few who desire to give attention the Member speaking has the greatest difficulty in making himself heard.

In his effort to make himself heard he not alone strains his voice, but sometimes loses the thread of the subject under discussion. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] has spoken of the ventilation of this Chamber, saying it could be improved; yes, but it will not be. I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the atrocious ventilation of this Chamber has occasioned the death of a score of men. He has also spoken of the acoustics of this Chamber, saying great improvement could be made, and also that the size of the Chamber has nothing to do with its acoustic properties. I am sure that is an entirely new proposition in the science of acoustics. Experience in other countries has taught that we should have a small chamber for deliberative purposes if the best results are to be secured; and I say to you, having seen many assembly rooms elsewhere, that there is no country in the world having such a spacious assembly hall as we have here. I appeal to the Members of this House to give a trial to the suggestion embodied in this resolution. It will involve the expenditure of but little money.

The Superintendent of the Capitol building says the trial can be made for a trifling sum and—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the first man whom I ever heard discuss the proposed change, or the change now proposed, was Mr. Thomas B. Reed. I heard him talk in the room yonder and in the cloakroom a half dozen or more times, in his forceful, powerful way, and he said it was the one thing needed to make the House of Representatives what it ought to be; that the room was too large, and as long as the desks were in it the confusion would be too great. I remember distinctly his talking to Mr. George Shaw in there and converting him to the view.

Mr. CANNON, the present Speaker, was opposed to putting that on an appropriation bill, as I understand it, and to making it a permanent thing. Now the Speaker is willing that this shall come up for experiment. I talked with the architect who will make this change, or the plans for the change. He told me that there would be as good accommodations for the RECORD for each individual Member, and just as good for the book on rules and the other pamphlets and documents which we need, arranged for in the back of the sofa in front. Gentlemen speak of "benches;" but they are not such "benches" as are found in a country railroad station, not at all. They are to be upholstered, leather benches—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCALL. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I have seen many of the parliamentary halls of the world. I never have seen one that to my mind was so ill adapted to the work as this. One reason, I think, is that these galleries encircle the entire Hall, and however orderly you may be on the floor or in the galleries there is a constant buzz of conversation going on all of the time, no matter where you stand in this room. Now, then, if we could change and extend this Hall to the outer wall I would be in favor of it, but we can not do that except by joint resolution. We can, under a House resolution, try this experiment for the short session, ten weeks, and it will not cost much to know whether it will be a failure or not. Let us try. We can not make it any worse than it is, and possibly for a slight expenditure of money we may start toward an improved condition. We can not make it any worse. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, three minutes, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have order. [Laughter.] Oh, I notice the gentlemen who just now laughed about order are all within the charmed circle. All of the gentlemen now practically within the Hall of the House, or the great majority of them, are within the space that would be in the new Hall of the House.

Mr. Speaker, Congress moved into this Hall in 1857, coming out of the Hall over to the north. Shortly after coming in, it was said, it was so noisy that people could not be heard speaking, with the desks in the Hall. The desks were ordered moved as an experiment, and after a little while the desks were ordered back again. This is proposed as an experiment. I would like to make this suggestion—

Mr. McCALL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. Not in three minutes, unless the gentleman will give me time. We will have in the new Office Building a large conference room, capable of giving seating capacity for more than 500 people. If you want to make an experiment at the next session of Congress, suppose you have the Committee of the Whole hold a meeting over here in the caucus or conference room. [Applause.] Then you can ascertain without the slightest difficulty so far as the experiment is concerned. It may work well; I do not know; but I know this in reference to this Hall now, that the experiment now proposed will injure us so far as our health is concerned, so far as ventilation is concerned. When the Hall of the House was created as it is now the lobby was committee rooms. They were removed in order to give more ventilation to the Hall of the House. I think the rooms of the Committee on Appropriations and the other committee rooms on the other side ought to be removed so as to give the House better ventilation and more air. [Applause.]

But what is this proposition? To put a box in here, a room absolutely shut off from direct connection with the corridors, cutting off the ventilation of the House. We ought to have a hall that reaches outside to the outer air, but this puts us inside of two walls, aye, three walls according to the gentleman's information. What good will it do? They say that gentlemen can not be heard and by this gentlemen will be heard easier. The gentleman from Missouri said that this is the best place to speak in down here in front of the desk. Mr. Speaker, I served in the House more than ten years before I had nerve enough to come down in front of the Speaker's desk and speak to the House. The House rules now provide that a Member may speak from the Clerk's desk. Has anyone here seen a Member speak from the Clerk's desk? This arrangement will keep all new Members from speaking in the House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FASSETT].

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Speaker, in this House, under exceptional circumstances, a man with an exceptional voice can be heard if there is an exceptional desire to hear him. But not otherwise. My good friend [Mr. MANN] always has something worth hearing, and we could hardly understand him now, and he had to use more voice than is consistent with deliberate debate, as you have all noticed. I would like to see muscular oratory exchanged for intellectual oratory [applause], and instead of a contest of violent vociferation I would like to see a contest of deliberate debate. It is only an experiment that is suggested and every speaker has admitted that there was something wrong with this Hall. The ventilation is bad, the acoustic properties are bad, and the cubic space is too great.

We have to stir up too much air to make ourselves understood by those most willing to listen, and this debate itself has been a most admirable illustration of our dire distress. It is only a proposition to experiment. The short session is at hand and we can try it for ten weeks. The expense is but trifling. Mr. MANN suggests we go outside the Capitol. We might hire a tent, we might construct a temporary building outside, but what we want is an opportunity to test various experiments, one by one, in this Hall itself. It is not a British system, as has been urged; it is not a French system; it is an American system to try to be heard on all subjects worth hearing in this Hall. [Applause.] We can hear oratory but we can not hear ordinary debate, the humdrum important business that disposes of millions and billions of the people's money.

We want to hear and to be heard on real business, and if I had my way, sir, I would be glad to dispense with the RECORD, so that all debate here might be focused upon the subject in hand. Now, this committee proposes to leave in discreet hands, in the proper place, the power to initiate the experiment—and that is American; that is not English. We want to break away from a system that has been tried and found, by unanimous consent, to be faulty. The only way to improve is to try until we succeed. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 105, nays 141, answered "present" 9, not voting 132, as follows:

ADDITIONAL FEDERAL JUDGES.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 21896, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] moves to suspend the rules and pass the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21896) to amend section 86 of an act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, to provide for additional judges, and for other judicial purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 86 of the act approved April 30, 1900, entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 86. There shall be established in the said Territory a district court, to consist of two judges, who shall reside therein and be called district judges. The said court while in session shall be presided over by only one of said judges. The two judges shall from time to time, either by order or rules of court, prescribe at what times and in what class of cases each of them shall preside. The said two judges shall have the same powers in all matters coming before said court.

"The President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, shall appoint two district judges, a district attorney, and a marshal of the United States for the said district, and said judges, attorney, and marshal shall hold office for six years unless sooner removed by the President.

"The said court shall have, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction of district courts of the United States, jurisdiction of all cases cognizable in a circuit court of the United States, and shall proceed therein in the same manner as a circuit court; and the said judges, district attorney, and marshal shall have and exercise in the Territory of Hawaii all the powers conferred by the laws of the United States upon the judges, district attorneys, and marshals of district and circuit courts of the United States.

"Writs of error and appeals from the said district court shall be had and allowed to the circuit court of appeals for the ninth judicial circuit in the same manner as writs of error and appeals are allowed from circuit courts to circuit courts of appeal as provided by law, and the laws of the United States relating to juries and jury trials shall be applicable to said district court. The laws of the United States relating to appeals, writs of error, removal of causes, and other matters and proceedings as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the several States shall govern in such matters and proceedings as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the Territory of Hawaii. Regular terms of said court shall be held in Honolulu on the second Monday in April and October, and special terms may be held at such times and places in said district as the said judges may deem expedient. The said district judges shall appoint a clerk of said court at a salary of $3,000 per annum and shall appoint a reporter of said court at a salary of $1,200 per annum."

SEC. 2. That section 4 of chapter 1 of title 1 of an act entitled "An act making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1900, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 4. That there is hereby established a district court for the district of Alaska, with the jurisdiction of circuit and district courts of the United States and with general jurisdiction in civil, criminal, equity, and admiralty causes; and four district judges shall be appointed for the district, each at an annual salary of $7,500, who shall during their terms of office reside in the divisions of the district to which they may be respectively assigned by the President. The court shall consist of four divisions, which shall also be recording divisions. Division No. 1 shall consist of all that part of the district of Alaska lying east of the one hundred and forty-first meridian of west longitude. Division No. 2 shall consist of all that territory lying west of a line commencing on the Arctic coast at the one hundred and forty-eighth meridian; thence extending south along the easterly watershed of the Colville River to a point on the Rocky Mountain divide between the headwaters of Colville River on the north and west and the waters of the Chandalar on the south; thence southwesterly along the divide between the waters of the Colville River, the Kotzebue Sound, and Norton Sound on the north and west and the waters of the Yukon on the south to the one hundred and sixty-first meridian of west longitude; thence along said meridian to the Kuskokwim River; thence southwesterly along the center of the channel of said Kuskokwim River to Bering Sea; the said division to include all the islands lying north of the fifty-ninth parallel of north latitude. At least thirty days' notice shall be given by the judge, or the clerk, of the time and place of holding the several terms of the court."

SEC. 3. That section 7 of said chapter 1 of Title 1 is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 7. That four clerks shall be appointed for the court, one of whom shall be assigned to each division thereof, and during his term of office shall reside at such place in the division as the Attorney-General may direct. Each clerk shall, in his division of the district, perform the duties required or authorized by law to be performed by clerks of United States courts in other districts, and such other duties as may be prescribed by the laws of the United States relating to the district of Alaska. He shall preserve copies of all laws applicable to the district and shall preserve all records and record all proceedings and official acts of his division of the court. He shall also collect and receive all moneys arising from the fees of his office, from licenses, fines, forfeitures, judgments, or on any other account authorized by law to be paid to or collected by him, and shall apply the same, except the money derived from licenses, to the incidental expenses of the proper division of the district court and the allowance thereof as directed in written orders, duly made and signed by the judge, and shall account for the same in detail, and for any balances on account thereof, under oath, quarterly, or more frequently if required, to the court, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That moneys accruing from violations of the customs laws, civil customs cases, or internal-revenue cases, moneys, not including costs, accruing from civil post-office suits, fines, in criminal cases for violations of the postal laws, the net proceeds of sales of public property under section 3618, Revised Statutes, as amended, and any other moneys the disposition of which is otherwise specially provided for by law, shall not be available for the expenses of the court, but shall be paid over or deposited as provided by law for other districts. And after all payments ordered by the judge shall have been made, any balances remaining in the hands of the clerk shall be by him deposited to the credit of the United States and be covered into the Treasury of the United States at such times and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. The clerk shall be ex officio recorder of instruments as hereinafter provided and also register of wills for the division, and shall establish secure offices for the safe-keeping of his official records where terms of his division of the court are held. He may appoint necessary deputies and employ other necessary clerical assistance to aid him in the expeditious discharge of the duties of his office, with the approval and at compensation to be fixed by the court or judge, subject to the approval of the Attorney-General. Any person so appointed or employed shall be paid by the clerk on the order of the judge, as other court expenses are paid."

SEC. 4. That section 8 of said chapter 1 of title 1 is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

The Attorney-General may, upon the recommendation of the district attorney, appoint and at pleasure remove one or more assistant district attorneys and one or more clerical assistants, who shall receive such compensation as the Attorney-General may fix, to be paid as other assistant United States district attorneys and clerical assistants are paid. In the case of the death or disability of a district attorney the judge may appoint a suitable person to fill the office until his successor is appointed and qualified or until the disability is removed."

After approval by the judge the original of each such account shall be forwarded by the clerk to the Department of Justice for revision and the duplicate filed in the court. All net fees earned in excess of the sum of $3,000 per calendar year or in excess of that rate for a less period, by any commissioner or deputy marshal, shall be annually paid to the clerk of the proper division of the court to be available for incidental expenses of the district court of the proper division, such payment of such incidental expenses to be accomplished by a verified detailed statement of said clerk."

Sec. 24. That this act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of July, 1908. In so far only as the provisions of this act are in conflict with other or prior acts the other or prior acts are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to twenty minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, this is an omnibus bill made up of six bills, which have been unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee, except one. The first gives an additional judge to the Hawaiian Islands. The second gives an additional judge to Alaska, creates an additional district, and increases the salary of the judges from $5,000 to $7,500 a year. It also provides for an additional United States marshal and an additional United States attorney in the district which is created by this bill. One member of the Judiciary Committee has filed a minority report. The third bill gives an additional judge to New Mexico and creates an additional district.

The fourth bill creates the northwestern division of the northern judicial district of Alabama and provides for holding a court at Florence on the first Monday in February and November of each year. The fifth fixes the salary of the United States attorney and United States marshal of Oklahoma at $4,000 a year. The sixth bill transfers the documents and papers of the Territorial courts of Oklahoma to the courts of the State.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Did you mean to the Federal courts or to the courts of the State?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. To the courts of the State.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to ask the gentleman a question, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to learn if the provision in reference to the Hawaiian Territory interferes with the judgeship there now.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. In no wise. It simply creates one additional judge.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] desire time?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to but one feature of this omnibus bill, and that is section 18, which provides for a Federal court at Florence, Ala. It does not create a new district nor provide for a new judge. It simply creates a northwestern division of the northern judicial district of the State of Alabama, composed of the counties of Lauderdale, Colbert, Marion, Franklin, and Winston, and court to be held at the town of Florence, and makes no appropriation.

I hold in my hand, Mr. Speaker, a communication from the Federal judge who presides over the northern district of Alabama recommending the passage of this bill—Judge Thomas G. Jones, the United States district judge. I also hold in my hand the recommendation of the United States district attorney. These Federal officials declare that a court at Florence will greatly reduce the expenses of jurors and witnesses. In other words—and I desire the gentlemen of the House to listen to me on this question—the five counties that constitute this new court at Florence, Ala., all attend the Federal court at my home town, at Huntsville, Ala.

All the counties that report to the Federal court at Florence are now reporting to the Federal court at Huntsville. In other words, we are simply carrying the Federal judge to the people instead of the people going to the judge, and saving to the people that expense.

I have here the most conclusive statement from the Young Men's Business Men's Club of Florence, as well as from Judge Jones and the district attorney, that the expenses of jurors and witnesses attending the Florence court will amount to not more than one-fourth of the expenses of going to Huntsville, and if I had the opportunity and the time I could explain fully and entirely how that is, because I am fully acquainted with the locality. But it is a fact that it will not cost the people of Lauderdale, Colbert, Marion, Franklin, and Winston counties, that constitutes the counties that attend this court at Florence, more than one-fourth of the expenses that it will cost jurors and litigants to go to Huntsville, Ala. I think that we present the case with all the force that it can be presented as a matter of economy and convenience.

As I said, we are not contending or claiming to create a new judge or new district. We are simply carving out of the northern district of Alabama the northwestern division.

As I said, it does not add one dollar to the expenses of the Federal Government. It simply carries a Federal judge to the people instead of the people, at great expense and loss of time, going to the Federal judge. The bill further provides that all other counties now in the northern division of the northern district of Alabama shall constitute the northeastern division of the northern district of Alabama with court at Huntsville, Ala. The town of Florence, Ala., is a prosperous town with a population now of 10,000 people, and many great industrial enterprises are located there. The revenue coming from the post-office is over $10,000 annually. There is a large number of manufactories, cotton mills, and so forth. Free delivery exists in the city. The town is prosperous in every respect, and there can be no objection whatsoever as a part of this omnibus bill to the holding of the court at Florence, and I sincerely hope and trust it will pass. The population is not only a thrifty, energetic people, but a more refined, cultivated, patriotic, enterprising people can be found nowhere.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many people will be within this district?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There are five counties, with an average population each of 90,000 people.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many district judges have you now in the State of Alabama?

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have two, and another nominated by the President, but not yet confirmed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does this call for an increase in the number of judges?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The number of judges are not increased. The counties comprising this northwestern division are most conveniently located to Florence. The three towns of Florence, Sheffield, and Tusculumbia are covered in an area of 1 mile. They are connected by electric railway, and the three towns aggregate a population of 25,000 people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It calls for the establishment of another court in one of the most prosperous and hopeful sections of the South.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have asked this time in order to ascertain whether in the present parliamentary situation an amendment would be in order to this bill; if so, when the proper time comes—

The SPEAKER. An amendment is not in order on a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he is not willing to have a bill which is reported favorably from his committee included in this? The bill provides for holding a court in Clarksdale, Miss. It has been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary and reported favorably to this House. In the Fifty-eighth Congress that bill was reported to this House, was passed by the House, but failed of passage in the Senate. In the Fifty-ninth Congress it was reported to this House, passed the House, and then failed again of passage in the Senate. The committee in this Congress has reported that bill favorably, and I hope the gentleman from New York will permit it to be included in this bill. It does not provide for any additional district, but provides that the present judge shall go to the town of Clarksdale and hold a court there twice a year. The counties which are to compose this division are in the extreme northwest section of the State of Mississippi, and it is now necessary for the people of those counties to travel 200 miles in order to get to the Federal court. They have to go out of the State of Mississippi, into the State of Tennessee, and there spend a night or day, and then go back into the State of Mississippi by an entirely different railroad in order to reach the Federal court. I have been advised by the district attorney that it has been impossible for him properly to enforce the criminal laws of the United States in those counties, for the very good reason, which will be apparent to everyone here, that he can not secure the attendance of witnesses before the grand jury to inform upon those who violate the law. The business of the court there is very much hampered in this way.

The expense to the Government will not be materially increased by creating this new division, because the saving in mileage paid to the witnesses and officers will be very great. But even if it will cost more, the question for us to consider is the efficiency of the courts. Are the criminal laws of the United States being enforced properly in this territory, and are the people there being provided with proper court facilities? These are the questions for us to consider, and it is our duty to see that the fault, if there be any, can not be laid to our charge. There are too many lawyers in this House for me to consume time discussing the proposition that it is not possible to enforce the criminal statutes reasonably or tolerably well when it is necessary to send 200 miles and consume two days to get witnesses before the grand jury. It is difficult enough when all conditions are most favorable. One of the most serious menaces to the peace and good order of this division is the illicit whisky traffic. Everybody understands that and everybody appreciates it, and so it is not necessary to enlarge upon that topic. We differ in our views as to the best method of regulating the sale of intoxicants, but we all agree that the illicit liquor traffic is an abomination. In the Fifty-ninth Congress we passed a law which requires the internal-revenue collectors to furnish the local authorities the names of all who take out what we usually call "internal-revenue license." Under State laws the possession of this Federal license, or tax receipt, is evidence that the possessor is running a "blind tiger," and as a result they have quit paying it. As long as the Federal court is 150 or 200 miles away, however, they enjoy comparative immunity.

I do not suggest this as the principal reason for establishing this court, but simply as an illustration. I think the broader ground, which is generally stated, is the correct one, that as far as practicable the courts ought to be brought to the people, instead of requiring the people to travel long distances to reach the court.

A MEMBER. Why did your bill fail in the Senate?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will say to my friend from Kansas that the arguments which were given to me will not appeal to his judgment; in fact, in my opinion, they were never addressed to anybody's judgment. It was claimed—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that this bill, which has twice passed the House, which is now favorably reported, which does not create a new judge, which does not cost another dollar of expense, but simply provides that the judge of the court shall go to this town of Clarksdale and hold his court, be added to this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, so far as this bill goes, it appears to be a good bill. I judge that by the explanation made by the gentleman from New York, by the explanation made by the gentleman from Alabama, and also by the fact that it received the unanimous support of the Committee on the Judiciary. I am sorry that the gentleman would not modify his motion so as to include my colleague's bill. It would not have required unanimous consent for the gentleman to have done that. But the bill so far as it goes seems to be all right, and I do not care to consume any further time of the House in discussing it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members. As many as are in favor of the motion will, as their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "no," those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 199, nays 4, answered "present" 18, not voting 167, as follows:

INFERIOR COURTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 6359) to change the name and the jurisdiction of the inferior courts in the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration and passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas calls up the following bill and asks unanimous consent to pass the same. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the inferior court known as "justice of the peace" in the District of Columbia shall remain as now constituted, but shall hereafter be known as "the municipal court of the District of Columbia." It shall consist of the six present justices of the peace of said District, who shall serve as the judges of said court for the unexpired terms of their now existing commissions, and who shall not be required to be recommissioned for said unexpired terms. Thereafter, and upon the expiration of the commission of any of said members, his successor shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of four years, unless sooner removed as provided by law: Provided, That no person shall be appointed to said office unless he shall have been a bona fide resident of said District for the continuous period of at least five years immediately preceding his appointment, and shall either have been a judge of said court for at least one year or shall have been engaged in the actual practice of law before the supreme court of the District of Columbia for a period of at least five years prior to his appointment. Each judge, when appointed, shall take an oath for the faithful and impartial performance of the duties of his office. The judges of said court shall no longer be required to give bond, as heretofore, but a bond shall be given by the clerk of said court, who shall receive and account for all fees as hereinafter provided. Said municipal court shall sit for the trial of causes in one building, to be designated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be rented by said District of Columbia at a rental not to exceed $1,800 per annum.

The said court and each member thereof shall exercise the same jurisdiction as was vested in them as justice of the peace immediately before the passage of this act, and no more, and shall be governed by the laws then in force, except as said laws and said jurisdiction are expressly changed or enlarged hereby.

Any member of said court may try any case within his jurisdiction according to law regardless of the place and residence of the defendant therein. The jurisdiction of said court is hereby increased from $300 to $500 in the class of cases over which it had jurisdiction immediately prior to the passage of this act; that said jurisdiction shall be exclusive when the amount claimed for debt or damages or the value of personal property claimed does not exceed $100, and concurrent with the supreme court of the District of Columbia when it exceeds $100 and is not in excess of $500, with the same right to remove any case by certiorari, as heretofore, in cases of concurrent jurisdiction.

All pending actions and all actions hereinafter instituted shall be assigned for trial among the members of said court in nearly equal numbers and in such manner as may be agreed upon between them. The judges of said court shall hold separate sessions as heretofore, and are empowered to make rules for the apportionment of the business between them, and the act of each of said judges respecting the business of said court shall be deemed and taken to be the act of said court. Each of said judges is hereby empowered to administer oaths. The judges of said court shall receive the annual salary of $2,500 in lieu of the salary heretofore provided for justices of the peace by section 6 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, to be paid monthly as heretofore, but they shall not receive the allowance heretofore granted for rent, stationery, and other expenses. In case of sickness, absence, disability, expiration of term of service or death of either of the judges of the police court or of the juvenile court, any one of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia may designate one of the judges of the municipal court to discharge the duties of said judges until such disability be removed or vacancy filled. The justice so designated shall take the same oath prescribed for these judges.

The said court shall have power to appoint a clerk at an annual salary of $1,500 and an assistant clerk at an annual salary of $1,000, payable monthly by the District of Columbia, which clerks shall hold office at the pleasure of the court.

The clerks shall receive and care for all deposits for costs made and fees exacted under the rules governing the fee charges of said court, and shall make a weekly deposit with the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia of all fees earned during the preceding week.

He shall return to suitors making such deposits any proportion of a deposit which shall remain in his hands over and above the earned fees in completed cases, and shall render an itemized statement to the auditor of the District of Columbia of every fee earned, on such forms and in such manner as shall be prescribed by the auditor of the District of Columbia. In case there shall remain in the hands of the said clerk for a term of three years a balance or part of a deposit in any case which shall not have been called for by the party or parties entitled to receive the same, the same shall revert to the District of Columbia, and be paid forthwith to the collector of taxes as part of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

In all suits in said court process shall be signed by the said clerk or assistant clerk in the name of the court. The assistant clerk may sign the name of the clerk to any official act required by law or by the practice of the court to be performed by the clerk. In such case the signature shall be "_____, Clerk, by _____, Assistant Clerk."

Both the clerk and assistant clerk are hereby given authority to administer oaths in all cases pending in said court, or about to be filed therein.

The clerk shall perform such other and further duties as may from time to time be prescribed by the municipal court.

He shall give bond to the District of Columbia in the sum of $5,000, with surety or sureties to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, and the assistant clerk shall give a like bond in the sum of $2,000.

The said clerk shall keep a docket similar to the one heretofore provided for justices of the peace.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection?

MR. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas to explain this measure. Perhaps I will not object if I know what it is.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to consolidate the offices of justice of the peace in a building to be designated by the Commissioners of the District somewhere centrally located in the city, and to change the name from justice of the peace to the municipal court. The municipal court shall be composed of six judges, the six present justices of the peace to hold until the expiration of the terms of their appointment. The salaries of the justices of the peace now are $3,000 a year each. This bill provides for a salary of $2,500 a year each for the judges, and provides for the appointment of a clerk, at $1,500, and an assistant clerk, at $1,000.

The clerk is required to give bond to take charge of the money that is deposited for costs and all moneys paid into court, and the judges of the court are therefore relieved from giving bond. It is contended by those who have been advocating the bill—and everyone has advocated its passage who has come before the committee or who has written a letter to the committee. The change is urged because of the necessity of having these justices brought to a central point—

MR. SHERLEY. What is the reason for that?

MR. CAMPBELL. The reason for that is this: A litigant may employ a lawyer to have a case tried before a justice of the peace who has his office down here in the northeast part of the town. This same lawyer may have a case before another justice of the peace up in Georgetown at the same hour.

MR. SHERLEY. There is nothing unusual about that. That is the condition of the justice of the peace courts all over the United States, and it is better to have the courts where the people are. They are nothing but neighborhood cases.

MR. CAMPBELL. But the people here want the courts centralized.

MR. SHERLEY. The gentleman means the lawyers want it centralized.

MR. CAMPBELL. No; the people who really want it are the real estate men and the people who own real estate, who want to get quick action when they have a forcible detainer case, or any other kind of case.

MR. SABATH. The real estate agents who desire quick action?

MR. CAMPBELL. Yes.

MR. MADDEN. In all cities where they have municipal courts is it not a fact that they divide the city into districts, so that a court may be held in various places of the city in order to accommodate the people who have litigation in these courts?

MR. CAMPBELL. I think probably that is true.

MR. MADDEN. And is it not a fact that there are other people in the city interested in litigation of the courts besides the real estate agents?

MR. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes; and it is the other people who have been demanding this change along with real estate men.

MR. MADDEN. It seems to me there ought to be some consideration given to the people who have suits started against them as well as those who are beginning the suits.

MR. CAMPBELL. The people who have been before the committee urging the passage of this bill are as likely to be defendants as they are plaintiffs in a case.

MR. MADDEN. I shall object to the consideration of the bill unless the bill provides for the districting of the city, so that the courts can be held in convenient places for the people.

MR. CAMPBELL. That is the way they are held now, and the people do not want it in that way.

MR. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas objects.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4316) to further amend the act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1903, and to pass the same, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of said act be, and is hereby, amended and reenacted to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That the militia shall consist of every able-bodied male citizen of the respective States and Territories and the District of Columbia, and every able-bodied male of foreign birth who has declared his intention to become a citizen, who is more than 18 and less than 45 years of age, and shall be divided into two classes: The organized militia, to be known as the National Guard of the State, Territory, or District of Columbia, or by such other designations as may be given them by the laws of the respective States or Territories; the remainder to be known as the reserve militia: Provided, That the provisions of this act and of section 1661, Revised Statutes, as amended, shall apply only to the militia organized as a land force."

SEC. 2. That section 3 of said act as amended be, and the same is hereby, amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the regularly enlisted, organized, and uniformed active militia in the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia who have heretofore participated or shall hereafter participate in the apportionment of the annual appropriation provided by section 1661 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, whether known and designated as National Guard, militia, or otherwise, shall constitute the organized militia. On and after January 21, 1910, the organization, armament, and discipline of the organized militia in the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia shall be the same as that which is now or may hereafter be prescribed for the Regular Army of the United States, subject in time of peace to such general exceptions as may be authorized by the Secretary of War: Provided, That in peace and war each organized division of militia may have one inspector of small-arms practice with the rank of lieutenant-colonel; each organized brigade of militia one inspector of small-arms practice with the rank of major; each regiment of infantry or cavalry of organized militia one assistant inspector of small-arms practice with the rank of captain, and each separate or unassigned battalion of infantry or engineers or squadron of cavalry of organized militia one assistant inspector of small-arms practice with the rank of first lieutenant: Provided also, That the President of the United States in time of peace may, by order, fix the minimum number of enlisted men in each company, troop, battery, signal corps, engineer corps, and hospital corps: And provided further, That any corps of artillery, cavalry, and infantry existing in any of the States at the passage of the act of May 8, 1792, which, by the laws, customs, or usages of the said States have been in continuous existence since the passage of said act, under its provisions and under the provisions of section 232 and sections 1625 to 1660, both inclusive, of Title XVI of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the militia, shall be allowed to retain their accustomed privileges, subject, nevertheless, to all other duties required by law, in like manner as the other militia."

SEC. 3. That section 4 of said act as amended be, and the same is hereby, amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That whenever the United States is invaded or in danger of invasion from any foreign nation, or of rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, or the President is unable with the regular forces at his command to execute the laws of the Union, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth such number of the militia of the State or of the States or Territories or of the District of Columbia as he may deem necessary to repel such invasion, suppress such rebellion, or to enable him to execute such laws, and to issue his orders for that purpose, through the governor of the respective State or Territory, or through the commanding general of the militia of the District of Columbia, from which State, Territory, or District such troops may be called, to such officers of the militia as he may think proper."

SEC. 4. That section 5 of said act as amended be, and the same is hereby, amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That whenever the President calls forth the organized militia of any State, Territory, or of the District of Columbia, to be employed in the service of the United States, he may specify in his call the period for which such service is required, and the militia so called shall continue to serve during the term so specified, either within or without the territory of the United States, unless sooner relieved by order of the President: Provided, That no commissioned officer or enlisted man of the organized militia shall be held to service beyond the term of his existing commission or enlistment; Provided further, That when the military needs of the Federal Government arising from the necessity to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, or repel invasion, can not be met by the regular forces, the organized militia shall be called into the service of the United States in advance of any volunteer force which it may be determined to raise."

SEC. 5. That section 7 of said act as amended be, and the same is hereby, amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That every officer and enlisted man of the militia who shall be called forth in the manner hereinbefore prescribed, shall be numbered for service without further enlistment, and without further medical examination previous to such muster, except for those States and Territories which have not adopted the standard of medical examination prescribed for the Regular Army: Provided, however, That any officer or enlisted man of the militia who shall refuse or neglect to present himself for such muster, upon being called forth as herein prescribed, shall be subject to trial by court-martial and shall be punished as such court-martial may direct."

SEC. 6. That section 8 of said act as amended be, and the same is hereby, amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That the majority membership of courts-martial for the trial of officers or men of the militia when in the service of the United States shall be composed of militia officers."

SEC. 7. That section 11 of said act as amended be, and the same is hereby, amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. That when the militia is called into the actual service of the United States, or any portion of the militia is called forth under the provisions of this act, their pay shall commence from the day of their appearing at the place of company rendezvous, but this provision shall not be construed to authorize any species of expenditure previous to arriving at such places of rendezvous which is not provided by existing laws to be paid after their arrival at such places of rendezvous."

SEC. 8. That section 13 of said act as amended be, and the same is hereby, amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to procure, by purchase or manufacture, and issue from time to time to the organized militia, under such regulations as he may prescribe, such number of the United States service arms, together with all accessories and such other accouterments, equipments, uniforms, clothing, equipage, and military stores of all kinds required for the Army of the United States as are necessary to arm, uniform, and equip all of the organized militia in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, in accordance with the requirements of this act, without charging the cost or value thereof, or any expense connected therewith, against the allotment of said State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, out of the annual appropriation provided by section 1661 of the Revised Statutes as amended, or requiring payment therefor, and to exchange, without receiving any money credit therefor, ammunition or parts thereof suitable to the new arms, round for round, for corresponding ammunition suitable to the old arms heretofore issued to said State, Territory, or the District of Columbia by the United States: Provided, That said property shall remain the property of the United States, except as hereinafter provided, and be annually accounted for by the governors of the States and Territories as required by law, and that each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia shall, on receipt of new arms or equipments, turn in to the War Department, or otherwise dispose of in accordance with the directions of the Secretary of War, without receiving any money credit therefor and without expense for transportation, all United States property so replaced or condemned. When the organized militia is uniformed as above required, the Secretary of War is authorized to fix an annual clothing allowance to each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia for each enlisted man of the organized militia thereof, and thereafter issues of clothing to such States, Territories, and the District of Columbia shall be in accordance with such allowance, and the governors of the States and Territories and the commanding general of the Militia of the District of Columbia shall be authorized to drop from their returns each year as expended clothing corresponding in value to such allowance."

"The Secretary of War is hereby further authorized to issue from time to time to the organized militia, under such regulations as he may prescribe, small arms and artillery ammunition upon the requisition of the governor, in the proportion of 50 per cent of the corresponding Regular Army allowance, without charge to the State's allotment from the appropriation under section 1661, Revised Statutes, as amended. To provide means to carry into effect the provisions of this section, the necessary money to cover the cost of procuring, exchanging, or issuing of arms, accouterments, equipments, uniforms, clothing, equipage, ammunition, and military stores to be exchanged or issued hereunder is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the sum expended in the execution of the purchases and issues provided for in this section shall not exceed the sum of $2,000,000 in any fiscal year: Provided also, That the Secretary of War shall annually submit to Congress a report of expenditures made by him in the execution of the requirements of this section."

SEC. 9. That section 15 of said act as amended be, and the same is hereby, amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. That the Secretary of War is authorized to provide for participation by any part of the organized militia of any State or Territory, on the request of the governor thereof, in the encampment, maneuvers, and field instruction of any part of the Regular Army at or near any military post or camp or lake or seacoast defenses of the United States. In such case the organized militia so participating shall receive the same pay, subsistence, and transportation as is provided by law for the officers and men of the Regular Army, and no part of the sums appropriated for the support of the Regular Army shall be used to pay any part of the expenses of the organized militia of any State, Territory, or District of Columbia, while engaged in joint encampments, maneuvers, and field instruction of the Regular Army and militia, but all payments to the militia under the provisions of this section and all allowances for mileage shall be made solely from the sums appropriated for such purposes: Provided, That the command of such military post or camp and the officers and troops of the United States there stationed shall remain with the regular commander of the post without regard to the rank of the commanding or other officers of the militia temporarily so encamped within its limits or in its vicinity: Provided further, That except as herein specified the right to command during such joint encampments, maneuvers, and field instruction shall be governed by the rules set out in articles 122 and 124 of the rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States. The sums appropriated for the organized militia for such joint encampment, maneuvers, and field instruction shall be disbursed as, and for that purpose shall constitute, one fund; and the Secretary of War shall forward to Congress, at each session next after said encampment, a detailed statement of the expenses of such encampments and maneuvers."

SEC. 10. That section 16 of said act as amended be, and the same is hereby, amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 16. That whenever any officer or enlisted man of the organized militia shall, upon the recommendation of the governor of any State, Territory, or the commanding general of the District of Columbia militia, and when authorized by the President, attend and pursue a regular course of study at any military school or college of the United States, such officer or enlisted man shall receive from the annual appropriation for the support of the Army the same travel allowances and quarters or commutation of quarters to which an officer or enlisted man of the Regular Army would be entitled for attending such school or college under orders from proper military authority; such officer shall also receive commutation and subsistence at the rate of $1 per day, and each enlisted man such subsistence as is furnished to an enlisted man of the Regular Army while in actual attendance upon a course of instruction."

SEC. 11. That section 20 of said act as amended be, and the same is hereby, amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 20. That upon the application of the governor of any State or Territory furnished with material of war under the provisions of this act, or former laws of Congress, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, detail one or more officers or enlisted men of the Army to report to the governor of such State or Territory for duty in connection with the organized militia. All such assignments may be revoked at the request of the governor of such State or Territory or at the pleasure of the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to appoint a board of five officers on the active list of the organized militia so selected as to secure, as far as practicable, equitable representation to all sections of the United States, and which shall, from time to time, as the Secretary of War may direct, proceed to Washington, D. C., for consultation with the Secretary of War respecting the condition, status, and needs of the whole body of the organized militia. Such officers shall be appointed for the term of four years unless sooner relieved by the Secretary of War.

"The actual and necessary traveling expenses of the members of the board, together with a per diem to be established by the Secretary of War, shall be paid to the members of the board. The expenses herein authorized, together with the necessary clerical and office expenses of the division of militia affairs in the office of the Secretary of War, shall constitute a charge against the whole sum annually appropriated under section 1661, Revised Statutes, as amended, and shall be paid therefrom, and not from the allotment duly apportioned to any particular State, Territory, or the District of Columbia; and a list of such expenses shall be submitted to Congress annually by the Secretary of War in connection with his annual report."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey demands a second. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the bill also, and I demanded a second.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair understands that the gentleman from New Jersey is on the committee.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Oh, no; I am not on the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is any member of the Committee on the Militia opposed to this bill?

Mr. STEENERSON. Not anyone who is present.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Mississippi opposed to the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi. The gentleman from Minnesota is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Mississippi to twenty minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, in order that the House may understand the nature and effect of this measure I will call attention to the fact that the Constitution makes it the duty of Congress to provide for the organization, the arming, the disciplining and calling forth of the militia in certain cases. This duty, strangely enough, was neglected for over one hundred years, so that when the Spanish war in 1908 broke out we found that the militia of the different States was not uniformly organized, disciplined, and armed, and our experience in that war called attention to this defect which resulted in a harvest of delay, sickness, death, and disappointment, which was entirely unnecessary if a satisfactory system had been provided by Congress. As a result of this recognized fact the subject of legislation in regard to militia became a live question and resulted in the enactment of the Dick law in 1903, the provisions of which are familiar to most of you.

That law has now been in force a little more than five years, and in that five-year period certain defects have been discovered by our experience under it which it is sought to remedy by this bill, which is a revision and amendment of the Dick law. The history of the preparation of this measure may be briefly alluded to in order that you may realize that it has received the most careful consideration. The subject has been agitated for several years by those patriotic citizens who took an interest in militia matters and national guard affairs, and in their meetings and conventions they appointed committees to draft and propose amendments to the Dick law. This resulted in the preparation of the measure which was submitted to a convention of representatives of the National Guard throughout the United States held in Boston last winter, and a bill was submitted to Congress, introduced in the Senate by Senator Dick and in the House by myself as chairman of the Committee on Militia.

The Committee on Militia of the House held extended hearings upon the measure. We heard representatives of the National Guard of the various States, adjutants-general, and public-spirited citizens interested in the cause of the training and development of the citizen soldiery of the country. We also heard the officials of the War Department, including the Assistant Secretary of War and the Judge-Advocate-General. All the features of the bill and the changes affected by it in the existing law were carefully considered. Various amendments were proposed, some of which were adopted. The committee made its report and reported the bill which is on the Calendar known as H. R. 14783. In the report of that bill I took occasion to print the Dick law on one page and the proposed measure on the opposite page, beginning on pages 44 and 45, so that those of you who have that report can easily see the proposed changes, because they are printed in italics.

But, briefly stated, this bill does not change in any material respect the Dick law, the existing law, except in two or three particulars. The first change is in regard to the calling out of the militia, and it provides that when called out they shall serve during the term of their enlistment, and not as now, nine months. That limitation of nine months was put in the Dick law as a concession to certain parties who could not otherwise consent to the bill at that time, but it has been found that it is utterly useless and its omission has met with the approval of the committee of both the House and Senate, who agreed that this limitation should be removed. The bill also provides on that point that the National Guard, or organized militia, as it is denominated in this bill, when called out by the President of the United States for the purposes for which it may be constitutionally called forth, as the Constitution says, shall be preferred over any volunteer force that it may be determined to raise.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I notice in the section to which the gentleman has just referred a change in this law from the Dick law in this, that the President has the right to call out the National Guard for services within or without the United States.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is true.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Why was that added to this bill?

Mr. STEENERSON. Briefly stated, the reason was this: The Constitution vests in Congress the right to declare war and to call forth the militia in execution of the laws of the Union.

The Judge-Advocate-General in a very elaborate brief upon the subject advises us—and it was the opinion of the lawyers of the committee and other members—that offensive warfare necessarily means calling out a force beyond the jurisdiction of the United States. Such warfare can only be begun by a declaration of war, which is itself a law, and therefore a law that forbade the calling forth of the militia and ordering it beyond the United States by the Government would be unconstitutional. The President has the right to enforce the laws of the Union, and a declaration of war being a law of the United States, he has the right to enforce it by all the constitutional forces at his command.

That is the opinion of the Judge-Advocate-General, and it is supported by citations from decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and the opinion of the members of my committee was unanimous on that point.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The power that the President has derived from the Constitution?

Mr. STEENERSON. The power derived from the Constitution.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. From that clause of the Constitution that gives Congress power to call out the State militia and enforce the laws of the nation?

Mr. STEENERSON. To enforce the law of the nation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Or to suppress insurrections or rebel invasions?

Mr. STEENERSON. To execute the laws of the Union or rebel invasions. The clause they construe to authorize force outside of the nation is the one to enforce the laws of the Union.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is a very remarkable construction.

Mr. STEENERSON. It has been enforced on three different occasions: In the war with Mexico, and the war when we sent our militia into Florida, into Spanish territory, and under the authority of the Constitution, because we had previously declared war against Spain.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Because you had power to rebel invasion?

Mr. STEENERSON. Because we had made declaration of war, which is a law of the Union, and we have a right to use the forces of the United States to enforce that law.

The other provisions in the bill—

Mr. KEIFER. Do I understand you to say that we used the militia in the Mexican war?

Mr. STEENERSON. We did. I did not say so, but we did; and we did it in the invasion of Florida.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; but we claimed the territory.

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I do not think we did.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, yes. We took it.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is cited in the brief of Judge-Advocate-General Davis, which I will insert in the Record.

Mr. KEIFER. Is not this the fact, that the nearest we can get to it under the Constitution is to use the militia when they are called out—

Mr. STEENERSON. I am afraid I will lose all my time.

Mr. KEIFER. During an invasion, and the question then is whether we can take them across a Territorial line?

Mr. STEENERSON. I agree. You can always do it to repel invasion.

How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Esch in the chair). The gentleman has eight minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. The next provision of importance is a provision that authorizes the Secretary of War to supply to the militia of the different States uniforms, arms, ammunition, and equipment, without charging them against the quota under the $2,000,000 appropriation, under section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, which, if not used for that purpose, will be used by the States in their State encampments of instruction.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can the gentleman tell us what the total appropriation is under section 1661 of the Revised Statutes as amended?

Mr. STEENERSON. Two million dollars.

Mr. TAWNEY. Up until the time of the amendment the appropriation was $200,000 for the militia.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, no; it was $400,000 until the Dick law was enacted, and in that act they increased it to $1,000,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is carried in section 1661?

Mr. STEENERSON. Four hundred thousand dollars in the original Revised Statutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is $200,000 in the original Revised Statutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is not the last print. Anyway, that is immaterial, because it is $2,000,000, and this supply of clothing, arms, and ammunition authorized by this act can not exceed in any one year $2,000,000. It may be, and probably will be, less, as the strength of the militia stands to-day.

Now, I contend that, notwithstanding that expenditure, this is a measure of economy.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. In a minute. The reason for this is that we believe in a small Regular Army and, with an efficient militia, we need not in the future increase the strength of the Regular Army.

That is the opinion of the War Department, and it is the opinion of all those who have given this matter consideration. What is the question of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is a unanimous report of the Committee on the Militia?

Mr. STEENERSON. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on the Militia, and also unanimously passed by the Senate.

In reporting the bill to the House Committee the Assistant Secretary of War said:

It is proper to say in conclusion that those to whose hands the administration of the Army is intrusted are most earnest in the advocacy of a measure which is calculated to secure the efficient, harmonious, and abiding cooperation of the two great branches of the constitutional military establishment. I earnestly commend the bill to the favorable attention of your committee, and I believe that its adoption at the present time will secure the purpose of national defense at a minimum of public expenditure.

And his report to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs contains the following:

The bill was prepared by a committee of the National Guard Association, composed of officers of high rank and long experience in the organized militia, who have been honorably identified with its development and who are deeply interested in its welfare and efficiency. In the preparation of the bill the cooperation of the Department, of the General Staff, and the several staff corps has been cordially extended and the measure, as perfected, represents the views of the officers of the regular establishment and of the organized militia in respect to those branches of the constitutional military establishment which are immediately concerned in solving the important problem of national defense. It should also be said that the bill fully embodies the experience gained in the execution of the general militia law of 1903 and in the operation of the system of joint maneuvers and brigade camps, which the liberality of Congress has made it possible for the Department to inaugurate in recent years.

It is the view of the Department that the measure will be productive of highly valuable results. The amount involved is not considerable, and will give to the organized militia of the United States a degree of efficiency which can only be obtained by affording it a reasonable measure of Federal support and assistance. While the adoption of the measure will result in great and immediate benefit to the National Guard, it is also calculated to advance the efficiency of the Regular Army by bringing it into closer and more helpful contact with the organized militia.

For the reasons above stated, the bill is strongly commended to your favorable consideration as a measure of great and immediate national concern.

The bill, I repeat, is strongly recommended to our favorable consideration by the War Department as one of great and immediate national concern.

It is a timely recognition of the important public service by the membership of the organized militia. The young men who constitute these organizations in the different States and Territories of the Union, who freely contribute their time and their effort in order that they may acquire the military training and education necessary to enable them to serve their country with efficiency in time of need and national peril, are deserving of our tender affection and highest praise.

The Regular Army numbers only a little over 50,000 men. Admittedly it is only a nucleus around which a larger force may be built up in case of need. The Navy is important as a means of national defense, but it is in the skill, bravery, and strength of our land forces after all that our security as a nation depends. It has been the policy of our country to maintain only a small Regular Army, and to depend in times of war on the citizen soldiery of our land. This will be our policy in the future. In order, however, to justify keeping our Regular Army down to its present authorized numbers we should encourage the young men of our land to prepare for military service in time of peace. This is the aim of the present bill. It is good economy to adopt this course, for unless we do, an increase in our Regular Army would undoubtedly become necessary.

It is a measure that concerns all the people of all sections and parties alike. [Applause.]

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, this is a wonderful bill in some respects. It is brought up at 10 o'clock at night, and brought up for consideration with twenty minutes' debate on each side. It provides for the creation of courts-martial, and provides that the majority of the members of the courts-martial shall be officers of the Regular Army. It makes a new provision of law, that these men shall be mustered into the service, and when they are enlisted and not present at that muster they will be punished with that sort of a court-martial, composed of a majority of Regular Army officers. It then amends the law by inserting the words "either within or without the territory of the United States." So that the President can call out this entire militia to serve either "within or without the United States."

The gentleman says Congress has the power to declare war. Yes; but if this bill passes, the President will have the right to carry on war without a declaration by Congress and send the entire militia into foreign parts in order to carry it on. But why I am most against giving this power to the President is because after the declaration of war by the President the President should have the right to execute the laws of the United States, and that would be the law. But while this bill makes no such provisions, I should judge from what I read of it it will literally accomplish the purpose of increasing for all practical purposes the Army of the United States by the number of militia herein provided for.

Mr. Speaker, I find it impossible for me in this time to run over the many changes that it will make from existing law. The gentleman says Congress had power to do all this long ago. That is the point. We have undoubtedly neglected it heretofore. Congress never intended to put the organized militia of the United States at the service of the President, either within or without the United States, at his will. It never intended to make another change that is made here. It says that the militia shall be subject to the rules and regulations prescribed for the Regular Army of the United States, subject, in time of peace, under such general exceptions as may be authorized by the Secretary of War. This is a pretty dangerous bill to pass after forty minutes of debate, with no greater opportunity to tell us what is in it than we have had. I will not talk about the increase of the expense.

I know it is stated that the National Guard wants it, but the National Guard does not know much about it except the increase of the money to be expended on the National Guard encampment. The balance of the influence behind this bill comes from some other source far more potent than the officers of the National Guard within your respective States.

How much time have I consumed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed three minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, there is no one who cares more for the militia than I do. I served in it for over ten years. The reason I asked a second is because I think it is not only too important a bill to be disposed of on a motion to suspend the rules, but because I find that by inadvertence the chairman and the committee, who desired to increase the power of the President over the militia of this country, have limited his power to the organized militia, whereas before he could call out every able-bodied citizen in this land. I speak of the old acts of 1792 and 1795, and I will read only two sections:

R. S., Sec. 1651. Every able-bodied male citizen of the respective States, resident therein, who is of the age of 18 years and under the age of 45 years, shall be enrolled in the militia.

Then follow the provisions as to enrollment of "every able-bodied citizen." True, enrollment was neglected. But when we had war Abraham Lincoln called for nine-months' men, and he got authority there for that under this provision.

Another section (No. 1669 of the Revised Statutes), originally passed in 1795, is still stronger.

Whenever the United States are invaded, or are in imminent danger of invasion—

I think under that they could have been taken out of the country—from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, or of rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall be lawful to call forth such number of the militia of the State or States most convenient to the place of danger or scene of action as he may deem necessary to repel such invasion or to suppress such rebellion, and to issue his orders for that purpose to such officers of the militia as he may think proper.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on the Militia years ago we refused to bring up that law for revision for fear that by some mistake or amendment this power should be taken away from the President.

This bill, strange to say, without intending to do so, does take away that power; for in the first section, after saying that all males of a certain age belong to the militia, the bill divides them into two classes, the organized militia and the reserve militia, and with a proviso that the provisions of this act shall apply only to the militia organized as a land force. As a result the subsequent section 4, in which the authority for calling out the militia is reenacted, only applies to the organized militia, and the power of the President over every able-bodied citizen is taken away by this act. I consider that to be a matter that goes back of all questions of finance.

The old law of 1795 gave the President direct authority over every citizen of this land, and in this bill, in the section which provides that in case of rebellion or invasion, or threatened invasion, the President may issue a call, it is not provided that he may call out every able-bodied man, through their officers, but it provides that he may issue his orders for that purpose through the governor of the respective State or Territory, or through the commanding general of the militia of the District of Columbia, from which State, Territory, or District such troops may be called, to such officers of the militia as he may deem proper. Why, we remember a time, at the beginning of the civil war, when some of the governors did not desire to have the militia called out, but we got our militia from West Virginia, and eastern Tennessee and Kentucky by the orders of the President direct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am very sorry. I wanted to say one word or two more about some of the other sections. I do not believe that the President should be forbidden to call out volunteers until he has called out the militia.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I regret that a bill of this importance must be disposed of without an opportunity for consideration in all of its details. It is a bill that deals with the power of the Federal Government over the organized militia of the States. It is a bill which contemplates, as an adjunct to the Regular Army of the United States, adding the organized militia of the States, and I am opposed to a standing army of several hundred thousand men, nor am I in favor of conferring upon the President the power over the State militia that this bill confers upon him.

I have for twelve years served in the organized militia of the State of Minnesota. I have great respect for the officers and for the enlisted men in all of these militia organizations; but, like the gentleman from New Jersey and the gentleman from Mississippi, I can say that I do not believe that the officers or men of the organized militia know what the effects of the provisions in this bill are.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government in the last five years has been very liberal with our organized militia. Up until five years ago the highest amount the Federal Government had ever appropriated for the organized militia of the United States was $400,000. To-day the organized militia receives from the Federal Government, under a permanent appropriation, $2,075,000 annually, because, in addition to the $2,000,000 permanent appropriation which they have received since the passage of the so-called "Dick bill" five years ago there is another appropriation of $75,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is proposed to increase this appropriation 100 per cent by giving to the organized militia a permanent annual appropriation of $2,000,000 more, making the permanent annual appropriation for the organized militia $4,075,000 annually hereafter—not for one year, but for all time to come. In addition to this, we have appropriated one million to enable the militia to participate in the camp maneuvers of the Regular Army, making $3,000,000 appropriated at this session for the State militia.

If the officers and the enlisted men of the Army of the United States can in five years' time increase the annual appropriations for this adjunct to the Regular Army of the United States to this extent, there is no telling to what extent they may be able to go in securing further appropriations hereafter. They say that this expenditure is limited to $2,000,000. The proviso at the end of that section which authorizes the Secretary of War to furnish equipment, to furnish clothes, to furnish small arms, to furnish ammunition, reads as follows:

Provided, That the sum expended in the execution and purchase of the issues provided for in this section shall not exceed the sum of $2,000,000 in any fiscal year.

That does not cover all of the expenditures, however, which are authorized to be made in behalf of the militia under this bill. In addition to this annual appropriation we are to have a new division established in the War Department here in Washington. What for? For the purpose of administering the affairs of the National Guard of the United States. I read from page 12, beginning on line 23 of the bill:

The expenses herein authorized, together with the necessary clerical and office expenses of the division of militia affairs in the office of the Secretary of War, shall constitute a charge against the whole sum annually appropriated, etc.

Mr. STEENERSON. For the militia.

Mr. TAWNEY. For the militia.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. That does not increase the expense one cent.

Mr. TAWNEY. That does not increase the expense, but you get an organization here in the city of Washington; that organization will be most potential and powerful in securing further increases for the National Guard, regardless of the will or wish of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. That clerical force is already there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman give me one-half minute more?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield one-half minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say just one word further: That at this session of Congress we have appropriated for the Army and Navy $43,000,000 in excess of the current appropriations for the Army and Navy. When will the spirit of militarism that has taken hold of the Government and the country cease? When will we cease to appropriate as extravagantly as we have at this session for war purposes?

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD].

Mr. FLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentlemen who are opposing this bill understand the objects and purposes of it as they were understood by the committee. While this is a Senate bill, we considered it very carefully. I want to state the proposition briefly, as I understand it. The object is to build up the militia organizations, to make them conform as near as possible in their organization, number of men in the company, to the Regular Army forces, so that in the event of war, if the militia are called into service of the United States, they will all be trained in the same school.

That is, the militia will be familiar with the regular duties of the Army of the United States, so that you can bring the troops together and harmonize them and make one potent force of them. That relates to their duties in the Army when called into the service of the Army of the United States. I think that is a laudable purpose. It is true it carries an appropriation for the purpose of aiding the State guard, the National Guard of the different States. We are spending over forty millions on the Regular Army, and yet whenever we get involved in a war the President of the United States calls upon the governors of the States for men to aid in that work, and I think it would be to the highest interests of the whole country to have trained men equipped in methods of warfare.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLOYD. My time is so limited that I regret I can not. There is one other question, and that is the constitutional question. A great argument is made against this bill by gentlemen who claim it enlarges the power of the President. I want to express my views on that question. The Constitution, as I understand it, provides that the President of the United States, through the governors of the several States, in time of war may call out the militia of the different States to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or to execute the laws of the United States. It is not within the power of this committee, it is not within the power of Congress to take from or add to that constitutional provision. That is a provision of the Constitution of the United States and lodges that power in the President of the United States, and it is not within our power to add to or take from it, and we do not undertake to do that and do not understand we are doing that by this provision of the bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple proposition. It costs to-day $80,000,000 per year to take care of the Regular Army of 50,000 men, and this bill asks for only $4,000,000 to take care of an army of 105,000 men. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Two million dollars.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes; two million per year or four million each Congress. This bill does not give them any salary. It simply gives them equipment. It is a small sum to equip 105,000 soldiers. I do not think there can be any valid argument against this bill. It is asked for by the adjutant-general of every State in the Union. Every national guardsman desires the bill, the whole 105,000 are asking for it, and I trust they will not plead in vain. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think many of us want an army of 125,000 men, even if it does not cost much. I now yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, there is no emergency that demands the passage of this bill at this time. It is a good bill to postpone until we come together next December. [Applause.] If we vote down this proposition to suspend the rules the bill loses none of its privileges. It will appear on the Calendar on the first Monday of December next, and when we get together I hope we will not come for roll calls, but for discussion, and there will be ample opportunity to discuss this bill from beginning to end.

If it is a good bill, the gentleman from Minnesota ought to welcome discussion. If it is a bad bill, discussion will show the weaknesses of the bill and the reasons there may be for not enacting it into law. So, Mr. Speaker, I hope the action of the House will be to vote down this motion and simply postpone action upon this bill until next December. We ought to be careful how we add $2,000,000 more to the burden we are to have for the year to come—

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. PAYNE. It does not make any difference what the object is, the burden is already beyond what we anticipated when we entered upon this session of Congress. Why add to it? Why not wait until next December and see how our revenues come out, see how our deficiencies come out, see whether we ought to pass this bill? There is plenty of time, and I hope the motion will be voted down.

Mr. STEENERSON. I am willing to have more time on this bill now. I am willing to ask unanimous consent to extend the time. I ask unanimous consent for thirty minutes more time for debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that general debate be extended thirty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman from Minnesota will ask unanimous consent for six hours, to be equally divided between the two sides, I will readily consent, although that is not sufficient. If he does not, I will object. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is almost impossible in this short time to discuss this bill. Whenever any question is raised as to its wisdom, it is suggested that the provision is substantially the Dick law. Well, that only shows to my mind that when the Dick law was passed it was not fully understood. But this bill does enlarge very greatly the existing laws relative to the militia.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman permit—

Mr. SHERLEY. I will not; I have not the time.

Mr. GRAHAM. Is the gentleman aware that one hundred years—

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I must ask for my time. This bill gives to the President of the United States the power to order the militia of the country outside of the limits of the United States. Under the provisions of the bill the President of the United States could send the militia to the Philippines to-morrow, and I do not believe that that ought to be the law of the land, and I would not vote for it if every member of every militia organization in America petitioned me to so vote. I believe it is vicious. I am in favor of having an efficient militia, but I do not think that you need, in order to have the militia efficient, to make it really the same as the standing Army of the United States; and I do not believe in trying to bribe the militia into supporting a bill of this kind by offering to pay certain of their expenses out of the Treasury if they will forego their liberties as American citizens. I am opposed to the bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, in the one and one-half minutes I have left I want to call attention to the language of section 5 again, that this militia shall continue to serve "during the term so specified," "either within or without the territory of the United States." I also desire to call attention to this new language in the bill:

That when the military needs of the Federal Government, arising from the necessity to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, or repel invasion, can not be met by the regular forces, the organized militia shall be called into the service of the United States—in advance of any volunteer force which it may be determined to raise.

Understand, "United States," not the States—

Not only is the gentleman from Kentucky right in saying that the militia under this law could be ordered by the President, without an act of Congress, to the Philippine Islands, not only was I right in saying that the militiaman can under it be judged by a court-martial composed in part of the officers of the Regular Army, Mr. Speaker, but in many other respects this bill is an entirely new departure, and it amounts to organizing an auxiliary arm of the Regular Army 125,000 men strong.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that all of these objections are untenable. The law is perfectly constitutional, and we can not take away or add to the power of the President under the Constitution to enforce the laws of the Union. It seems to me to be very poor economy to refuse to furnish clothing, ammunition, and arms to the militia of the different States when they are the men that you have got to depend upon in case of war. [Applause.] It is the citizen soldier that has always been the support of this country in time of war, and we hope by this provision to so encourage the citizen soldiers throughout the different States, who patriotically serve without pay in order that they may acquire discipline and a military education. We want to encourage them everywhere in order that the strength of the country may be in its citizens and not in its Regular Army. It is economy as well as expediency that demands it. [Applause.]

[Memorandum by the Judge-Advocate-General.]

EMPLOYMENT OF THE ORGANIZED MILITIA IN THE EXECUTION OF A DECLARATION OF WAR.

Among the several war powers vested in Congress by the Constitution are the following:

"To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years." (Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, par. 11.)

"To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions." (Ibid., par. 14.)

"To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress." (Ibid., par. 15.)

The following war powers are vested in the President:

"The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States, when called into the actual service of the United States." (Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2, par. 1.)

It will thus be seen that very broad powers, in respect to the national defense, are vested in Congress by the Constitution. In the execution of those powers:

(1) It may create a standing army, as a main reliance, relegating the militia to a subordinate position.

(2) It may make the militia a chief reliance and entirely dispense with the standing army.

As a matter of fact, Congress has acted under all the grants of war power which are vested in it by the Constitution. It has fostered and developed the militia and has employed it in occasions of national emergency; it has organized standing armies; it has raised volunteer armies for a limited term, and has resorted to conscription as a means of obtaining a military force with a view to meet a national emergency.

In framing the Constitution it was necessary to prescribe three heads under which the several war powers of Congress should be arranged, this to meet the following cases of emergency:

1. Offensive war, involving an invasion of foreign territory.
2. Defensive war, due to the invasion of the territory of the United States by a public enemy.
3. Insurrection or rebellion against the authority of the United States or against that of a State. (Under this head falls the case where there is forcible opposition to the execution of the laws of the United States.)

Each of these cases had to be provided for, and was in fact made the subject of a specific grant of power to Congress in the Constitution.

In the case of offensive war, hostilities would begin, and could only begin, with a formal declaration of war, originating in that branch of the Government having authority under the Constitution to act in the case.

In the case of defensive war, as no declaration has ever been regarded, at international law, as necessary by the state acting on the defensive, it was necessary to vest a power in Congress and the Executive to provide and employ troops with a view to resist such invasion.

In the case of insurrection, rebellion, or forcible resistance to the execution of the laws, it was necessary to vest authority in some branch of the Government to suppress such insurrection or rebellion or to overcome such resistance.

There have been three declarations of war in our constitutional history, in each of which offensive operations are expressly contemplated, and each took the form of an act of Congress, which received Executive approval in the usual manner. Each contained other matter than the mere declaration of war and vested certain duties in the Executive. The following are the declarations:

Declaration of war against the Barbary powers. (Act of Feb. 6, 1802, 2 Stat. L., 129.)

Declaration of war against Great Britain. (Act of June 18, 1812; act of June 18, 1812, 2 Stat. L., 755.)

Declaration of war against Spain. (Act of Apr. 25, 1898, 30 Stat. L., 364.)

The Mexican war began without declaration, and its existence was recognized by Congress in an appropriate act of legislation. (Act of May 13, 1846, 9 Stat. L., 9.) Similar legislative recognition of an existing state of public war was given at the outbreak of the civil war.

It has been seen that each of the enactments above referred to constituted a constitutional act of legislation, which it was in the power of Congress to adopt and which it was the duty of the Executive to carry into effect. It is interesting to note that the act of May 13, 1846, recognizing the existence of war with Mexico, expressly authorized the Executive to use the militia, among other forces, for its prosecution, and Congress by an appropriate enactment, which had some of the aspects of retrospective legislation, required the militia forces called forth in its operation to serve for six months, instead of three, as required by then-existing law.

It is conceded that what may be called the popular view of the operation of the Constitution is contrary to that herein explained—that is, that the militia may not be employed in offensive operations, i. e., in the invasion of foreign territory. This view has influenced the action of the Government upon several occasions; but I think it will be apparent, if the cases be carefully studied, that in the early history of the Republic such action was due to the fact that the militia was not a sufficiently disciplined force to be employed successfully in the operations of offensive warfare. For this reason, and to give the Federal Government complete control over the forces raised by its authority, the expedient of volunteer forces has been resorted to upon several occasions of national emergency, especially during the wars with Mexico and Spain and the civil war.

It is submitted, however, that a declaration of war is an act of constitutional legislation, requiring the performance of corresponding executive duties on the part of the President. It differs in no respect from other legislation acts, and equally charges the President with the duty of execution.

In this connection attention is invited to the correspondence in connection with the Seminole war in 1818. The operations undertaken involved an invasion of the Spanish territory of Florida. For this purpose the militia was called forth and employed. Whether the militia forces, which were slow in assembling, were actually used in carrying out the invasion of Spanish territory is not fully apparent from the correspondence. (American State Papers, Vol. XII, "Military affairs," pp. 981 to 769.) See also a letter from Secretary of War Monroe to Congress under date of February 11, 1815. (Ibid., 605.)

Very respectfully,

GEO. B. DAVIS.

FEBRUARY 4, 1908.

The following are extracts from messages of Presidents relative to the militia:

PRESIDENT WASHINGTON, 1789.

Along with this object (the preservation of peace and tranquillity on the frontiers) I am induced to suggest another, with the national importance and necessity of which I am deeply impressed; I mean some uniform and effective system for the militia of the United States. It is unnecessary to offer arguments in recommendation of a measure on which the honor, safety, and well-being of our country so evidently and so essentially depend; but it may not be amiss to observe that I am particularly anxious it should receive as early attention as circumstances will admit, because it is now in our power to avail ourselves of the military knowledge disseminated throughout the several States by means of the many well-instructed officers and soldiers of the late Army, a resource which is daily diminishing by death and other causes. To suffer this peculiar advantage to pass away unimproved would be to neglect an opportunity.

PRESIDENT WASHINGTON, 1790.

Among the many interesting objects which will engage your attention, that of providing for the common defense will merit particular regard. To be prepared for war is one of the most efficient means of preserving peace.

A free people ought not only to be armed but disciplined, to which end a uniform and well-digested plan is requisite.

PRESIDENT WASHINGTON, 1791.

The first (militia) is certainly an object of primary importance, whether viewed in reference to the national security, to the satisfaction of the community, or to the preservation of order.

PRESIDENT WASHINGTON, 1793.

They are incapable of abuse in the hands of the militia, who ought to possess a pride in being the depository of the force of the Republic, and may be trained to a degree of energy equal to every military exigency of the United States. But it is an inquiry which can not be too solemnly pursued, whether the act more effectually to provide for the national defense by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States has organized them so as to produce their full effect; whether your own experience in the several States has not detected some imperfections in the scheme, and whether a material feature in an improvement of it ought not to be to afford an opportunity for the study of those branches of the military art which can scarcely ever be attained by practice alone.

PRESIDENT WASHINGTON, 1794.

The devising and establishing of a well-regulated militia would be a genuine source of legislative honor and a perfect title to public gratitude. I therefore entertain a hope that the present session will not pass without carrying to its full energy the power of organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and thus providing, in the language of the Constitution, for calling them forth to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasion.

PRESIDENT WASHINGTON, 1795.

With the review of our Army establishment is naturally connected that of the militia. It will merit inquiry what imperfections in the existing plan further experience may have unfolded. The subject is of so much moment, in my estimation, as to excite a constant solicitude that the consideration of it may be renewed until the greatest attainable perfection shall be accomplished. Time is wearing away some advantages for forwarding the object, while none better deserves the persevering attention of the public councils.

PRESIDENT JEFFERSON, 1801.

These considerations render important that we should, at every session, continue to amend the defects which from time to time show themselves in the laws for regulating the militia, until they are sufficiently perfect. Nor should we now, or at any time, separate until we can say we have done everything for the militia which we could do were an enemy at our door.

PRESIDENT JEFFERSON, 1802.

Considering that our regular troops are employed for local purposes, and that the militia is our general reliance for great and sudden emergencies, you will doubtless think this institution worthy of a review and give it those improvements of which you find it susceptible.

PRESIDENT JEFFERSON, 1804.

Should any improvement occur in the militia system, that will be always seasonable.

PRESIDENT JEFFERSON, 1805.

I can not, then, but earnestly recommend to your early consideration the expediency of so modifying our militia system as, by a separation of the more active part from that which is less so, we may draw from it, when necessary, an efficient corps for real and active service, and to be called to it in regular rotation.

PRESIDENT JEFFERSON, 1806.

A militia so organized that its effective portions can be called to any point in the Union, or volunteers instead of them, to serve a sufficient time, are means which may always be ready, yet never preying on our resources until actually called into use. They will maintain the public interests while a more permanent force shall be in course of preparation. But much will depend on the promptitude with which these means can be brought into activity.

PRESIDENT JEFFERSON, 1808.

For a people who are free, and who mean to remain so, a well organized and armed militia is their best security. It is therefore incumbent on us at every meeting to revise the condition of the militia, and to ask ourselves if it is prepared to repel a powerful enemy at every point of our territories exposed to invasion. Some of the States have paid a laudable attention to this subject; but every degree of neglect is to be found among others. Congress alone has power to produce a uniform state of preparation in this great organ of defense; the interests which they so deeply feel in their own and their country's security will present this as among the most important objects of their deliberation.

PRESIDENT MADISON, 1809.

Whatever may be the course of your deliberations on the subject of our military establishments, I should fail in my duty in not recommending to your serious attention the importance of giving to our militia, the great bulwark of our security and resource of our power, an organization the best adapted to eventual situations for which the United States ought to be prepared.

PRESIDENT MADISON, 1810.

These preparations for arming the militia having thus far provided for one of the objects contemplated by the power vested in Congress with respect to that great bulwark of the public safety, it is for their consideration whether further provisions are not requisite for the other contemplated objects of organization and discipline. To give to this great mass of physical and moral force the efficiency which it merits, and is capable of receiving, it is indispensable that they should be instructed and practiced in the rules by which they are to be governed. Toward an accomplishment of this important work I recommend for the consideration of Congress the expediency of instituting a system which shall in the first instance call into the field, at the public expense and for a given time, certain portions of the commissioned and noncommissioned officers. The instruction and discipline thus acquired would gradually diffuse through the entire body of the militia that practical knowledge and promptitude for active service which are the great ends to be pursued. Experience has left no doubt either of the necessity or of the efficacy of competent military skill in those portions of an army in fitting it for the final duties which it may have to perform.

PRESIDENT MADISON, 1812.

A revision of the militia laws, for the purpose of rendering them more systematic and better adapting them to emergencies of war, is at this time particularly desirable.

PRESIDENT MADISON, 1813.

The militia, being always to be regarded as the great bulwark of defense and security for free States, and the Constitution having wisely committed to the national authority a use of that force as the best provision against an unsafe military establishment, as well as a resource peculiarly adapted to a country having the extent and the exposure of the United States, I recommend to Congress a revision of the militia laws for the purpose of securing more effectually the services of all detachments called into the employment and placed under the Government of the United States.

PRESIDENT MADISON, 1814.

I earnestly renew at the same time a recommendation of such changes in the system of the militia as by classing and disciplining for the most prompt and active service the portions most capable of it will give to that great resource for the public safety all the required energy and efficiency.

PRESIDENT MADISON, 1815.

And I can not press too much on the attention of Congress such a classification and organization of the militia as will most effectually render it the safeguard of a free State. If experience has shown in the recent splendid achievements of militia the value of this resource for public defense, it has shown also the importance of that skill in the use of arms, and that familiarity with the essential rules of discipline which can not be expected from the regulations now in force. With this subject is intimately connected the necessity of accommodating the laws, in every respect, to the great object of enabling the political authority of the Union to employ promptly and effectually the physical power of the Union in the cases designated by the Constitution.

PRESIDENT MADISON, 1816.

An efficient militia is authorized and contemplated by the Constitution and required by the spirit and safety of free government. The present organization of our militia is universally regarded as less efficient than it ought to be made, and no organization can be better calculated to give to it its due force than a classification which will assign the foremost place in the defense of the country to that portion of its citizens whose activity and animation best enable them to rally to its standard. Besides the consideration that a time of peace is the time when the change can be made with the most convenience and equity, it will now be aided by the experience of a recent war, in which the militia bore so interesting a part.

PRESIDENT MONROE, 1817.

An improvement in the organization and discipline of the militia is one of the great objects which claims the unremitting attention of Congress.

PRESIDENT MONROE, 1822.

I have to add that in proportion as our regular force is small should the instruction and discipline of the militia, the great resource on which we rely, be pushed to the utmost extent that circumstances will admit.

PRESIDENT MONROE, 1823.

As the defense and even the liberties of the country must depend in times of imminent danger on the militia, it is of the highest importance that it be well organized, armed, and disciplined throughout the Union.

PRESIDENT ADAMS, 1825.

The organization of the militia is yet more indispensable to the liberties of the country. It is only by an effective militia that we can at once enjoy the repose of peace and bid defiance to foreign aggression; it is by the militia that we are constituted an armed nation, standing in perpetual panoply of defense in the presence of all the other nations of the earth.

To this end it would be necessary so to shape its organization as to give it a more united and active energy. There are laws for establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States and for arming and equipping its whole body. But it is a body of dislocated members, without the vigor of unity, and having little of uniformity but the name. To infuse into this most important institution the power of which it is susceptible, and to make it available for the defense of the Union at the shortest notice and at the smallest expense of time, of life, and of treasure, are among the benefits to be expected from the persevering deliberations of Congress.

PRESIDENT ADAMS, 1826.

The occasion was thought favorable for consulting the same board, aided by the results of a correspondence with the governors of the several States and Territories and other citizens of intelligence and experience, upon the acknowledged defective condition of our militia system, and of the improvements of which it is susceptible. The report of the board upon this subject is also submitted for your consideration.

PRESIDENT JACKSON, 1832.

If in asserting rights or in repelling wrongs war should come upon us, our regular force should be increased to an extent proportioned to an emergency, and our present small Army is a nucleus around which such force could be formed and embodied. But for purposes of defense, under ordinary circumstances, we must rely upon the electors of the country. Those by whom, and for whom, the Government was instituted and is supported, will constitute its protection in the hour of danger, as they do its check in the hour of safety.

But it is obvious that the militia system is imperfect. Much time is lost, much unnecessary expense incurred, and much public property wasted under the present arrangement. Little useful knowledge is gained by the musters and drills now established, and the whole subject evidently requires a thorough examination. Whether a plan of classification, remedying these defects and providing for a system of instruction, might not be adopted, is submitted to the consideration of Congress. The Constitution has vested in the General Government an independent authority upon the subject of the militia which renders its action essential to the establishment or improvement of the system, and I recommend the matter to your consideration, in the conviction that the state of this important arm of the public defense requires your attention.

PRESIDENT JACKSON, 1835.

Occurrences to which we, as well as other nations, are liable, both in our internal and external relations, point to the necessity of an efficient organization of the militia. I am again induced by the importance of the subject to bring it to your attention. To suppress domestic violence and to repel foreign invasion, should these calamities overtake us, we must rely in the first instance upon the great body of the community whose will has instituted and whose power must support the Government.

PRESIDENT JACKSON, 1836.

In this connection it is also proper to remind you that the defects in our present militia system are every day rendered more apparent. The duty of making further provision by law for organizing, arming, and disciplining this armed defense has been so repeatedly presented to Congress by myself and my predecessors that I deem it sufficient on this occasion to refer to the last annual message and to former Executive communications in which the subject has been discussed.

PRESIDENT VAN BUREN, 1837.

It is not, however, compatible with the interests of the people to maintain in time of peace a regular force adequate to the defense of our extensive frontiers. In periods of danger and alarm we must rely principally upon a well-organized militia, and some general arrangement that will render this description of force more efficient has long been a subject of anxious solicitude.

It was recommended to the First Congress by General Washington, and has since been frequently brought to your notice, and recently its importance strongly urged by my immediate predecessor. The provision in the Constitution that renders it necessary to adopt a uniform system of organization for the militia throughout the United States presents an insurmountable obstacle to an effective arrangement by the classification heretofore proposed, and I invite your attention to the plan which will be submitted by the Secretary of War for the organization of volunteer corps and the instruction of the militia officers as more simple and practicable, if not equally advantageous, as a general arrangement of the whole militia of the United States.

PRESIDENT VAN BUREN, 1838.

I would again call your attention to the subjects connected with and essential to the military defenses of the country, which were submitted to you at the last session, but which were not acted upon, as is supposed, for want of time. The most important of them is the organization of the militia on the maritime and inland frontiers. This measure is deemed important, as it is believed that it will furnish an effective volunteer force in aid of the Regular Army, and may form the basis for a general system of organization for the entire militia of the United States.

PRESIDENT VAN BUREN, 1839.

The present condition of the defenses of our principal seaports and navy-yards, as represented by the accompanying report of the Secretary of War, calls for the early and serious attention of Congress, and, as connecting itself intimately with this subject, I can not recommend too strongly to your consideration the plan submitted by that officer for the organization of the militia of the United States.

PRESIDENT TYLER, 1843.

In all cases of emergency the reliance of the country is properly placed in the militia on a uniform basis is a subject of vital importance to the future safety of Congress whether a new and more perfect organization might not be introduced, looking mainly to the volunteer companies of the Union for the present, and of easy application to the great body of the militia in time of war.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN, 1861.

The recommendation of the Secretary (of War) for the organization of the militia on a uniform basis is a subject of vital importance to the future safety of the country, and is commended to the serious attention of Congress.

PRESIDENT HAYES, 1880.

Attention is asked to the necessity of providing by legislation for organizing, arming, and disciplining the active militia of the country, and liberal appropriations are recommended in this behalf.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR, 1882 AND 1883.

I invite the attention of Congress to the propriety of making more adequate provision for arming and equipping the militia.

From the reports of these (United States Army) officers I am induced to believe that the encouragement of the State militia organizations by the National Government would be followed by very gratifying results and would afford it in sudden emergencies, the aid of a large body of volunteers educated in the performance of military duties.

PRESIDENT HARRISON, 1890.

The encouragement that has been extended to the militia of the States should be continued and enlarged. These military organizations constitute in a large sense the Army of the United States, while about five-sixths of the annual cost of their maintenance is defrayed by the States.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND, 1896.

The appropriations for its (organized militia) support by the several States approximate $2,800,000 annually, and $400,000 is contributed by the General Government. Investigation shows these troops to be usually well drilled and inspired with much military interest, but in many instances they are so deficient in proper arms and equipment that a sudden call to active duty would find them inadequately prepared for field service. I therefore recommend that prompt measures be taken to remedy this condition, and that every encouragement be given to this deserving body of unpaid voluntary citizen soldiers, upon whose assistance we must largely rely in time of trouble.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, 1901.

Our militia law is obsolete and worthless. The organization and armament of the national guard of the several States . . . should be made identical with those provided for the regular forces. The obligations and duties of the guard in time of war should be carefully defined. . . . It is utterly impossible in the excitement and haste of impending war to do this satisfactorily if the arrangements have not been made long beforehand.

. . . the State troops, being already armed and equipped, would be ready for immediate service. This was based on the supposition that the arms and equipments were in good condition, an expectation not generally realized during the war. It is probable that the troops would have been ready for service as quickly by being equipped anew.

As these troops (volunteer, first call) were mainly from the national guards of the different States, it was understood that they were well equipped, . . . which supposition was not realized.

Your committee has endeavored to provide a plan as simple and practical as possible to place the militia of the country upon an adequate and satisfactory footing, so that in time of danger it would be immediately available for national defense. The committee believes that that end can be accomplished without changing, or attempting to change, the long-established relations between the General Government and the States, and with that end in view that such legislation as is recommended should be in substantial conformity to the following conditions:

1. The obsolete and inoperative sections of the general militia law should be repealed.
2. Those portions of the original statute which continue to have operative force should be brought into conformity with existing military conditions.
3. The organization and discipline of the militia should, for the sake of uniformity of instruction, conform to that prevailing in the Army.
4. The cooperation of the Federal Government should be so regulated as to make it reasonably certain that its expenditures for the maintenance and armament of the militia should hereafter be conditioned or made to depend upon such return, in the way of improved organization and increased efficiency, as will be calculated to justify its liberality in the matter of appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill taken from the Speaker's table and passed?

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the Chair ruled that the yeas and nays have been ordered?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order that that is dilatory. There is a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] raised the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absentees; those in favor of the bill will, as their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "nay," those present and not voting will answer "present;" and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 126, nays 79, answered "present" 19, not voting 163, as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 26, 1908.

Prayer by Rev. ULYSSES G. B. PIERCE, of the city of Washington.

THE JOURNAL—PROPOSED LEGISLATION.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. FULTON (at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.). I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, the importance of reading the Journal was disclosed yesterday when an error was found in the number of the section of the Revised Statutes proposed to be amended. I think it is very evident the reading of the Journal should be continued at present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the Secretary will resume the reading of the Journal.

The Secretary resumed and (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) concluded the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. For three days the Journal has been read in full. Under the rules of the Senate it is the right of any Senator to demand that. Some three hours have thus been consumed.

Twice the Senate has had before it a measure of what may be called vast importance. Twice I have asked unanimous consent that that measure should be taken up and be made the unfinished business for the following day. It was the subject we were considering when we adjourned yesterday. I refer to the Government employees' compensation bill.

Yesterday, after the reading of the Journal and after the consideration of various reports, I waived the bill of which I am in charge, the bill concerning Territories, in order that the bill for the compensation of Government employees for injuries might be considered, and it was considered until a quarter after 4 o'clock. Apparently there remains time enough for this bill to be passed in its present form if it shall be the desire of the Senate to pass it. I earnestly trust that this may be done.

I have not yet offered any substitute or any amendment. I have given notice that possibly I should offer a substitute, a substitute, I will say, which is the legislation demanded by the Government employees of this country, and by the laboring men affiliating with them.

No person can state whether if such a substitute should be offered it would take any time or not. It might or it might not. Even if it caused discussion the mover of the substitute could end that instantly by withdrawing the substitute. But if it is possible to pass the bill in any form, I am not willing that even a moment of time shall be consumed by that substitute, although it has not been offered, and has not even been read to the Senate. I am not willing that those who really are against the bill in its present form should hide behind a pretended fear of this substitute consuming time.

I wish to say now, so that the Senate may have that fact in mind very clearly, in considering whether they will take up this very necessary legislation and pass it in any form whatever, that I shall not offer that substitute. So any time taken hereafter can not be on the pretense that Senators do not want to go on record on the substitute. No time has been taken on that account thus far; but it has been said by some that the time Senators honestly spent in debating this bill was on that account, and that statement I now remove any excuse for.

Now, Mr. President, this is all I have to say, except that in this connection—

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are other Senators who are quite as friendly to this proposed legislation as the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. GALLINGER. But some of us who are friendly to the legislation propose to perfect the bill which was under consideration yesterday, if it can be done. I have suggestions in the line of amendment to make to the Senator in charge of the bill, if it shall come up again, which I think are very important. I do not think that because another body has passed a bill, therefore we should pass it without giving it further consideration and putting it in such a shape as will commend itself to this body.

I will of course cooperate with the Senator from Indiana in securing consideration for that bill and its passage, if it can be brought about, but I will not consent to having it passed in its present form in some respects, if the amendments I shall offer will appeal to a majority of the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is not necessary for me to pay so veteran a Senator as the Senator from New Hampshire the compliment of saying that I think his remarks are entirely appropriate. It is the right of a Senator, who thinks it is his duty—

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Pardon me—who thinks it is his duty as a Senator to offer any amendment or take any action he sees fit. What I am trying to do now is, as far as in me lies, to remove every possible objection that anyone may have to considering the bill immediately and passing it in any form at all. What I am doing now is to utterly take away any excuse for not proceeding with the bill. I do not object to other Senators offering any amendments they please—I have no right to do so. But I want some bill passed.

In this connection, I send to the desk and ask that it may be read for the information of the Senate, the following resolution, which otherwise I would present during the morning business, but it is more appropriate here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the approval of the Journal.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. While I am on my feet I wish to have this resolution read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No business is in order until the Journal has been approved.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am discussing the approval of the Journal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the resolution relate to the Journal?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It relates to the remarks that I am making, and I can control my remarks. I merely wish to have this statement read to the Senate in order to complete what I was saying.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the resolution being read?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I will read it myself.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair addresses the question to the Senate. Is there objection? If there is no objection, the Secretary will read the resolution.

Mr. KEAN. Has the Journal been approved?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am discussing the approval of the Journal.

Mr. KEAN. Then is it in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not in order if objection is made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order if there is no objection. If there is no objection, the Secretary will read the resolution as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION,
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., May 25, 1908.

HON. ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: At a regular meeting of the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia the following resolution was unanimously adopted.

Respectfully,

SAM DE NEDRY,
Secretary of the Central Labor Union.

Whereas there is pending before the Senate a bill granting compensation to civilian employees of the United States Government for injuries received in the course of their duty, and the principle of the same having been indorsed by the President of the United States and organized labor: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate be requested by this Central Labor Union to pass such legislation as will compensate said employees; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the Hon. ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE by a committee to be appointed by this body, with the request that the same be presented to the Senate to-morrow, May 26, 1908.

(Submitted by Edward L. Tucker.)

Attest:

SAM DE NEDRY,
Secretary of the Central Labor Union.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, Mr. President, I think that is sufficient.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to say a word.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I rise to morning business.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say a word regarding the question of the approval of the Journal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NELSON. I rise to morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Morning business is not in order. The question is, Shall the Journal be approved?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say a word on that subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the approval of the Journal.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have been urging for some time a measure of great importance, regarding the appointment of a commission for the development and improvement of the waterways of the country. I do not believe that this bill has the support of the majority of the Senate. I have been seeking an opportunity to bring it before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I call for the regular order. The Senator from Nevada is not discussing the question before the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say—

Mr. TELLER. No other business is in order except the approval of the Journal. The question is whether the Journal shall be approved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado is entirely correct.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say one word regarding the question of reading the Journal. It has not been the custom of the Senate to require the reading of the Journal. On the contrary, its reading is generally dispensed with. It seems to me that that custom could be adhered to now with great propriety when most important public business is pressing upon the Senate. I suggest that in the future sessions of the Senate during the closing days the consideration of important measures, such as the one I have referred to, shall not be blocked by these obstructive methods of resorting to the rules of the Senate as a means of putting the Senate, so far as legislation is concerned, in a strait-jacket.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey will state his question of order.

Mr. KEAN. Has the Journal been approved?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not. The question is on the approval of the Journal.

Mr. KEAN. I am sorry the Senator from Nevada has delayed the approval of the Journal so long.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Journal is approved.

REFERENCE OF CLAIMS TO COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. FULTON, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Resolved, That the bills for the relief of the heirs of Leon Frank, deceased (S. 4357), the estate of Rev. Robert Molloy, deceased (S. 7186), and Mary Friscilla Shipman and the heirs at law of John J. Shipman, deceased (S. 7225), now pending in the Senate, together with all accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

CHARLES J. SMITH.

Mr. du PONT. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6586) to correct the military record of Charles J. Smith, to report it with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 694) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. It will take only a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to review the military record of Charles J. Smith, late of Company F, Third Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Cavalry, and grant him an honorable discharge.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator if this is a charge of desertion?

Mr. du PONT. No; it is not a charge of desertion. It is a peculiar case, a case of mistaken identity. The beneficiary claims to have been discharged, and his discharge was burned up when he was taken prisoner. There was another Charles Smith in the same regiment, and on the rolls of the War Department he appears to have been regularly discharged. This man can not get a discharge, as the records are somewhat imperfect; but there is an affidavit from an officer of the regiment stating that there were two soldiers named Charles Smith, and he personally knew this man, and he was there. So it appears that it is nothing more than an act of justice to correct the record.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. du PONT. There is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report, at the request of the Senator from Texas.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this is a long report. If it is, I shall object.

Mr. du PONT. It is not long. I will say to the Senator from Oregon it is a very short report. The gist of the whole matter is the affidavit of the captain, which is at the end of the report. If that could be read, it may answer every purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the affidavit be read.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

Mr. du PONT. I hope the Senator from Texas will allow the affidavit to be read.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think we are entitled to have the report read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue with the reading of the report.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, this is a mixed case of desertion and mistaken identity. I think it is very well to have the report read, so that not only Senators may understand it, but that the Record may show upon what basis the Senate passes such a bill.

Mr. du PONT. I will state, if the Senator from Texas will allow me, that it is not a case of desertion, but it is a case where there is an absence of any official record. The records only show that he joined the regiment, and nothing more is shown about him.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am glad to be corrected in that particular, but apparently it is a case of mistaken identity.

Mr. du PONT. Yes; a case of mistaken identity.

Mr. CULBERSON. We ought to have the record. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. du PONT. It is not very long.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the report.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report. The entire report is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, which has had under consideration the bill (S. 6586) to correct the military record of Charles J. Smith, reports the same back to the Senate favorably, and recommends that it be passed, amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

"That Charles J. Smith shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private of Company F, Third Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Cavalry, as of date August 1, 1865; and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to said Charles J. Smith an honorable discharge as of that date: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue or become payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Your committee's favorable action is based upon the facts as set forth in the affidavits of this soldier, corroborated by the affidavit of his commanding officer, who testifies that he recalls clearly that the soldier, after two weeks in the rear of the Army with a lot of prisoners, "rejoined his command, then proceeding toward Richmond, and served from thence on until the regiment was mustered out and discharged in the vicinity of Washington, D. C., on August 1, 1865."

The official report of the War Department upon this case is as follows:

Case of Charles J. Smith, alleged late of Company F, Third New Jersey Cavalry Volunteers.

It is shown by the official records that one Charles J. Smith was enrolled December 31, 1863, and was duly mustered into service as a private in Company F, Third New Jersey Cavalry Volunteers; that he was appointed corporal in the company, and that he was mustered out of service as such July 15, 1865.

Inasmuch as the official records show that the soldier mentioned above was honorably discharged the service, it seems probable that the proposed measure relates to some other man of that name, and in this connection it is deemed proper to state that one Charles J. Smith, of Dover, Del., has made application to this Department for a discharge certificate, alleging at first that he was a member of Company D or Company E, Third New Jersey Cavalry, and afterwards declaring that he was a private in Company F, Third New Jersey Cavalry, and that he had previously rendered service in the One hundred and seventy-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers.

The official records show that one Charles J. Smith, who, it is stated on the records, previously served in Company B, One hundred and ninety-seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, was 19 years of age at the date of his enlistment, 5 feet 3 inches high, born in Philadelphia, by occupation a farmer, and of dark complexion, eyes, and hair, was enrolled December 30, 1864, at Camden, N. J., and was mustered in on the same day as a private for service in the Third New Jersey Cavalry Volunteers; that he was received at the New Jersey draft rendezvous December 31, 1864, and forwarded to the Third New Jersey Cavalry January 6, 1865, and that he was received at Remount Camp, Pleasant Valley, Md., January 6, 1865, where he appears to have been stationed until January 19, 1865, when ordered to join the regiment. However, nothing has been found of record in this Department to show that this man ever joined the Third New Jersey Cavalry Volunteers, or that he was ever assigned to Company F or to any other company of that regiment, nor do the records afford any information concerning his whereabouts or status after January 19, 1865, or to show that he was ever discharged the service as a member of the Third New Jersey Cavalry Volunteers.

Applying to this Department for a certificate of honorable service, Charles J. Smith, a resident of Dover, Del., testified in 1891, as follows:

"That he is the identical Charles J. Smith who was a private in Company D or E, he thinks, in the Third Regiment of New Jersey Cavalry, and served as follows:

"The day after enlistment I was sent with other recruits by railroad to Trenton, N. J. I was then sent with the other recruits to the front in the Shenandoah Valley—was in the battles of Waynesboro, Fort Jackson, and in several skirmishes; finally arrived at Richmond, Va., and was there when the war closed; that he was discharged on or about the — day of —, 1865, either at Richmond or Winchester, in the State of Virginia; that his discharge certificate was lost (or destroyed) 'without privity or procurement' of the applicant about three weeks after he was discharged, during 1865, at Darby, in the State of Pennsylvania, under the following circumstances:

"That one evening about three weeks after I returned home I visited an ice-cream saloon and had my discharge on my person. The next morning I found that it was lost, and has never, to my knowledge, been found."

Smith again testified on June 14, 1906, declaring as follows:

"That he was a private in Company F, Third Regiment of New Jersey Volunteer Cavalry; that he was enlisted in said company and regiment on or about the 30th day of December, A. D. 1864, in the county of Camden and State of New Jersey, and served as follows:

"He served with his command up to the time of the close of the war, and took part in the battle of Waynesboro, Va., in March, 1865, and was mustered out in the neighborhood of Washington some time in August, 1865; he can not now remember the exact time or place of his muster out; that some of the officers and soldiers of the company were as follows, namely:

Name.	Last address.
Capt. Alexander A. Yard.....	Freehold, N. J.
First Lieut. Henry V. Vanness.....	Newark, N. J.
First Lieut. Michael T. Deyer.....	88 Third place, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Second Lieut. Joseph H. Holmes.....	Cape May Court House, N. J.
Q. M. Sergt. Joseph D. Brooks.....	Belleville, N. J.
Corp. Edward J. Wood.....	Newark, N. J.
Corp. John McNeill.....	Do.

"That he was discharged on or about the — day of August, 1865, near Washington, D. C.; that his discharge certificate was lost, without the privity or procurement of the applicant, within two weeks from his discharge, at Darby, in the State of Pennsylvania; he was in the possession of the said discharge at the time he arrived at Darby, which was soon after his discharge, but in some unaccountable way it was lost and he has never been able to find or discover the same, although he at or about the time used every effort to that end; that he has made diligent search for the said discharge and has been unable to recover it and has no knowledge of its present whereabouts."

Once more testifying, he declared August 27, 1906, as follows:

"That he served in the One hundred and seventy-ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry for an enlistment of one hundred days and was honorably discharged in November, 1864.

"That on December 30, 1864, he enlisted in the Third New Jersey Cavalry at Camden, N. J., and on the 31st day of December, 1864, he proceeded to Trenton, and was mustered into the service and was there transferred to a remount camp near the city of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland.

"That from thence he, together with other recruits, was taken by a Lieutenant of the said regiment, the name of whom he does not now recall, to the headquarters of the said regiment, in the valley of Virginia, he thinks, at or near Winchester.

"That he was with the said regiment and participated in the battle of Waynesboro, Va., on the 28th day of February, 1865; that after said battle he was sent to the rear with the prisoners then captured from General Early at said battle; that he remained in the rear of the army for about two weeks, when he rejoined said regiment and served with it until mustered out in the vicinity of Washington in the spring of 1865.

"That he does not know the date of said discharge for the reason that his discharge was lost soon after he returned to his old home at Darby, Pa.; he does not recall the amount of his final payment nor when he was paid, nor the paymaster who paid him, all of which, he states, was indorsed upon the said discharge so lost by him; that at the time that he was mustered in at Trenton, N. J., a large sum of money, consisting of a bounty, was paid to him, but that when he arrived at the said remount station the majority or nearly all of it was taken from him by some one in authority, with the understanding that it would be returned to him at the end of his service, but that up to this time no part of it whatever has been paid back to him."

Capt. John F. Tomlin, aged 65 years, a resident of Salem, N. J., testified August 28, 1906, as follows:

"That while a first lieutenant he was in command of Third New Jersey Cavalry. That on or about the last day of December, 1864, or early in January, 1865, he left the headquarters of the said regiment, which was at or near Winchester, Va., and proceeded to Remount Camp, near Harpers Ferry, W. Va., a remount station in the State of Maryland, where there was delivered to him a number of recruits, among whom was one Charles J. Smith, who enlisted in the said regiment on the 30th day of December, 1864, at Camden, N. J., and from there forwarded to the said remount station.

"That he delivered the said Charles J. Smith to the said regiment on or about the 19th day of January, 1865; that the said Charles J. Smith was assigned to Troop F of the said regiment and fought the fight at Waynesboro, Va., on the 28th of February, 1865; that after said fight the said Charles J. Smith went back from the front with a lot of prisoners, in number about 1,500, captured at said fight from the command of General Early.

"That in the course of two weeks the said Charles J. Smith rejoined his command and was present with the said command from that time until its mustering out at or near the city of Washington, D. C.

"That the said Charles J. Smith was the third of the said name, there being a Charles Smith and a Charles J. Smith, both of whom had enlisted in said regiment at some time prior to the enlistment of the said Charles J. Smith No. 3, who enlisted on December 30, 1864.

"That he has not seen the said Charles J. Smith for many years since his said discharge, until the 17th day of August last passed, when he met the said Charles J. Smith in the city of Camden and State of New Jersey, and upon the said meeting he recalls clearly and without question the fact that he was the same recruit, Charles J. Smith, whom he took from the said remount station in the State of Maryland and delivered to the said Third New Jersey Cavalry at or near Winchester, in the State of Virginia, on or about the said 19th day of January, 1865, and that he recalls clearly the fact that the said Charles J. Smith went back with the said prisoners and afterwards, within about two weeks, rejoined his command, then proceeding toward Richmond, and served from thence on until the regiment was mustered out and discharged in the vicinity of Washington, D. C., on August 1, 1865."

It is shown by the records that Company F, Third New Jersey Infantry Volunteers, was mustered out of service August 1, 1865, at Washington, D. C., but, as previously stated, nothing whatever has been found of record to show that the Charles J. Smith who was enrolled December 30, 1864, ever joined that company or any other company of the regiment, and, as nothing has been found of record to show that he was ever discharged from service as a member of the organization in question, the Department has been constrained to deny the application for a certificate of honorable service, on the ground that the official records do not show that he served in the regiment mentioned or was discharged as a member thereof.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
The Adjutant-General.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

The Adjutant-General's Office, April 16, 1908.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. du PONT. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the affidavit of Capt. John F. Tomlin, a former officer of the regiment, which has been read.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I am not sure that I caught the facts distinctly from the reading of the report, but it seems that the beneficiary of the bill makes an affidavit that he enlisted in Company E or F of a certain regiment, and that he was discharged either at Richmond or at Winchester; and it occurred to me that a man asking a favor of the Government after more than forty years ought to be able to fix more definitely than he does—if I am right in this conjecture—the company that he was in and the point at which he was discharged.

Mr. du PONT. Mr. President, in reply to that I should like to state that a great many years have elapsed and of course the applicant has not an absolutely clear recollection, but he says in his affidavit that he was discharged at or near Washington. I presume he was discharged in one of the camps in the immediate vicinity of this city. But the affidavit of this disinterested party, an ex-officer of the regiment, who corroborates his statement in every respect, seems to me to be conclusive, and it shows there were three men of the same name.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware if the beneficiary of this bill is clear as to what company he was in?

Mr. du PONT. I did not hear the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. It occurred to me from the reading of the papers and the report that this beneficiary did not know in what company he served during the war—whether in Company E or Company F. I ask the Senator from Delaware if my recollection of the reading is correct?

Mr. du PONT. Yes; that is true; but the affidavit of this officer—an entirely disinterested person—states that the man was in Company F; that there were two men of the same name; in fact, three of the same name, but two named Charles J. Smith, both in Company F. I presume, after the lapse of so many years, he may not have been very clear in his recollection. I am not aware of all the circumstances, but I submit that the statements of real importance as to his service and his discharge have been corroborated by an affidavit of an absolutely disinterested party. Therefore it seems to me that his contention is fairly supported and that he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. du PONT. With pleasure.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Did I understand from the reading of the report that General Ainsworth stated that there was nothing of record in the Department to show that this man was in either of those companies?

Mr. du PONT. I think the record shows that he was enlisted and was assigned to a regiment; but there is nothing of record to show that he ever joined it or that he was ever discharged from it. That is Colonel Ainsworth's statement.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. There is nothing in the record to show that he ever was a member of either company?

Mr. du PONT. There is nothing beyond his joining, his enlistment, his being enrolled, and being mustered in. But I will state that in time of war such records are very often loosely kept. It seems to me that the affidavit of this disinterested party, corroborating the affidavit of the applicant, clearly entitles him to favorable consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. du PONT. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from Delaware if the object of this bill is not to give this party a pensionable status?

Mr. du PONT. I can hardly answer as to that. The bill is to give him an honorable discharge. He claims to have served and to have received an honorable discharge, which was lost, and therefore he is entitled to another discharge. I do not know what ulterior designs he may have or how the matter would be considered by the Pension Department. Whether it would give him a claim for a pension or not I am unable to say.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield further to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. du PONT. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. In view of the fact that this soldier is unable to state under oath what company he belonged to, and the further fact that the records do not show that he was a member of any company or any regiment—

Mr. du PONT. If the Senator from Texas will allow me, I think the records will show that he was enlisted and enrolled in the regiment, but they simply do not show that he ever joined it or was ever discharged from it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not catch what the Senator says in that respect.

Mr. du PONT. The records show that he was duly mustered into the regiment, but they do not show that he ever served with it or was ever discharged or mustered out from it.

Mr. CULBERSON. He is still a member of that regiment, so far as the record shows, as suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN].

Mr. du PONT. So far as the records show, that is his status exactly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the letter of General Ainsworth accompanying the report be again read. I do not ask for the reading of the entire report, but only for the letter of General Ainsworth, the Adjutant-General.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will reread the letter, at the request of the Senator from Texas.

The Secretary read as follows:

Case of Charles J. Smith, alleged late of Company F, Third New Jersey Cavalry Volunteers.

It is shown by the official record that one Charles J. Smith was enrolled December 31, 1863, and was duly mustered into the service as a private of Company F, Third Regiment—

Mr. FULTON. As this matter has taken up so much time, I object to the further consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the further consideration of the bill. It will go to the Calendar.

S. R. 23. Joint resolution to provide for the remission of a portion of the Chinese indemnity.

CLAIMS OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. TELLER. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have stated and audited in the office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, the salary accounts of former postmasters who served at post-offices in the various States and Territories of the United States in terms between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, and whose accounts have not been readjusted and certified for payment by the Postmaster-General under the act of March 3, 1883, such salary accounts to be stated upon the registered returns of each postmaster for each term of service specified, and by the method of reviewing and readjusting approved and ratified by the act of August 4, 1886, and to enable the Secretary of the Treasury the better to comply with this resolution, the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to turn over to the Auditor for the Post-Office Department all the data now in his hands pertaining to each and every claim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DICK. I offer what I send to the desk as a substitute for the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the resolution. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "Resolved" and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have stated and audited in the Sixth Auditor's office the salary accounts of former postmasters who served at post-offices in the various States and Territories of the United States in terms between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, and who applied to the Postmaster-General prior to January 1, 1887, for payment of increased salary under the act of March 3, 1883, such salary accounts to be stated upon the registered returns of each postmaster for each term of service specified, and by the method and rule laid down by the Postmaster-General for the statement and payment of salary accounts of former postmasters under the act of March 3, 1883, in his public order of February 18, 1884, directing payment of salaries by commissions and box rents, less the salaries paid at time of service; and to enable the Secretary of the Treasury the better to comply with this resolution the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to turn over to the Sixth Auditor all the data now in his hands pertaining to each and every such claim, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to report to the Senate as many such stated salary accounts of former postmasters, by States, as soon as they can be made ready.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, has that resolution been considered by a committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been reported by a committee.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think it had better go over for to-day, anyway, and then we can consider about the committee.

Mr. DICK. I hope the Senator will not insist upon his objection. This resolution has been on the table of the Senate since the 21st day of last December, and ample opportunity has been afforded to consider it. Resolutions of like character concerning the various States have been repeatedly offered, and this resolution covering all of the States is an effort to secure from the Department an accounting due certain postmasters.

Mr. FULTON obtained the floor.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Does not this resolution relate to what are known as the Spaulding claims?

Mr. DICK. I do not know what they are called, except—

Mr. NELSON. Claims that have been in the air for years for back pay for postmasters.

Mr. DICK. They provide back pay for postmasters; yes, sir. The resolution proposes an accounting of the salaries, or, rather, commissions due postmasters, based on the sale of postage stamps during a certain period of time, which have always been denied to these public servants.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, as I desire to submit to the Senate certain observations, it occurs to me that I may as well speak to this resolution as to any other.

It is my desire and my purpose to refer to some of the arguments advanced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] on Friday last, in the first instance, followed by the very interesting speech he delivered last Saturday, and dwell upon more largely and extensively at that time. But before taking that up I wish to refer to a question that came up yesterday afternoon during the consideration of the bill to compensate Government employees for injuries.

That measure proposed to refer to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor all claims for injuries to certain employees of the Government arising during the course of their employment. Much to my surprise, it was objected by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], both great lawyers, that the measure would be unconstitutional, owing to the fact that it proposes to confer on an administrative officer judicial power. I took the view, and so expressed it at that time, that judicial power comprehends only such matters as may properly become the subject of a suit or action before a judicial tribunal, and that judicial power involves and includes the power to hear and determine the same; it contemplates adversary parties engaged in a controversy concerning their legal rights, and as there are no legal rights here dealt with by the measure in question, no such rights to be litigated or considered, it appeared to me that the question of judicial power was not involved. It is simply a case of the Government voluntarily submitting itself to liability for claims which it otherwise would not be liable for, conditioned that the party shall satisfy a given official of a given state of facts.

In my judgment, and I so contended, no question of judicial power could enter into it, although it presented a judicial question, perhaps, or in some instances might present one. Yet there could be no question of judicial power, because there was no controversy involving a legal right.

Now, I was so surprised at the position taken by these distinguished lawyers that I began to lose a little confidence in my own judgment in the matter. Therefore I took occasion last evening to run over briefly the authorities, or at least some authorities, bearing on the question, and I wish at this time, in order that they may be in the RECORD when that measure shall again come up for the consideration of the Senate, to call attention to a few decisions of the Supreme Court.

The first one to which I call attention is in 7 Wallace—Nichols v. United States—and I read from page 126, where the court said:

The immunity of the United States from suit is one of the main elements to be considered in determining the merits of this controversy. Every government has an inherent right to protect itself against suits, and if, in the liberality of legislation, they are permitted, it is only on such terms and conditions as are prescribed by statute. The principle is fundamental, applies to every sovereign power, and but for the protection which it affords the government would be unable to perform the various duties for which it was created. It would be impossible for it to collect revenues for its support, without infinite embarrassments and delays, if it was subject to civil processes the same as a private person. The written protest, signed by the party, with the definite grounds of objection, were conditions precedent to the right to sue, and if omitted, all right of action was gone. These conditions were necessary for the protection of the Government, as they informed the officers charged with the collection of the revenue from imports of the merchant's reasons for claiming exemption and enabled the Treasury Department to judge of their soundness and to decide on the risk of taking the duties in the face of the objections. There was no hardship in the case, because the law was notice equally to the collector and importer and was a rule to guide their conduct, in case differences should arise in relation to the laws for the imposition of duties. The allowing a suit at all was an act of beneficence on the part of the Government.

And now I call the attention of the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Ohio particularly to the clause I am about to read:

As it had confided to the Secretary of the Treasury the power of deciding in the first instance on the amount of duties demandable on any specific importation, so it could have made him the final arbiter in all disputes concerning the same.

Here is a clear holding that if the Government saw fit it could have delegated or confided to the Secretary of the Treasury final and exclusive power to determine the question of its liability to the claimants and the amount of duties demandable, and it would have been binding on the parties.

But I have a case which I find in 13 Howard, 374.

Mr. McLaurin. What is the style of the case?

Mr. FULTON. The United States v. Ferreira, 13 Howard. It was a case growing out of claims arising under the treaty of 1819, the treaty made with Spain with respect to the acquisition of Florida. By the terms of the treaty this Government stipulated to pay to the residents of the ceded territory all damages sustained by them by the operations of the Army. There was a treaty obligation, and there was a liability that this Government by treaty had assumed. Congress referred for adjustment all claims arising under the treaty to a judge of the district court of Florida. This party, Ferreira, presented his claim.

The judge adjudicated the matter, and an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court held that the reference was not to the judge as a court, but merely as a commissioner, and acting as such he did not exercise judicial power. It was a mere reference for findings of fact which, while it involved the exercise of judicial judgment, did not involve the exercise of judicial power, because judicial power is only exercised when a tribunal is charged with determining legal controversies—hearing and determining and proceeding to final judgment.

The question was apparently directly raised as to whether or not it involved the exercise of judicial power, and answering, the court said:

It is too evident for argument on the subject that such a tribunal is not a judicial one and that the act of Congress did not intend to make it one. The authority conferred on the respective judges was nothing more than that of a commissioner to adjust certain claims against the United States, and the office of judges and their respective jurisdictions are referred to in the law merely as a designation of the persons to whom the authority is confided and the territorial limits to which it extends. The decision is not the judgment of a court of justice. It is the award of a commissioner. The act of 1834 calls it an award. And an appeal to this court from such a decision by such an authority from the judgment of a court of record would be an anomaly in the history of jurisprudence. An appeal might as well have been taken from the awards of the board of commissioners under the Mexican treaty, which were recently sitting in this city.

Nor can we see any ground for objection to the power of revision and control given to the Secretary of the Treasury. When the United States consent to submit the adjustment of claims against them to any tribunal they have a right to prescribe the conditions on which they will pay. And they had a right, therefore, to make the approval of the award by the Secretary of the Treasury one of the conditions upon which they would agree to be liable. No claim, therefore, is due from the United States until it is sanctioned by him, and his decision against the claimant for the whole or a part of the claim as allowed by the judge is final and conclusive. It can not afterwards be disturbed by an appeal to this or any other court or in any other way without the authority of an act of Congress.

Furthermore—

The powers—

And to this I particularly invite the attention of Senators—

The powers conferred by these acts of Congress upon the judge, as well as the secretary, are, it is true, judicial in their nature, for judgment and discretion must be exercised by both of them. But it is nothing more than the power ordinarily given by law to a commissioner appointed to adjust claims to lands or money under a treaty, or special powers to inquire into or decide any other particular class of controversies in which the public or individuals may be concerned. A power of this description may constitutionally be conferred on a secretary as well as on a commissioner, but is not judicial in either case, in the sense in which judicial power is granted by the Constitution to the courts of the United States.

As the court said, that involved judicial inquiry, because the commissioner had to determine as to what the facts were and what the ultimate conclusion to be derived therefrom was. It, indeed, called for the exercise of every faculty that a court is called upon to exercise, and yet it was a mere voluntary submission by the Government for the finding of a fact. It was not a controversy involving a legal right of any party. There were no legal rights involved. If that did not involve the exercise of judicial power, I would be glad to have some Senator tell me how the exercise by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor of the power to determine whether or not these claims that we refer to him are good claims within the rules we lay down involves the exercise of judicial power.

I deem the bill a most important one, and I trust it will be enacted speedily into law, for I have long been of the opinion that employees of the Government who are engaged in hazardous employment should have provision made for compensating them for injuries received in the course of such employment without their fault.

POWERS OF CONGRESS IN THE REGULATION OF INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

I now desire to take up and consider the question as to whether the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce is the same in scope and extent as is its power to regulate foreign commerce.

On Friday last, in the course of a running debate on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] to the joint resolution of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], commonly known as the "commodity resolution," we drifted into a discussion touching the powers of Congress under the commerce clause of the Constitution, whereupon the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] advanced his well-known contention that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce is equal in all respects to its power to regulate foreign commerce, and assuming that we may prohibit foreign commerce entirely, he argued that it follows equally that we prohibit interstate commerce. In the course of the discussion I interrupted the Senator from Ohio during his remarks, and said:

I wish to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that while it is true that the court has in a few instances said, speaking of the commerce clause, that the power of Congress under that clause is just the same in the regulation of interstate as foreign commerce, yet in the nature of things, by virtue of the sovereignty of the Government, it has, without the commerce clause, the power to exclude entirely foreign commerce from coming to this country.

There are some powers which this Government exercises in dealing with foreign countries that it does not derive from the commerce clause of the Constitution, even in the regulation of commerce. When it is said simply that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce under the commerce clause is just the same as its power to regulate foreign commerce, that confines the matter to the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Later on the following colloquy occurred between the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEWART in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. In justice to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], who is absent, having myself sat here during the discussion, I think the attention of the Senator from Oregon ought to be called to the fact that the Senator from Indiana did not put forward that view, as the Senator has stated, as his well-known view, but simply stated that that was the deduction which was to be drawn from the decisions of the court, and let the court take the full responsibility for it. I think in justice to him in his absence that statement ought to be made.

Mr. FULTON. I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Minnesota shall have inserted in the Record what is his understanding of the position of the Senator from Indiana, but I am unable to differentiate between a man's convictions after reading the decisions and what the reading of the decisions has led him to believe. He may be able to do it, but I am unable to do so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

Mr. FULTON. In just a second. The Senator from Indiana, it is true, said this was not his contention but the contention of the Supreme Court, but the question is whether the Senator from Indiana properly interprets the Supreme Court. Now I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator if he desires to proceed without interruptions.

Mr. FULTON. I am very glad to have interruptions. They do not interfere with the course of my remarks at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It may be that the Senator will later in his remarks treat of the point I am going to ask him about, and if so I will not ask him to answer it now.

I should like to ask whether the Senator claims that under the sovereign power of the Government, to which he has alluded, the Government of the United States has any other power than what is granted it by the States?

Mr. FULTON. It is my purpose later on to more fully discuss that proposition, but I will answer the Senator now frankly—no. And yet that does not completely express my views, because I contend that, especially in her relations to foreign nations, this Government exercises and may properly exercise certain sovereign powers, powers that every independent nation must necessarily have for the protection of its life and the rights, liberties, and interests of its people, and while you can not, perhaps, in every instance point to a specific clause in the Constitution from which the power is derivable, yet, taking the Constitution as a whole, having in mind that it creates a nation endowed with all the necessary attributes of sovereignty, I think such powers are properly inferable.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree with the Senator entirely that if there had been no Constitution and the States had come together and acted as a nation, under international law this Government would have had every sovereign power that every other sovereign government has. My question was rather for information than to make an assertion. It was to find out whether, when the States delegated these powers to the National Government, the Constitution acted as a limitation upon the power that this Government as a sovereign nation would otherwise have had.

Mr. FULTON. I expect, as I have stated, to discuss that question a little more fully later on.

I wish it to be distinctly understood, however, that I am discussing particularly and have reference to powers this Government may exercise when dealing with foreign governments. It has been truly said that in "their relation to foreign countries and their subjects or citizens" the "United States are one nation invested with powers which belong to independent nations." Such is the language of the court in the Chinese-exclusion cases, from which I shall shortly more fully quote. While it is true that in its relation to its own people and the several States this nation can exercise only such powers as are delegated to it by the Constitution or necessarily implied from some power delegated, and while this, in a sense, is true in all its relations, yet it is not strictly so in its relation to foreign nations and their subjects, for in dealing with them, as I shall presently undertake to show, every power that is necessary to her sovereignty and independence as a nation and to the maintenance of her position as such among the nations of the world may be exercised by this Government, and the power, if not specifically delegated by the Constitution, is readily deducible as being implied by the very fact that by and through the Constitution the people intended to and did create a nation.

Now, during the discussion referred to on Friday last the following colloquy occurred between the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Indiana:

Mr. TELLER. The language of the Constitution is:

"The Congress shall have power . . . to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes."

The Constitution puts that power on an equal footing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. And I think the Supreme Court has said at least a hundred times that the power was derived from the Constitution and nowhere else.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is right, so far as to basing this power on the commerce clause.

Mr. TELLER. They have repeatedly declared that Congress has no inherent power. They have repeated that over and over again—no inherent power.

I am not so certain, let me remark right here, whether the Senator from Colorado is as accurate as usual in saying that the Supreme Court has said "over and over again" or indeed at all that this Government "has no inherent powers." It has said many times, and I suppose no one denies it to-day, that it has only such powers as have been delegated to it or are inferable from or arise by implication from express grants of power; and to either a direct delegation of power or to a fair implication arising from an expressly delegated power, we must look for every power exercised by this Government. But it does not follow that you must find some specific delegation of power. It is sufficient, if taken as a whole, the Constitution justifies the inference that the Government was intended to exercise that power. A power may be implied from the Constitution taken as a whole as well as inferred from one specific provision. However, let me complete reading the remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. He continued as follows:

They have repeatedly declared that Congress has no inherent power. They have repeated that over and over again—no inherent power. I challenge the statement of the Senator from Oregon. Without that clause it had no such authority. You could hardly conceive of a government that would not have it, and this is where the framers of the Constitution provided we should have it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In addition to that I will say in answer to the Senator from Oregon that in every case involving the power of Congress over foreign commerce that has come before either the Federal courts or the Supreme Court, it has based its decision upon the commerce clause and not upon our inherent powers.

The Senator from Indiana was, in my judgment, mistaken there. I have heard him make that statement several times.

and in so stating it seems to me that he overlooks some of the most important decisions of the Supreme Court. I shall later on read from a decision in a case where the court was dealing with the power of this Government to regulate foreign commerce, and instead of basing its ruling upon the commerce clause of the Constitution it based the authority of Congress to act in the case in question upon those greater powers that flow from the Constitution as a whole, by reason of the sovereignty and the nationality of this Republic. I refer to the Chinese exclusion case, from which I will read later on.

As a matter of fact, however, in the course of this colloquy, I had not mentioned the subject of inherent power. I had not used the words "inherent power." It was the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] who brought forward that term. However, I do not object to it, nor shall I seek to excuse myself for the use of it at this time or at any other time because I contend that there are certain inherent powers possessed by this nation in its relation to foreign governments, which, though deducible, as I have said, from the Constitution as a whole, may not be traceable to any particular grant or implied by any one grant. And it is not improper to speak of such a power as being inherent.

I did not have the floor at the time the Senator from Colorado made the observation I have just quoted, and hence I did not answer.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator think it is a proper description of a power to call it inherent, if it is derived from the Constitution as a whole, as he has expressed it? It seems to me that those are two entirely different things.

Mr. FULTON. An inherent power of government I suppose may properly be defined to be a power which naturally pertains thereto, which naturally rises out of the governmental structure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is a power that the Government would have inherent in itself outside of the Constitution, as I understand the distinction, without respect to the Constitution?

Mr. FULTON. No; there is where I think the Senator is mistaken. An inherent power of this Government, as I employ the term, is one the nation possesses naturally, logically, possibly of necessity, by virtue of its sovereignty. Nevertheless, it arises out of the Constitution, as I think I shall show later on in my remarks.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not want to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. I have designed to discuss it, and later on will do so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But as the distinction lay in my mind the inherent power was the power inherent in the Government entirely independent of the Constitution, the Constitution having granted powers to the Government. I supposed those who spoke of the inherent power of the Government meant some power it had utterly irrespective of the Constitution and of the granted powers.

Mr. FULTON. But here is a consideration which the Senator, it seems to me, does not have in mind. There may be inherent powers flowing from the Constitution as an entirety, traceable, as I have said, to no particular delegation of authority, but arising out of the fact that it is a nation the people created by and through the Constitution, and hence they must have meant to clothe it with every power necessary to independent sovereignty, and in its relation to foreign governments and peoples this inference is irresistible.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator, if he will allow me.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that I should not call that inherent power at all if I was deriving it from the Constitution. I should say it was an implied power.

Mr. FULTON. I am not saying it necessarily—

Mr. TELLER. The Supreme Court has declared emphatically that there is no inherent power in so many words.

Mr. FULTON. I was saying a moment ago, before the Senator came into the Chamber, that I doubt if the court has broadly stated that there are no inherent powers, as the distinguished Senator from Colorado now alleges and has heretofore stated. The court has said that every power which the Federal Government may exercise must be one that is delegated or that is implied from a delegated power.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will read from the Kansas decision.

Mr. FULTON. In Kansas v. Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. The Supreme Court said:

All legislative power must be vested in either the State or the National Government; no legislative powers belong to a State government other than those which affect solely the internal affairs of that State; consequently all powers which are national in their scope must be found vested in the Congress of the United States. But the proposition that there are legislative powers affecting the nation as a whole which belong to, although not expressed in, the grant of powers is in direct conflict with the doctrine that this is a Government of enumerated powers. That this is such a Government clearly appears from the Constitution, independently of the amendments, for otherwise there would be an instrument granting certain specified things made operative to grant other and distinct things. (Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S., 85.)

Mr. FULTON. But I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that in no place in that decision is the word "inherent" employed. Of course the Senator may say it is implied; but the word "inherent" is not employed.

Mr. TELLER. It is not in the decision, but there are a number of decisions that declare in so many terms that there are no inherent powers. Nobody denies but that there are implied powers.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator and I do not differ, perhaps, so widely on this proposition after all. As I said a moment ago, this Government can exercise no power that it can not trace to some grant or to some inference or implication from an express grant. I do not know whether the Senator was here or not when I explained a moment ago that it is not necessary that that implication shall come from any one express power.

Mr. TELLER. No; I just came in.

Mr. FULTON. It may be that taking the powers of the Government as a whole a fair inference arises that it was intended that it should be clothed with a certain power. For instance, where will the Senator point out the specific power or delegation of power that gave this Government the right to acquire the territory of Louisiana?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FULTON. Yes; but I want just to finish the sentence—or we will go further and say the Territory of Texas or the Territory of Hawaii, because they were acquired under different proceedings and in a different manner.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon yields to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. As I recall this history of the Louisiana Purchase, no one at that time contended for one moment that it was within the power of what was then called the "United States" to make that purchase. Mr. Jefferson suggested that an amendment to the Constitution could subsequently be adopted ratifying the purchase. There was one man I think, Mr. Randolph, of Virginia, who was credited with being mildly erratic, to say the least, who was the only public man, so far as I recall, who at that time pretended that there was any power in the United States Government to make that purchase as a nation. But the people acquiesced in it, and there never was subsequently any decisive concrete declaration of any power. We simply did it and went on.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator is mistaken. The Supreme Court has held several times distinctly that we had the constitutional power to acquire Louisiana.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly; but that was long afterwards. I am speaking of a concrete expression by the people of the United States.

Mr. FULTON. There was none, and why? Because there is no specific grant for it in the Constitution, nor is there any specific grant or language from which the power may be inferred.

Mr. CLAPP. I quite agree with the Senator there.

Mr. FULTON. Yes—and that is exactly what I am contending—nobody to-day doubts but what this nation was and is in truth and in fact clothed with the power to acquire territory wherever in her judgment it may be to the interest of her people to do so. And why? Simply because we are a sovereign nation, endowed and clothed as a sovereign nation with all those powers of nationality which are usually enjoyed and exercised by other sovereign and independent nations.

Thus, in American Insurance Company v. Canter (1 Peters, 685), Mr. Justice Marshall, in 1828, said:

The Constitution confers absolutely on the Government of the Union the powers of making war and of making treaties, consequently the Government possess the power of acquiring territory, either by conquest or treaty.

And in Mormon Church v. United States, decided in 1899 (136 U. S., 1), Mr. Justice Bradley, announcing the opinion of the court, declared:

The power to make acquisition of territory by conquest, by treaty, and by cession is an incident of national sovereignty. The territory of Louisiana, when acquired from France, and the territory west of the Rocky Mountains, when acquired from Mexico, became the absolute power and domain of the United States, subject to such conditions as the Government in its diplomatic negotiations had seen fit to accept relating to the rights of the people then inhabiting these territories.

Now, observe that the court said that the power "to make acquisition of territory by conquest, by treaty, and by cession is an incident of national sovereignty." National sovereignty, as I have said, is vested in the Federal Government by the Constitution, but it is the Constitution as a whole, the combination of every granted power therein contained which goes to make up that national sovereignty, and out of that national sovereignty comes the right and the power to acquire territory.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield further to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FULTON. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. Fearing that my interruption might be misunderstood, I will state that I certainly agree with the Senator. The purpose of my suggestion was rather to show that the idea was not originally the idea of this people, but grew with the growth of the wish and the purpose and the destiny of the American people, and is to-day a part and parcel of the law of this country.

Mr. FULTON. Yes; on second consideration, it seems quite evident that Mr. Jefferson himself must have become satisfied that we did constitutionally possess the power, because while in the first instance he recommended an amendment to the Constitution that would clearly give the power and ratify the purchase, yet later on he abandoned that contention and seemed perfectly satisfied that our title was perfect.

I did not, as I was saying—

Mr. TELLER. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but I want to call his attention—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I want to call his attention to the Constitution. This is the authority that is conferred upon Congress:

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof.

Now, our power as a legislature is confined absolutely to that.

Mr. FULTON. I did not hear the Senator, as his voice was a little low.

Mr. TELLER (reading):

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers—

So we are limited to that. You must find your powers somewhere before you can legislate—and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof.

Now, Marshall said this, which I think covers the whole question, and this is not the McCulloch case:

Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator and I do not widely differ.

Mr. TELLER. I do not mean to say you can not imply some things from something else, but I do say you can not assume that because we are a nation we have a power that has not been expressed in the Constitution, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. FULTON. I assume, Mr. President, that because we are a nation, because the Constitution makes us a nation, it intended that we should exercise powers necessary to a nation for its preservation and for the preservation of its people.

Many things are naturally implied by the character of the creation. Where the thing created is a village, a mere municipality, we construe its charter largely by the objects for which it was created, the purposes it was intended to serve. But when you create a nation there are some powers, though even not expressed or implied from any particular expression in the charter, which are nevertheless implied by reason of the fact that it is a nation, an independent sovereignty, that has been created. It may be that you will have to look to the Constitution as a whole; but the power will, nevertheless, be logically inferable therefrom, as was and is the power to acquire territory by virtue of and by reason of the sovereignty and nationality of the government created. And in this sense I contend this Government has inherent powers.

Mr. TELLER. I will ask the Senator if he will let me read another quotation from Marshall, in the case of McCulloch v. The State of Maryland?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. There is a good deal of it here, but I want to read just a little of it.

We admit—

This is the language of the Supreme Court—

We admit, as all must admit, that the powers of the Government are limited, and that its limits are not to be transcended. But we think the sound construction of the Constitution must allow to the national legislature that discretion, with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution, which will enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it in the manner most beneficial to the people.

That follows what I read before:

Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional.

Mr. President, that is the nearest any court has ever come to the doctrine the Senator is laying down. I think he goes beyond what the court did. It seems to me that if you follow out logically what the Senator says you do not need any Constitution at all.

Mr. FULTON. We shall see in a moment whether I go beyond what the court says, for I myself propose to read from the language of the court.

Mr. TELLER. In this case?

Mr. FULTON. Oh, no; in another case. What volume was it from which the Senator read?

Mr. TELLER. It is the McCulloch case I read. It is in Fourth Wheaton, page 421. This was several years before the decision in the Gibbons case.

Mr. FULTON. Yes; I am familiar with the case.

Now, as I have said, I fully agree with the Senator from Colorado that this is a Government of delegated powers; that it can exercise no power for which warrant may not be found in the Constitution; but I contend that the fact that we are a nation; that the Federal Constitution, taken as a whole, creates a single, sovereign, independent nation, carries with it the idea and irresistibly implies that the nation thus created possesses all the necessary attributes of sovereignty that any independent nation may properly exercise in the protection of the rights, liberties, and interests of its people in its relations with foreign powers, and that, when not restricted by an express or necessarily implied provision of the Constitution, there is no limitation on its sovereign powers in dealing with foreign nations and peoples. Still, these powers, which I contend this nation possesses by reason of its sovereignty—its nationality—are clearly derivable from the Constitution. It must be remembered that the restrictions and limitations of the Constitution were intended for the protection of our own people, and they have force and vitality only within our own territory. It will hardly be contended, for instance, that should we go into Canada and seize a tract of her territory, that she could defeat the act by alleging that it was depriving her of property "without due process of law" or "without just compensation." The fact that we are by the Constitution a nation among the nations of the earth counts for something and implies much in our scheme of government. Even before the Constitution and before the delegation of any powers to the Federal Government, our forefathers recognized in the Declaration of Independence that the mere association of the colonies imbued the Government thereby formed and established with certain attributes of sovereignty; that by the mere Declaration of Independence they became clothed with power "to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and do all other acts and things which independent states may of right do." And that is what every independent nation by virtue of its sovereignty may do. So, when this nation comes to regulate foreign commerce, to prescribe how far, to what extent, and on what terms, if at all, foreign peoples or foreign products may enter our ports, it is not limited by or to the power conferred in the commerce clause of the Constitution. It is a nation, sovereign and independent, dealing with foreign nations, and it may say, "Thou shalt not come; and no further," or it may say, "Thou shalt not come;" and they may not, for it means something to be a nation. Now, the Senator from Indiana contends that because it is declared by the commerce clause of the Constitution that Congress has power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," it follows that the power to regulate commerce among the States is equal to and coextensive with the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and hence, if we may prohibit commerce with a foreign nation, we may equally prohibit commerce among the States; and he fortifies his contention by quotations from several decisions of the Supreme Court to the effect that the power to regulate the one, under this clause is equal to the power to regulate the other.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not want to consume one instant of time, and therefore I rise merely to say that the Senator does not accurately state my position. I do not claim that.

Mr. FULTON. I do not wish to misrepresent—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know you do not.

Mr. FULTON. I do not wish to misrepresent the Senator, and I shall be glad to have him make a statement of his position if I did not state it correctly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; but I do not contend that we could prohibit commerce between two States, for example.

Mr. CLAPP. I took the liberty, if the Senator will pardon me, in the absence of the Senator from Indiana some time ago to call attention to that fact.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. I think, however, the Senator from Indiana had better look over the Record before he fully indorses the position the Senator from Minnesota assigned him.

Mr. CLAPP. I will risk the Record.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have stated on the floor—in fact, at some length—my position with reference to that one branch of the interstate and foreign commerce clause of the Constitution, because it is only one branch, and I have recently restated the same thing. It is not necessary for me to-day to restate it, and in the state of the public business I am not going to take up the time to do it or to argue it in any form, except that I can not permit it to go on record as a statement of my position.

Mr. FULTON. I will state to the Senator that I fully agree with him that when any public business is pending neither of us ought to take up time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not criticising the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. I would not be taking up time now to make a speech had there been any disposition to do any public business. Has the Senator observed any such disposition?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; and I am glad the Senator mentioned that. I have not seen any, but I have seen a decided disinclination to do it. I was not criticising the Senator for taking up time.

Mr. FULTON. I understand that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I merely meant to say, in correcting the statement, that I would not consume further time, because I do not wish to debate it. I think the Senator is right; I do not see any inclination to do any business.

Mr. FULTON. I think I am justified in saying that whatever may be the position of the Senator from Indiana at this time we all, I hope, grow; at least I hope I do. I think we all grow as we study these questions and that we change our views sometimes. But I think I am justified in saying that the Senator has contended on this floor that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce is just as great as the power to regulate foreign commerce.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have even said more. I have said it is the same power.

Mr. FULTON. Very well. Then I am not misrepresenting the Senator. I thought I had not done so. Indeed I think the record shows that the Senator has several times asserted that Congress has the "power" to prohibit interstate commerce. But I will not press that. The argument of the Senator in the concrete being in defense of his measure proposing to exclude from interstate commerce all articles manufactured in whole or in part by child labor. I deny the power of Congress to enact the particular legislation he thus advocates on two grounds, namely: First, I deny the power of Congress to exclude from interstate commerce any article which in itself is innocuous, that in no wise affects or is calculated to affect adversely the public health, the public morals, or the public welfare, for as to interstate commerce the power of Congress is simply the power to, regulate and not the power to suppress or prohibit.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me to complete this sentence? And, second, the exclusion of articles which are the product in whole or in part of child labor without regard to their character, is an attempt, not to regulate commerce, but to regulate the employment within the States of child labor, a power which the Federal Government does not possess, but which pertains to the police powers of the States and can be exercised by them only.

Now, I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I simply wanted to ask a question of the Senator from Oregon. The Supreme Court has decided in two or three cases directly, and several times indirectly, that the power to regulate may imply the power to prohibit. Now, having decided that the power to regulate may imply the power to prohibit, under what theory is it that you may not advance the proposition that that prohibition may go to anything which Congress in its wisdom suggests should be prohibited?

Mr. FULTON. I think this is as far as the courts have gone (the Supreme Court so stated in the lottery case, I think), that regulation may at times amount to prohibition, and, on the other hand, prohibition of a given article may be necessary to proper regulation; it may be regulation. For instance, I take it that to prohibit lottery tickets, as the court has held we can, from entering into interstate commerce, is a regulation of commerce; it is purifying the channels of commerce. So where we prohibit infected articles from entering into interstate commerce we are regulating commerce because we are purifying and protecting the channels of commerce. There prohibition is regulation. But, taking an article that is wholly innocuous, that is not detrimental to the public health or morals, and that of itself is perfectly unobjectionable, it is not a regulation of commerce to prohibit it from entering into interstate commerce. It is destroying commerce, and is as well an attempt, indirectly, to invade the police powers of the States, and is a violation of the rights of the States and in excess of the powers of the National Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Supreme Court in the lottery cases certainly determined the proposition that the power to regulate did imply the power to prohibit.

Mr. FULTON. Yes; to prohibit for regulation, certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Then, who is to determine to what extent the regulation shall go and to what extent the prohibition shall go?

Mr. FULTON. Finally, the Supreme Court, of course. It must pass on the justness and reasonableness of the regulation.

Mr. BORAH. No; does it not resolve itself into the question that the only restraint upon interstate commerce under the commerce clause of the Constitution is simply, as stated by Marshall, the wisdom and judgment of Congress?

Mr. FULTON. No; it does not follow. It appears to me a strange doctrine that when Congress is vested with the power simply to "regulate" interstate commerce, it may, nevertheless, under the guise of regulating, invade the police powers of the States and prohibit an entirely innocuous article from entering interstate commerce simply in order to accomplish indirectly what it can not do directly, namely, regulate the internal affairs of the States; for instance, prohibit the employment therein of a certain class of laborers. The Supreme Court has somewhere said—I have not the authority by me, but I know it has so said, I think in the Lottery Case—that Congress may not abuse this power; and if it should seek to employ the power to regulate commerce for the purpose of intrenching on the police powers of a State, its action would be void. Indeed the court has held in the railway-rate cases, uniformly, that regulations by Congress of interstate commerce must be reasonable.

The Constitution did not create commerce; it existed before the Constitution. The power granted to Congress in respect to interstate commerce is to regulate, not to destroy. It never gave us any such power but the power to regulate, and in so far as the power to prohibit is necessary to regulate, we possess the power to prohibit, and no further. Does the Senator believe, for instance, or does the Senator contend that we can prohibit the carrying in interstate commerce of the article of sugar or of wheat or of corn?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, since the Supreme Court of the United States decided, in the case to which I have referred, that the power to regulate implies the power to prohibit, I have not a particle of doubt in the world that if we should ever elect a Congress which should have it in mind, it could prohibit the shipping of corn from Iowa to New York, and I want to read a statement here from the Supreme Court in the case of Gibbons v. Ogden:

If, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specified objects, is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States.

There are no limitations upon the power so far as this subject which we are talking about is concerned.

Mr. FULTON. Yes; but the court are speaking all the time of the power to regulate.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but just a moment. The opinion continues:

The wisdom and the discretion of Congress, their identity with the people, and the influence which their constituents possess at elections, are in this, as in many other instances, as that, for example, of declaring war, the sole restraints on which they have relied to secure them from its abuse.

Now, then, the Supreme Court having decided—

Mr. FULTON. From the abuse of what?

Mr. BORAH. From the abuse of this power.

Mr. FULTON. To regulate?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; to regulate; but they have decided that to regulate may include to prohibit, and the result is that it is left entirely with Congress as to what shall be prohibited and what shall not.

Mr. FULTON. As I have said, the court has, since Marshall's time, held in many instances that regulations of interstate commerce by Congress must be just and reasonable, and that what is just and reasonable is a question always for the courts. But Marshall was speaking about such regulations as it is within the competency of Congress to enact. Of course, it may be oftentimes difficult to say just where and when regulation ceases and prohibition begins.

We all know that there are certain points where powers blend. Some one has spoken of a "twilight zone." I can readily understand that in the exercise of the power to regulate great injustice may sometimes be done by Congress and yet Congress be acting within what the court would hold to be its constitutional power. In such a case there is but one appeal, and that is to the people. But should Congress attempt to prohibit from interstate commerce an entirely innocuous article, the Supreme Court would never hesitate a second to hold the act in violation of the Constitution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FULTON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the Senator from Oregon this question: Suppose Congress should, before adjourning to-day, conclude to declare war against Canada. There is no reason in the world for it; our relations are perfectly amicable; yet what power is there to restrain us from doing so, if we desired to do so?

Mr. FULTON. Nothing; and there would be no power at all to restrain us from declaring war without a Constitution, because war is the ultimate and the end of every argument.

Mr. BORAH. But Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, who was somewhat of a constitutional lawyer, says that the power to declare war and the power to regulate commerce are identical in the extent of power.

Mr. FULTON. That is, the power to "regulate" is plenary, full, complete; but when the Constitution employed the word "regulate," it certainly was not intended to mean prohibit or destroy. The power to regulate is complete, full, and plenary, I grant you; but it does not mean to prohibit. However, I must proceed, as I am taking up too much time.

I was discussing the question of the position of the Senator from Indiana on the commerce clause of the Constitution and the child-labor bill. I was about to say that the exclusion of articles which are the product in whole or in part of child labor, without regard to their character, is an attempt not to regulate commerce, but to regulate the employment within the States of child labor, a power which the Federal Government does not possess, but which pertains to the police power of the States and can be exercised by them only.

So we would not be regulating commerce in such a case; we would not be attempting to regulate commerce; but we would be seeking to employ our conceded power to regulate commerce for the purpose of regulating the employment of child labor in the State.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FULTON. I will yield to the Senator, although I am really anxious to get through.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am bound, at the risk of taking just a moment of time, to point out to the Senator that even if it were true that this would mean the regulation of something else instead of commerce, yet it has been decided several times by the Supreme Court that Congress may use the power to regulate commerce for the purpose of accomplishing another end. But I do not want to take a minute's time; I merely wanted to call attention to that, though I do not concede that is what is done in this case.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not believe that any advocate of the passage through Congress of a bill to regulate child labor will begin his argument with any other proposition than to point out the great evil, the great wrong of allowing children to be employed in factories and places of that character.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. Pardon me a moment. Which shows that the legislation is clearly proposed and designed not to regulate commerce, but to prevent and prohibit the employment of child labor within the States. It is not that the product of child labor is injurious to commerce, not that the article itself is detrimental to the public health or the public welfare in any respect. The sole object and purpose of the legislation is to regulate child labor in the States. Now, will the Senator contend that Congress can do indirectly that which it can not do directly? The Senator will concede that the power to regulate the employment of child labor is a power that is vested exclusively in the several States. We can not exercise that power.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FULTON. In a moment. Congress can not exercise that power, and so the Senator from Indiana and those associated with him in this movement seek to exercise the power of Congress to regulate commerce, and, under the guise of regulating commerce, they seek to invade the sovereignty of the States and the legislative and police powers of the States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FULTON. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator says that we can not do indirectly what we can not do directly. I ask the Senator have we power directly to legislate the lottery out of a State?

Mr. FULTON. I beg pardon, I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator whether we have the power directly to legislate the lottery out of a State—to suppress lotteries in a State?

Mr. FULTON. No.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No. We have prohibited from transportation lottery tickets through interstate commerce, and the effect is the suppression of that lottery, is it not? So we can do indirectly what we can not do directly.

Mr. FULTON. It may be—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, as a matter of fact, we can. To show the Senator by actual legislation that we have passed that he is wrong—and he will admit it, I think, in a moment—and that the argument that we can not do indirectly what we can not do directly is false, I will ask the Senator whether he thinks we can by legislation directly prevent any kind of printing or publication in a State?

Mr. FULTON. No.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But when we prohibited obscene literature from interstate commerce, although free speech is guaranteed by the Constitution, we did stop that indirectly, did we not?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all.

Mr. FULTON. It was the indirect effect of the employment of the constitutional powers of Congress. It was not for the purpose of stamping out lotteries, but it was for the purpose of forbidding the channels of interstate commerce being employed to poison and destroy the morals of other States adjacent. Those are instances of proper regulation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But, Mr. President—

Mr. FULTON. Just wait a moment. Louisiana might have gone on with her lottery throughout the ages had she not sought to use the channels of interstate commerce to carry to other States and to inject into the daily life and into the civilization of other communities of this Commonwealth that objectionable practice of gambling which she was exploiting and carrying on through her State lottery. It was to prevent the channels of commerce from being used for that purpose—to make the channels of commerce clean and healthy and pure—that the law was passed by Congress which had the effect to injure the lottery business.

But that was an indirect effect, flowing from the proper use or the employment of the constitutional powers of Congress. So, you can take, for instance, infected clothing. We do not intend to destroy the industry of putting up infected goods in any State, but the moment they begin to ship them through the channels of commerce and send them to other people in other States, we have the right, and it is our duty, to say, "No; and in so doing we are exercising the highest prerogative of regulation. We prevent the people of one State from employing the channels of interstate commerce to deposit in the midst of other States, articles dangerous to or destructive of their health or morals. That is proper regulation of commerce."

But the Senator says that the power to regulate foreign commerce and commerce among the States is delegated in and by the same clause of the Constitution and in identically the same language, and assuming it to be admitted that we may exclude any given article from foreign commerce, it follows that we may equally exclude it from interstate commerce. It is not my purpose at this time, however, to discuss these questions, except in so far as what I shall have to say in response to the contention of the Senator from Colorado may tend to illustrate the difference between the character and scope of the powers exercised by Congress in regulating foreign commerce and that exercised by it in regulating interstate commerce, for I think it will clearly appear that the Federal Government is clothed with certain powers by virtue of or arising out of its sovereignty, and that they contribute to give it wider scope and more nearly complete and absolute control of foreign commerce than is permitted to it in dealing with interstate commerce. Indeed, it is only that I may cite a few authorities in support of my contention in that behalf that I have brought the subject up at this time.

I have heard the Senator from Indiana state on many occasions, and he so stated last Friday, that every time the Supreme Court has had occasion to comment upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce or regulate its relations with foreign countries and foreign powers the court has assumed that the authority of Congress so to act is found only in the commerce clause of the Constitution. In that I contend the Senator is mistaken. I call his attention to the fact that it is held by all the decisions that commerce consists of transportation not only of goods, not only of merchandise and property, but of persons as well; that the carrying of passengers across the ocean is just as much foreign commerce as is the carrying of freight. On that proposition I desire to call attention to the decision of the court in the passenger cases. I read from 8 Howard, page 130. Defining what constitutes commerce, the court say:

Commerce is defined to be "an exchange of commodities." But this definition does not convey the full meaning of the term. It includes "navigation and intercourse." That the transportation of passengers is a part of commerce is not now an open question. In Gibbons v. Ogden this court say: "No clear distinction is perceived between the powers to regulate vessels in transporting men for hire and property for hire." The provision of the Constitution that "the migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit shall not be prohibited by Congress prior to the year 1808" is a restriction on the general power of Congress to regulate commerce.

I read this simply to show that it is universally held that transportation of passengers is commerce. If the power of Congress to regulate foreign commerce is assignable altogether to the commerce clause of the Constitution, then it follows that any power that we may exercise to entirely exclude foreigners from this country must be assignable and traceable to the powers given by the commerce clause of the Constitution. But that that is not true I propose to show.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. It just occurs to me to ask the Senator for his view upon this suggestion: The Senator has pointed out very plainly the distinction in the prohibition of transportation of those things which contribute to the physical or moral pollution of a people, notably in the lottery cases. It was not the mere transmission of lottery tickets through the channels of commerce that effectuated the evil, but the evil was due to the effect upon the morals of the people where the lottery tickets finally landed and where they became an instrumentality of human activities. Now, if Congress can prohibit the transmission of that which has the effect of moral contamination or pollution, or a weakening effect of any kind where that commodity reaches in its last analysis as a result of the transmission of the commodity, may it not be that upon the application of that same principle Congress could have power to prohibit the transmission of that which, in its inception, if that were the case, amounted to moral pollution or contamination? I make that as a suggestion for the consideration of the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. I call the attention of the Senator to what I said a while ago, namely, that when we prohibit from interstate commerce an article the effect of which is to pollute the morals or to endanger the health of people of other States we are in truth employing the power given by the Constitution to regulate, because that very prohibition amounts to regulation. As to Congress possessing arbitrary powers, I can give him no better answer than that I recall he once gave me when discussing what is contended to be the supreme and arbitrary power of Congress under the Constitution to regulate interstate commerce. The Senator himself said that every decision of the Supreme Court which holds that the regulations made by Congress of interstate commerce in regulating the railroads must be reasonable and just furnishes a complete answer to the contention that we might go to the extreme of arbitrarily excluding from commerce articles that are not deleterious, articles that are not destructive of the health or the morals, because, as the Senator then suggested—and I think it is a complete and perfect answer to all such contentions—our courts have held time and again that any regulations made of interstate commerce, so far as regulating prices, regulating the terms, or regulating the conditions on which it may be carried, must be reasonable and just. If they must be reasonable and just as to railroads and transportation lines, will anyone contend that they must not equally be reasonable and just as to the shippers, the producers, and the manufacturers of this country? Will it be argued that railroads and transportation lines may stay the hand of Congress because an enactment that it has made is unjust and unreasonable to it, and yet that the shippers and producers of this country may not equally demand that the regulations of commerce by Congress shall be just and reasonable?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield further to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FULTON. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think the Senator exactly caught the drift of my suggestion, which did not imply and was not intended to imply that Congress could arbitrarily prohibit the transmission of an article where neither the transmission nor the use of the article had an improper and demoralizing effect, but the suggestion I sought to make was, that if we can prohibit the transmission of an article harmless in itself, like a lottery ticket, because of its effect upon the public morals where it is used, may we not, upon like principle, if the facts warrant, prohibit the transmission of an article harmless in itself, but disastrous in its effect upon the population where produced? That was the suggestion.

Mr. FULTON. Where produced?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. I think there is no foundation upon which that proposition can rest at all. I take it that interstate commerce implies transactions between at least two States; and the only thing that Congress can prohibit entering into that commerce is something that injuriously affects the State to which it is being sent or the States through which it is being sent. Congress can not go into the State of origin, the initial State, and prohibit there the manufacture or sale of the article. The citizens of a State have a right to manufacture and sell an article to any extent they please if their own State law permits it, but if that article when shipped into another State is injurious to the health or morals of the people of that State, then they have a right to appeal to Congress, which has sole power to regulate interstate commerce, and say, "You should so regulate the channel of interstate commerce that it can not be employed by the people of another State to destroy our health, our lives, our morals, or our industries; you should not allow it; you have power to regulate commerce, and you should so regulate it that it shall not be used to our injury or to our wrong." And truly we should, for Congress alone can make such regulations. But if simply because the manner in which a factory is conducted is injurious to the people of the State in which it is located we attempt to prohibit from interstate commerce the product of the factory, though perfectly wholesome and innocuous, we are not regulating commerce nor seeking so to do, but are seeking by indirection to invade the police powers of the State.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will yield to me, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], as I understood him, suggested that a lottery ticket was not an evil thing in itself. That is true if it is looked at as so much paper and so much print; but the thing for which it stands is an evil thing.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And it is upon that ground, as I understand, that the lottery case proceeded.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call attention—

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will allow me right there, I wish to suggest that there are many things that in themselves intrinsically are not injurious, and about which there is nothing wrong, but it is the effect that the use of them has.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the majority opinion in the lottery case Mr. Justice Harlan makes use of this illustration:

That regulation may sometimes—

I emphasize the word "sometimes;" the court does not—

That regulation may sometimes appropriately assume the form of prohibition is also illustrated by the case of diseased cattle transported from one State to another.

But the court all the way through, as I understand, in that case proceeds upon the theory that when Congress undertakes to prohibit, it must be in an exceptional case.

Mr. FULTON. And only for the purpose of regulation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And only for the purpose of regulation. Further along in the majority opinion Mr. Justice Harlan says:

It is said, however, that if, in order to suppress lotteries carried on through interstate commerce, Congress may exclude lottery tickets from such commerce, that principle leads necessarily to the conclusion that Congress may arbitrarily exclude from commerce among the States any article, commodity, or thing, of whatever kind or nature, or however useful or valuable, which it may choose, no matter with what motive, to declare shall not be carried from one State to another. It will be time enough to consider the constitutionality of such legislation when we must do so. The present case does not require the court to declare the full extent of the power that Congress may exercise in the regulation of commerce among the States. We may, however, repeat in this connection what the court has heretofore said, that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States, although plenary, can not be deemed arbitrary, since it is subject to such limitations or restrictions as are prescribed by the Constitution.

All the way through that case the court proceeds upon the theory that Congress may only regulate by prohibition when the article sought to be prohibited transportation is an article evil in itself, where the consequences of transporting that article are evil; but there is no decision, so far as I recall, where the court has held that Congress may go back to the origin of the article and, under the pretense of regulating commerce, undertake to destroy something which is deemed to be evil in the State where the article originated.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the junior Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I am not so very certain that we have not gone a good way in the direction of applying the principle to the origin as well as to the destination and ultimate purpose of the commodity. While there may be some doubt about it, yet in our effort to separate and divorce transportation from production, we deal with it from the standpoint of the State where it is produced, the place of the production, and prohibit the transportation of that product over the transportation lines.

Mr. FULTON. I thank the Senator for his contribution to the discussion. I do not want him to think I am impatient. I have enjoyed what he has said and also what the Senator from Utah has said, but I am anxious to conclude.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well; I will not again interrupt the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I should be very glad to have a vote on the joint resolution. I do not think we can get it at the present time, so I ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. DICK. Can the Senator from New Jersey give us any assurance on that matter at all?

Mr. KEAN. So far as I am personally concerned, I am ready to vote, but I understand the Senate is not ready to proceed to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. FULTON. I was speaking a few minutes ago of certain powers which this Government possesses and may exercise that are not easily traceable to any particular grant or delegation of authority or inferable from any particular grant or delegation of authority, but which clearly flow from the Constitution by reason of the fact that the Constitution has made this country a nation, a sovereign power on the face of the earth. I think the Supreme Court has recognized that.

I was also referring to the fact that in dealing with foreign nations, in regulating foreign commerce, we have and may exercise greater power, wider power, than in regulating interstate commerce, because we are not confined entirely in that behalf to the commerce clause of the Constitution, but we can trace our powers to this other source which I have mentioned that flows from our nationality and sovereignty. In that behalf and in support of that contention I call attention to the Chinese exclusion case as reported in 130 U. S., the opinion by Mr. Justice Field, a portion of which I read, at page 604:

While under our Constitution and form of government the great mass of local matters is controlled by local authorities, the United States, in their relation to foreign countries and their subjects or citizens, are one nation, invested with powers which belong to independent nations, the exercise of which can be invoked for the maintenance of its absolute independence and security throughout its entire territory. The powers to declare war, make treaties, suppress insurrection, repel invasion, regulate foreign commerce, secure republican governments to the States, and admit subjects of other nations to citizenship are all sovereign powers, restricted in their exercise only by the Constitution itself and considerations of public policy and justice which control more or less the conduct of all civilized nations. As said by the court in the case of Cohens v. Virginia (6 Wheat, 264, 413), speaking by the same great chief justice: "That the United States form, for many and for most important purposes, a single nation has not yet been denied. In war we are one people. In making peace we are one people. In all commercial regulations we are one and the same people. In many other respects the American people are one, and the government which is alone capable of controlling and managing their interests in all these respects is the Government of the Union. It is their government, and in that character they have no other. America has chosen to be in many respects and to many purposes a nation, and for all these purposes her government is complete; to all these objects it is competent. The people have declared that in the exercise of all powers given for these objects it is supreme. It can then, in effecting these objects, legitimately control all individuals or governments within the American territory. The Constitution and laws of a State, so far as they are repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States, are absolutely void. These States are constituent parts of the United States. They are members of one great empire—for some purposes sovereign, for some purposes subordinate."

The power of exclusion of foreigners, being an incident of sovereignty belonging to the Government of the United States as a part of those sovereign powers delegated by the Constitution, the right to its exercise at any time when in the judgment of the Government the interests of the country require it can not be granted away or restrained on behalf of anyone.

Without taking up the time to read the entire decision, I will content myself now with stating in substance what the court held.

They held that this Government has the power to exclude aliens from this country, and they did not trace the power so to do to the commerce clause of the Constitution, although the coming of such people here for trade and traffic, as come the Chinese, is foreign commerce.

But the Supreme Court, as we have seen, assigned the power of Congress to prohibit their entry into our ports not to the commerce clause of the Constitution, but adjudged it an attribute of sovereignty, a power possessed and exercised by all nations.

I want, now, to read briefly from what Mr. Justice White said in discussing the sovereign powers of the Government. In Downes v. Bidwell (182 U. S., 244), Mr. Justice White, in delivering the concurring opinion, said:

It may not be doubted that by the general principles of the law of nations every government which is sovereign within its sphere of action possesses—

I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to this:

As an inherent attribute the power to acquire territory by discovery, by agreement, or treaty, and by conquest.

The Senator says the Supreme Court has held time and again that this Government has no inherent power, and that the word "inherent" is improper in connection with the exercise of constitutional power. I said then and I say now that there are certain powers which this Government possesses which flow, it is true, from the Constitution as the original source, but, nevertheless, traceable to no particular delegation of power, but to the great fabric as a whole, which the people, by the Constitution, erected into this great and splendid nation, and because of its sovereignty, its nationality, it has and may exercise these powers—I call them powers that are inherent to sovereignty.

So says Mr. Justice White:

It may not be doubted that by the general principles of the law of nations every government which is sovereign within its sphere of action possesses as an inherent attribute the power to acquire territory by discovery, by agreement, or treaty, and by conquest. It can not also be gainsaid that as a general rule wherever a government acquires territory as a result of any of the modes above stated, the relation of the territory to the new government is to be determined by the acquiring power in the absence of stipulations upon the subject.

He further says:

When our forefathers threw off their allegiance to Great Britain and established a republican government, assuredly they deemed that the nation which they called into being was endowed with those general powers to acquire territory which all independent governments in virtue of their sovereignty enjoyed. This is demonstrated by the concluding paragraph of the Declaration of Independence, which reads as follows: "As free and independent States, they (the United States of America) have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which independent States may of right do."

I said, Mr. President, when this argument occurred the other day that this Government possesses certain inherent powers. They come from the Constitution, it is true, but it is because the Constitution has erected a nation and endowed it with sovereign powers, and one of those powers is to acquire territory. But for those powers we never could have lawfully acquired foreign territory. You can not find a suggestion in the Constitution for it. You can not find an express power nor an implied power from which you can infer authority. But taking them all together, taking them as a unit, having in view what the Constitution does, what it has erected, a nation, a sovereignty, then we know that it was intended that it should possess those necessary attributes of sovereignty—to acquire territory, to protect its people from invasion, to exclude foreign subjects, and, aye, to prohibit and suppress foreign commerce, if it sees fit so to do. We are not necessarily confined to the commerce clause of the Constitution when we are dealing with the commerce that comes from foreign shores.

I am well aware that isolated expressions are to be found in the opinions of the Supreme Court to the effect that the power to regulate commerce among the States is equal to the power to regulate foreign commerce. It would not be difficult to show that all such expressions are but reiterations of the remarks of Mr. Justice Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden, which were addressed and should be confined to the particular issues of that case. That this is true must be apparent to every student of the Constitution, and I do not at this time care to enter into a discussion of the matter further than to cite the comment of Chief Justice Fuller in the Lottery case (188 U. S., 373), where he said:

It is argued that the power to regulate commerce among the several States is the same as the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and with the Indian tribes.

But is its scope the same?

As in effect, before observed, the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and the power to regulate interstate commerce, are to be taken diverso intuitu. For the latter was intended to secure equality and freedom in commercial intercourse as between the States, not to permit the creation of impediments to such intercourse; while the former clothed Congress with that power over international commerce, pertaining to a sovereign nation in its intercourse with foreign nations, and subject, generally speaking, to no implied or reserved power in the States. The laws which would be necessary and proper in the one case would not be necessary or proper in the other.

Congress is forbidden to lay any tax or duty on articles exported from any State, and while that has been applied to exports to a foreign country, it seems to me that it was plainly intended to apply to interstate exportation as well. Congress is forbidden to give preference, by any regulation of commerce or revenue, to the ports of one State over those of another; and duties, imposts, and excises must be uniform throughout the United States.

The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States. This clause of the second section of Article IV was taken from the fourth article of confederation, which provided that "the free inhabitants of each of these States shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of free citizens in the several States; and the people of each State shall have free ingress and egress to and from any other State, and shall enjoy therein all the privileges of trade and commerce," while other parts of the same article were also brought forward in Article IV of the Constitution.

Thus it is seen that the right of passage of persons and property from one State to another can not be prohibited by Congress. But that does not challenge the legislative power of a sovereign nation to exclude foreign persons or commodities or place an embargo, perhaps not permanent, upon foreign ships or manufactures.

The foregoing comments of the eminent jurist will, without elaboration or suggestion, sufficiently commend themselves to the consideration of every thoughtful mind, hence I do not care to elaborate the thought suggested. It is sufficient to say that even if we restrict the powers of Congress to the commerce clause in the regulation of both interstate and foreign commerce, the difference in the scope is so manifest that few persons will be heard to contend that because we may not absolutely prohibit the one we may not, in circumstances which Congress may deem sufficient, prohibit the others. In any case, it seems clear to me, not only in the nature of the powers themselves, but from the very clear statement of Justice Fuller, which I have quoted, and the trend of the opinion in the Lottery case, that the power of Congress over foreign commerce is immeasurably broader and more nearly absolute and unrestricted, if not entirely so, than is its control over interstate commerce. In conclusion permit me to say that by reason of questions so frequently propounded I have been not only very largely diverted from the line of argument I had contemplated, but also betrayed into taking up far more time than I had expected to consume.

AMENDMENT OF NAVIGATION LAWS.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21815) to amend the laws relating to navigation and for other purposes, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I wish to make a brief statement.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HALE. It is only to ask a question. What is the unfinished business, Mr. President?

Mr. KEAN. It is the commodity joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senate joint resolution 74, suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. HALE. That is the measure which has been debated to-day?

Mr. KEAN. No.

Mr. NELSON. That has not been debated to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business was temporarily laid aside.

Mr. HALE. I am glad to be informed of that.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say that this is a bill made up of one brief House bill and eight Senate bills which have been passed unanimously by this body coming from the Committee on Commerce, meeting with the approval of the Commissioner of Navigation, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Committee on Commerce. The House under present conditions has put them in an omnibus bill. Unless the Senate cares for a more extensive statement, I am unwilling to take up the time of the Senate. I ask for its present consideration.

The bill was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2792 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended by adding thereto, thirty days after the passage of this act, the following:

"Any passenger vessel engaged triweekly or oftener in trade between ports of the United States and foreign ports shall be exempt from entrance and clearance fees and tonnage taxes while such service triweekly or oftener is maintained."

SEC. 2. That section 4438 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows sixty days after the passage of this act:

"SEC. 4438. The boards of local inspectors shall license and classify the masters, chief mates, and second and third mates, if in charge of a watch, engineers, and pilots of all steam vessels, and the masters of sail vessels of over 700 gross tons, and all other vessels of over 100 gross tons carrying passengers for hire. It shall be unlawful to employ any person or for any person to serve as a master, chief mate, engineer, or pilot of any steamer or as master of any sail vessel of over 700 gross tons or of any other vessel of over 100 gross tons carrying passengers for hire who is not licensed by the inspectors; and anyone violating this section shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense."

SEC. 3. That section 4467 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4467. The master of every passenger steamer shall keep a correct count of all the passengers received and delivered from day to day, which count shall be open to the inspection of the inspectors and officers of the customs at all times, and the aggregate number of passengers shall be furnished to inspectors as often as called for: Provided, however, That a correct list of passengers received and delivered from day to day shall be kept, instead of a correct count, by the masters of seagoing passenger steamers in the coastwise trade and by the masters of passenger steamers on the Great Lakes on routes exceeding 300 miles: Provided further, That nothing herein shall affect existing laws relative to vessels running between this country and foreign ports."

SEC. 4. That section 4468 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4468. Every master of any passenger steamer who falls, through negligence or design, to keep a count or list of passengers, as required by the preceding section shall be liable to a penalty of $100."

SEC. 5. That whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States that yachts belonging to any regularly organized yacht club of the United States are allowed to arrive at and depart from any foreign port and to cruise in the waters of such port without entering or clearing at the custom-house thereof and without the payment of any charges for entering or clearing, dues, duty per ton, tonnage taxes, or charges for cruising licenses, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may authorize and direct the customs authorities at the various ports and subports of entry of the United States to allow yachts from such foreign port belonging to any regularly organized yacht club thereof to arrive at and depart from any port or subport of the United States and to cruise in waters of the United States without the payment of any charges for entering or clearing, dues, duty per ton, or tonnage taxes, but the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may, in his discretion, direct that such foreign yachts shall be required to obtain licenses to cruise, in a form prescribed by him, before they shall be allowed under the provisions of this act to cruise in waters of the United States. Such licenses shall be issued without cost to such yachts and shall prescribe such limitations as to length of time, direction, and place of cruising and action, and such other particulars as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may deem proper: Provided, That the privileges of this section shall not extend to any yacht built outside of the United States and owned, chartered, or used by a citizen of the United States unless such ownership or charter was acquired prior to February 5, 1897.

SEC. 6. That section 4216 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. That thirty days after the passage of this act if a shipowner desires to use for the purpose of a private code any rockets, lights, or other similar signals, he may register those signals and house flags and funnel marks with the Commissioner of Navigation, who shall give public notice from time to time of the signals, house flags, and funnel marks so registered in such manner as he may think requisite for preventing those signals from being mistaken for signals of distress or signals for pilots. The Commissioner of Navigation may refuse to register any signals which in his opinion can not easily be distinguished from signals of distress, signals for pilots, or signals prescribed by laws for preventing collisions.

SEC. 8. That section 3 of the act of August 18, 1894, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows, sixty days after the passage of this act:

"SEC. 3. That section 3 of the act to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses, approved June 29, 1888, shall be, and hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That in all cases of receiving on board of any scows or boats such forbidden matter or substance as herein described, the owner or master, or person acting in such capacity on board of such scows or boats, before proceeding to take or tow the same to the place of deposit, shall apply for and obtain from the supervisor of the harbor appointed hereunder a permit defining the precise limits within which the discharge of such scows or boats may be made; and it shall not be lawful for the owner or master, or person acting in such capacity, of any tug or towboat to tow or move any scow or boat so loaded with such forbidden matter until such permit shall have been obtained; and every person violating the foregoing provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than one thousand nor less than five hundred dollars, and in addition thereto the master of any tug or towboat so offending shall have his license revoked or suspended for a term to be fixed by the judge before whom tried and convicted.

"And any deviation from such dumping or discharging place specified in such permit shall be a misdemeanor, and the owner and master, or person acting in the capacity of master, of any scows or boats dumping or discharging such forbidden matter in any place other than that specified in such permit shall be liable to punishment therefor as provided in section 1 of the said act of June 29, 1888; and the owner and master, or person acting in the capacity of master, of any tug or towboat towing such scows or boats shall be liable to equal punishment with the owner and master, or person acting in the capacity of master, of the scows or boats; and, further, every scowman or other employee on board of both scows and towboats shall be deemed to have knowledge of the place of dumping specified in such permit, and the owners and masters, or persons acting in the capacity of masters, shall be liable to punishment, as aforesaid, for any unlawful dumping, within the meaning of this act or of the said act of June 29, 1888, which may be caused by the negligence or ignorance of such scowman or other employee; and, further, neither defect in machinery nor avoidable accidents to scows or towboats, nor unfavorable weather, nor improper handling or moving of scows or boats of any kind whatsoever shall operate to release the owners and master and employees of scows and towboats from the penalties hereinbefore mentioned.

"Every scow or boat engaged in the transportation of dredgings, earth, sand, mud, cellar dirt, garbage, or other offensive material of any description shall have its name or number and owner's name painted in letters and numbers at least 14 inches long on both sides of the scow or boat; these names and numbers shall be kept distinctly legible at all times, and no scow or boat not so marked shall be used to transport or dump any such material. Each such scow or boat shall be equipped at all times with a life line or rope extending at least the length of and 3 feet above the deck thereof, such rope to be attached to the coaming thereof, also with a life-preserver and a life buoy for each person on board thereof, also with anchor to weigh not less than 275 pounds, and at least 100 feet of cable attached thereto; a list of the names of all men employed on any such scow or boat shall be kept by the owner or master thereof and the said list shall be open to the inspection of all parties. Failure to comply with any of the foregoing provisions shall render the owner of such scow or boat liable upon conviction thereof to a penalty of not more than $500.

"The supervisor of the harbor of New York, designated as provided in section 5 of the said act of June 29, 1888, is authorized and directed to appoint inspectors and deputy inspectors, and, for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this act and of the act aforesaid, and of detecting and bringing to punishment offenders against the same, the said supervisor of the harbor, and the inspectors and deputy inspectors so appointed by him, shall have power and authority:

"First. To arrest and take into custody, with or without process, any person or persons who may commit any of the acts or offenses prohibited by this section and by the act of June 29, 1888, aforesaid, or who may violate any of the provisions of the same: Provided, That no person shall be arrested without process for any offense not committed in the presence of the supervisor or his inspectors or deputy inspectors, or either of them: And provided further, That whenever any such arrest is made the person or persons so arrested shall be brought forthwith before a commissioner, judge, or court of the United States for examination of the offenses alleged against him; and such commissioner, judge, or court shall proceed in respect thereto as authorized by law in case of crimes against the United States.

"Second. To go on board of any scow or towboat engaged in unlawful dumping of prohibited material, or in moving the same without a permit, as required in this section of this act, or otherwise violating any of the provisions of this section of this act, and to seize and hold said boats until they are discharged by action of the commissioner, judge, or court of the United States before whom the offending persons are brought.

"Third. To arrest and take into custody any witness or witnesses to such unlawful dumping of prohibited material, the said witnesses to be released under proper bonds.

"Fourth. To go on board of any towboat having in tow scows or boats loaded with such prohibited material, and accompany the same to the place of dumping, whenever such action appears to be necessary to secure compliance with the requirements of this act and of the act aforesaid.

"Fifth. To enter gas and oil works and all other manufacturing works for the purpose of discovering the disposition made of sludge, acid, or other injurious material, whenever there is good reason to believe that such sludge, acid, or other injurious material is allowed to run into the tidal waters of the harbor in violation of section 1 of the aforesaid act of June 29, 1888.

"Every person who, directly or indirectly, gives any sum of money or other bribe, present, or reward, or makes any offer of the same to any inspector, deputy inspector, or other employee of the office of the supervisor of the harbor with intent to influence such inspector, deputy inspector, or other employee to permit or overlook any violation of the provisions of this section or of the said act of June 29, 1888, shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than one year.

"Every permit issued in accordance with the provisions of this section of this act, which may not be taken up by an inspector or deputy inspector, shall be returned within four days after issuance to the office of the supervisor of the harbor; such permit shall bear an indorsement by the master of the towboat, or the person acting in such capacity, stating whether the permit has been used, and, if so, the time and place of dumping. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be liable to a fine of not more than $500 nor less than $100."

SEC. 9. That section 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by inserting in the first paragraph thereof, after the words "and Burlington, Vt.," and before the words "one inspector of hulls," the words "Honolulu, Hawaii, and San Juan, P. R.;" and that the said section be further amended by inserting in the fifth paragraph thereof, after the words "and Norfolk, Va.," and before the words "at the rate of $2,000," the words "Honolulu, Hawaii, and San Juan, P. R."

SEC. 10. That on and after January 1, 1909, the local inspectors of steamboats shall at least once in every year inspect the hull and equipment of every seagoing barge of 100 gross tons or over, and shall satisfy themselves that such barge is of a structure suitable for the service in which she is to be employed, has suitable accommodations for the crew, and is in a condition to warrant the belief that she may be used in navigation with safety to life. They shall then issue a certificate of inspection in the manner and for the purposes prescribed in sections 4421 and 4423 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 11. That every such barge shall be equipped with the following appliances of kinds approved by the Board of Supervising Inspectors: At least one lifeboat, at least one anchor with suitable chain or cable, and at least one life-preserver for each person on board.

SEC. 12. That a register, enrollment, or license shall not be issued or renewed by any collector or other officer of customs to any such barge unless at the time of issue or renewal such barge has in force the certificates of inspection prescribed by section 10 and on board the equipment prescribed by section 11.

SEC. 13. That if any such barge shall be navigated without such certificate of inspection, or without any part of the equipment prescribed by section 11, the owner shall be liable to a penalty of $500 for each offense.

SEC. 14. That the chairman of the Light-House Board, the Supervising Inspector-General of the Steamboat-Inspection Service, and the Commissioner of Navigation shall convene as a board at such times as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe to prepare regulations limiting the length of hawsers between towing vessels and seagoing barges in tow and the length of such tows within any of the inland waters of the United States designated and defined from time to time pursuant to section 2 of the act approved February 19, 1895, and such regulations when approved by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have the force of law.

SEC. 15. That the master of the towing vessel shall be liable to the suspension or revocation of his license for any willful violation of regulations issued pursuant to section 14 in the manner now prescribed for incompetency, misconduct, or unskillfulness.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the Senator inform me whether the bill includes a provision regulating pilotage?

Mr. NELSON. No; there is nothing in the bill on the subject of pilotage.

Mr. CULBERSON. My attention has been directed to it. There is a measure of that kind pending before the Senate Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NELSON. We have had no measure of that kind before the committee this session. The House has had such a measure, but not the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. A bill has been introduced in the Senate by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], but we had information that it would not be considered at this session.

Mr. NELSON. My recollection is—and I have attended nearly every meeting of the Committee on Commerce—that no bill of that kind has been brought up before the committee at this session.

Mr. CULBERSON. It has not been considered?

Mr. NELSON. It has not been considered, and is not included in this bill.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I believe this is another omnibus bill, the subject of which we have discussed here time and again. If I understand the Senator from Minnesota, several matters were pending in the House. The House did not have the time to discuss and pass them separately, and it passed an omnibus bill.

Mr. NELSON. I will explain it to the Senator.

Mr. CLAY. Just one minute. I want to make a little inquiry. That bill came to the Senate. The bill treats of different subjects and amends different sections of our navigation laws. The bill may be meritorious. The Committee on Commerce is a very careful, painstaking committee, but Mr. President, to say the least of it, when a measure of this kind, with fifteen sections and treating of different subjects, is under discussion, Senators ought to be permitted to have the printed bill before them with the view and purpose of reading it before it is placed on its passage.

If I understand this measure, it was reported from the committee this morning. Consequently it has been impossible to-day for Senators to have the bill on their desks so that they could read it. Does not the Senator think it would be better for the matter to go over until to-morrow and have the bill printed, and let it be taken up and passed then, if there is no objection to it?

Mr. NELSON. I want to say that every provision in the bill, except one paragraph on the first page, consists of independent bills that passed the Senate, having come from the Committee on Commerce. This portion of the bill to which the Senator refers is simply a reenactment of existing law and pertains simply to the matter of scows carrying refuse out of New York Harbor to sea. The only object of the amendment is to provide some regulation for the proper navigation of those scows.

Mr. CLAY. Has the bill been considered by the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. NELSON. It has been considered by the Committee on Commerce. A printed copy of it as it was reported on the House Calendar was considered by the full committee.

Mr. CLAY. And reported unanimously?

Mr. NELSON. The committee is unanimous on it. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FAYE], the chairman of the committee, was obliged to leave, and before he left he requested me to bring up this matter. Every item in it except one on the first page has been considered by the Committee on Commerce, and the whole bill in its entirety has been considered by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CLAY. I am not going to object to it; but the Senator will agree with me that this way of placing different subjects in one bill and considering them all together is a very bad precedent.

Mr. NELSON. It is; but the Senator knows that this body is not to blame for that condition.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator from Minnesota whether he will accept as an amendment to this bill House bill 21899, to which the Senate Committee on Commerce reported an amendment? It is a bill providing for the appointment of an Inland Waterways Commission, with a view to the improvement and development of the inland waterways of the United States.

Mr. NELSON. I have no authority from the committee to accept the amendment. It is a matter entirely foreign to the pending bill, and I sincerely trust the Senator from Nevada will not impede the passage of the bill. The bill of the Senator from Nevada is one that involves a mooted question, and I understand from several Senators there is some opposition to it. I trust he will abstain from offering the amendment. It will simply—

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say in reply to the Senator from Minnesota that it is eminently proper that this bill should go as an amendment upon the pending bill, because the pending bill is an omnibus bill, confessedly designed to cover all the unfinished business of the Committee on Commerce. It seems to me entirely appropriate that it should be added as an amendment.

I wish further to state that I have no disposition to embarrass the Senator at all in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. NELSON. If that is the case, if the Senator will allow me, I want to say to him that it would decidedly embarrass the passage of this bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But, as the Senator well knows, I have for some time been urging the consideration of this bill, which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce, and have been unable to obtain its consideration, and various devices have been resorted to in the Senate to prevent legislation upon subjects reported by committees to the Senate. The Senator knows that the device has been resorted to of compelling the reading of the Journal. Of course the rules require that, but the ordinary procedure of the Senate has been to dispense with the reading of the Journal in order to expedite legislation. But just this time, when it is most essential to press legislation, is chosen for reading the lengthy Journal. I believe the reading yesterday took about two hours. I therefore see no other opportunity of presenting this bill to the consideration of the Senate than the one now presented.

Now, I ask the Senator whether he will not yield the floor to me temporarily for the purpose of asking unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill, and then, if that consent is granted, doubtless the bill will go through without consuming much time, and then the Senator's bill can be disposed of. If this is done, I will not subject him to the inconvenience of having an amendment offered.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say to the Senator from Nevada that I do not feel warranted to do that. In this measure I am acting under the instruction of the Committee on Commerce, and not in my individual capacity, and whatever I might be disposed to do in the matter individually has nothing to do with the case. I trust the Senator will abstain. I shall certainly make no objection to his bill.

I wish to say further, as to an amendment of this kind, if we pass the bill and the amendment is tacked on it, it would send it back to the House, and it would be apt to defeat the whole measure. I trust the Senator will not seek to inflict that upon this bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I must say that the appeal of the Senator has great weight with me, and yet I know of no more important question than the one presented by the amendment which I suggest.

The Senator well knows that all the commercial bodies of the country called upon the President of the United States to consider and present a well-formulated plan for the improvement of the rivers of the country. The Senator knows that there is a universal demand for such improvement, and that unless some well-considered plan is submitted to Congress at the next session we are likely to rush into very inconsiderate legislation.

In response to that demand, with a view simply to shaping a comprehensive plan, with the aid of competent experts, with the aid of men in the service of the Government who have experience in all the questions relating to water, with the aid of engineers whom he proposes to call to the aid of this work, the President proposed to organize a commission for the purpose of making a study of this question; and he did that under his acknowledged power of recommending measures to Congress for their action.

That Commission has been in session for a year or more. I do not think there is any question outside of my own services upon that Commission but that the labors of the Commission have been exceedingly useful.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I appeal to the Senator from Nevada to let the pending bill pass, and then we can debate this other question subsequently.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to state to the Senator that I will quickly dispose of this matter if he will allow me to go on with my statement.

Mr. President, this Commission was appointed. It has been at work for over a year. It has presented to the President of the United States, who has transmitted it to this body, an elaborate report, appended to which are the most elaborate statistics, which will be useful in this great work.

He has requested Congress to continue the work of the Commission for the purpose of formulating a plan, and has requested Congress to give the appropriation that is necessary for certain expenses. This amendment simply appropriates $20,000 for that purpose. Now, unfortunately—

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Nevada said there was great danger that Congress would at the next session pass some very inconsiderate legislation upon this subject. I think the Senator owes it to Congress to state what the danger is that is threatening. I do not know, there may be some hidden purpose on somebody's part to do something here which I think Congress ought to be advised of. I can not imagine what it may be, but if there is any such evil overhanging the country, I think the Senator from Nevada ought to tell us what it is.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have no special danger to point out or to uncover. I simply refer to what will be recognized by every business man, that we are about to enter upon projects of vast magnitude, and it is important that these matters shall be thoroughly studied by experts before we enter upon legislation. That is all.

Now, Mr. President, in a speech before the governors of the States, who were assembled here, the President of the United States stated what action he had taken upon this important question and stated that he had appointed a commission for the purpose of investigating it. The President of the United States, in his address to the governors, who were called together for the conservation of the natural resources of the country, alluded to his message to Congress upon this subject and stated that he had applied to Congress for an appropriation for the expenses of the Commission. Then in a side remark, not in his original speech, he stated in a facetious way that if Congress did not continue the Commission he would endeavor to find some other way of continuing its work. That remark was received with great applause by the entire conference, consisting of governors, distinguished men, scientists, and others, and I understand that by this body it was regarded as a bald—

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada if he can not call his measure up right now, without discussion, and have a vote on it?

Mr. NELSON. Let us get through with the pending bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am perfectly willing to have a vote.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Nevada offers it as an amendment. I ask him to withdraw his amendment and let the pending bill pass and then call up his bill and debate it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If it can be taken up by unanimous consent, I will be very glad.

Mr. HOPKINS. Can we not have unanimous consent that the measure the Senator from Nevada has in charge shall be considered immediately after the disposition of the bill that is in charge of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DEFEW. I can not consent to that. I have a bill to bring before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to say to the Senator from New York that in my judgment the amendment the Senator from Nevada has in charge will not take a moment. It is reported from the Committee on Commerce, and there ought not to be any delay in its passage.

Mr. CLAY. Does not the Senator from Illinois really think it is due to the Senate that this matter be reported and placed on the Calendar and printed, so that we at least may examine it? I understand this bill was considered before the Committee on Commerce ten or twelve days ago, and I understand there has not been a meeting of the Committee on Commerce in some eight or ten days.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator from Georgia does not know as much about that committee as he did when he was a member of it.

Mr. CLAY. I do not know as much as the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. I say when the Senator was a member of it he then knew all about it, and if he had been a member of the committee now he would know that the statement of my colleague on the committee is correct.

Mr. CLAY. I know one thing. I know that this is a bill reported here to-day embracing thirteen different subjects, and it is taken up and has never been printed, and I venture the assertion that there are not five Senators on the floor who know the contents of the bill.

Mr. PILES. I wish to say to the Senator from Georgia that every bill named in this omnibus bill has been considered by the Senate except section 1. Every bill that is in this bill, except section 1, passed this body after due consideration by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CLAY. Does not the Senator think it an exceedingly bad practice to simply pass different bills in the Senate relating to different subjects and then have them included in an omnibus bill, and sometimes have something else put in the bill when they are taken up and passed as one measure?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I must insist on the floor.

Mr. CLAY. Is not that a bad practice, and ought we not to stop it at the earliest day practicable?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I must resume the floor.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada has the floor. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will take only a few moments longer.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well.

Mr. HALE. I wish the veteran Senator from Minnesota would tell us how old is this practice of lumping a dozen distinct bills into one bill and reporting them from a committee to be considered not as an omnibus claims or appropriation bill, but distinctive subject-matters, because, Mr. President, if that practice is to be justified and adopted by the Senate, we will be legislating wholesale hereafter upon all sorts of subjects in one bill instead of legislating in detail as we ought to do on separate bills. It is a most remarkable and dangerous precedent, and it ought not to be submitted to by the Senate for a moment on any measure of this kind.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I must insist upon proceeding for a few moments without interruption. I shall soon be through with my statement, and it is important that I should make it in a consecutive manner.

Mr. President, I was remarking when interrupted that this part of the President's speech was received with great applause by the conference of governors, scientists, and distinguished men gathered at the White House for the conservation of the natural resources of the country. They of course would not have applauded it had they understood it to imply usurpation of power. They doubtless applauded it as an evidence of the fixed determination of the President, whatever the discouragements might be, to proceed with the consideration of this important work, which subsequently in their resolutions they indorsed. But in this body the President's remarks were regarded as indicating a disposition upon his part to usurp a power which he did not have. I do not know, of course, what the President's intention was, other than as expressed in his words. All I can say is that if Congress does not act upon the subject it is clearly within the President's power to call to his aid any body of citizens with a view to securing the information that is necessary for him to make a recommendation to Congress, and he may call such a body of citizens a conference, a commission, or a board, as he sees fit. That power can not be questioned, and doubtless the President only expressed the determination to continue the exercise of that power.

It will not be thought for a moment that the President of the United States would assume that he could appropriate moneys from the Treasury of the United States for the expenses of such a commission without the action of Congress. So I do not think the least assertion was made or intended to be made looking toward a usurpation of any power which did not belong to the President under the Constitution.

That remark, however, caused opposition in this Chamber to a most meritorious measure; and I submit that that opposition should come to an end, for this is a matter that involves the entire country. It involves a pressing demand for legislation; it involves investigation of a most serious matter, and it involves the continuation and completion of work which has been commenced and work which will be very helpful to the President in making his recommendations and to Congress in acting upon them.

All I ask is a fair opportunity for the consideration of this bill, and as yet I have been unable to secure it. It is House bill No. 21899, which the Senate committee has reported favorably with an amendment, substituting the provisions of Senate bill 7112 on the same subject. Now, I do not wish to obstruct the Senator from Minnesota. I simply ask that I may print in the RECORD the report of the Commission and the President's message accompanying it, the resolutions of the conference of governors, and the bill S. 7183, embodying their recommendations, which I recently introduced. I will ask unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks that the report of the Commission and the President's message and some other papers may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And with this statement, I will state to the Senator from Minnesota that, realizing the embarrassment of his position and the pressing character of the legislation he has in charge, I will withdraw my amendment, and I will urge at an early moment upon the Senate the consideration of the bill I have referred to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Nevada is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

APPENDIX A.

[Senate Document No. 325, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

PRELIMINARY REPORT OF THE INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting a preliminary report of the Inland Waterways Commission.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a preliminary report from the Inland Waterways Commission, which was appointed by me last March in response to a widespread interest and demand from the people. The basis of this demand lay in the general and admitted inability of the railroads to handle promptly the traffic of the country, and especially the crops of the previous fall.

This report is well worth your attention. It is thorough, conservative, sane, and just. It represents the mature judgment of a body of men exceptionally qualified, by personal experience and knowledge of conditions throughout the United States, to understand and discuss the great problem of how best to use our waterways in the interest of all the people. Unusual care has been taken to secure accuracy and balance of statement. If the report errs at all it is by over-conservatism. It contains findings or statements of fact, a number of specific recommendations, and an account of inquiries still in progress, and it is based in part on statistics and other information contained in a voluminous appendix. The subject with which it deals is of critical importance both to the present and the future of our country.

Our river systems are better adapted to the needs of the people than those of any other country. In extent, distribution, navigability, and ease of use they stand first. Yet the rivers of no other civilized country are so poorly developed, so little used, or play so small a part in the industrial life of the nation as those of the United States. In view of the use made of rivers elsewhere, the failure to use our own is astonishing, and no thoughtful man can believe that it will last. The accompanying report indicates clearly the reasons for it and the way to end it.

The Commission finds that it was unregulated railroad competition which prevented or destroyed the development of commerce on our inland waterways. The Mississippi, our greatest natural highway, is a case in point. At one time the traffic upon it was without a rival in any country. The report shows that commerce was driven from the Mississippi by the railroads. While production was limited, the railroads, with their convenient terminals, gave quicker and more satisfactory service than the waterways. Later they prevented the restoration of river traffic by keeping down their rates along the rivers, recouping themselves by higher charges elsewhere. They also acquired water fronts and terminals to an extent which made water competition impossible. Throughout the country the railroads have secured such control of canals and steamboat lines that to-day inland waterway transportation is largely in their hands. This was natural and doubtless inevitable under the circumstances, but it should not be allowed to continue unless under careful Government regulation.

Comparatively little inland freight is carried by boat which is not carried a part of its journey by rail also. As the report shows, the successful development and use of our interstate waterways will require intelligent regulation of the relations between rail and water traffic. When this is done the railroads and waterways will assist instead of injuring each other. Both will benefit, but the chief benefit will accrue to the people in general through quicker and cheaper transportation.

The report rests throughout on the fundamental conception that every waterway should be made to serve the people as largely and in as many different ways as possible. It is poor business to develop a river for navigation in such a way as to prevent its use for power, when by a little foresight it could be made to serve both purposes. We can not afford needlessly to sacrifice power to irrigation, or irrigation to domestic water supply, when by taking thought we may have all three. Every stream should be used to the utmost. No stream can be so used unless such use is planned for in advance. When such plans are made we shall find that, instead of interfering, one use can often be made to assist another. Each river system, from its headwaters in the forest to its mouth on the coast, is a single unit, and should be treated as such. Navigation of the lower reaches of a stream can not be fully developed without the control of floods and low waters by storage and drainage. Navigable channels are directly concerned with the protection of source waters and with soil erosion, which takes the materials for bars and shoals from the richest portions of our farms. The uses of a stream for domestic and municipal water supply, for power, and in many cases for irrigation, must also be taken into full account.

The development of our inland waterways will have results far beyond the immediate gain to commerce. Deep channels along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts and from the Gulf to the Great Lakes will have high value for the national defense. The use of water power will measurably relieve the drain upon our diminishing supplies of coal, and transportation by water instead of rail only will tend to conserve our iron. Forest protection, without which river improvement can not be permanent, will at the same time help to postpone the threatened timber famine, and will secure us against a total dearth of timber by providing for the perpetuation of the remaining woodlands. Irrigation will create the means of livelihood for millions of people, and supplies of pure water will powerfully promote the public health. If the policy of waterway improvement here recommended is carried out, it will affect for good every citizen of the Republic. The National Government must play the leading part in securing the largest possible use of our waterways; other agencies can assist and should assist, but the work is essentially national in its scope.

The various uses of waterways are now dealt with by Bureaus scattered through four Federal Departments. At present, therefore, it is not possible to deal with a river system as a single problem. But the Commission here recommends a policy under which all the commercial and industrial uses of the waterways may be developed at the same time. To that end, Congress should provide some administrative machinery for coordinating the work of the various Departments so far as it relates to waterways. Otherwise there will not only be delay, but the people as a whole will fail to get from our streams the benefits to which they are justly entitled.

The Commission recognizes that the cost of improving our inland waterways will be large, but far less than would be required to relieve the congestion of traffic by railway extension. The benefits of such improvement will be large also, and they will touch the daily life of our people at every point, uniting the interests of all the States and sections of our country. The cost and the benefits should be equitably distributed by cooperation with the States and the communities, corporations, and individuals beneficially affected. I heartily concur in the Commission's recommendation to this end. Such cooperation should result in united effort in carrying out the great duty of improving our inland waterways. While we delay our rivers remain unused, our traffic is periodically congested, and the material wealth and natural resources of the country related to waterways are being steadily absorbed by great monopolies.

Among these monopolies, as the report of the Commission points out, there is no other which threatens, or has ever threatened, such intolerable interference with the daily life of the people as the consolidation of companies controlling water power. I call your special attention to the attempt of the power corporations, through bills introduced at the present session, to escape from the possibility of Government regulation in the interests of the people. These bills are intended to enable the corporations to take possession in perpetuity of national forest lands for the purposes of their business, where and as they please, wholly without compensation to the public. Yet the effect of granting such privileges, taken together with rights already acquired under State laws, would be to give away properties of enormous value. Through lack of foresight we have formed the habit of granting without compensation extremely valuable rights amounting to monopolies on navigable streams and on the public domain. The repurchase at great expense of water rights thus carelessly given away without return has already begun in the East, and before long will be necessary in the West also. No rights involving water power should be granted to any corporations in perpetuity, but only for a length of time sufficient to allow them to conduct their business profitably. A reasonable charge should of course be made for valuable rights and privileges which they obtain from the National Government. The values for which this charge is made will ultimately, through the natural growth and orderly development of our population and industries, reach enormous amounts. A fair share of the increase should be safeguarded for the benefit of the people, from whose labor it springs. The proceeds thus secured, after the cost of administration and improvement has been met, should naturally be devoted to the development of our inland waterways.

The report justly calls attention to the fact that hitherto our national policy has been one of almost unrestricted disposition and waste of natural resources, and emphasizes the fundamental necessity for conserving these resources upon which our present and future success as a nation primarily rests. Running water is a most valuable natural asset of the people, and there is urgent need for conserving it for navigation, for power, for irrigation, and for domestic and municipal supply.

The Commission was appointed to obtain information concerning our waterways as related to the general welfare. Much work was done, but more remains to be done before a plan for their development can be prepared in detail. We need additional information on the flow of our streams, the condition of channels, the amount and cost of water traffic, the requirements for terminals, the area in each watershed which should be kept under forest, and the means of preventing soil waste and the consequent damage to our rivers. But it is neither necessary nor desirable to postpone the beginning of the work until all the facts are obtained. We have suffered heavily in the past from the lack of adequate transportation facilities, and unless a beginning is made promptly we shall suffer still more heavily in the future.

Being without funds or an expert staff, the Commission has confined itself to principles affecting the whole problem and the entire country. Its report is a plea, in the light of actual facts, for simplicity and directness in dealing with the great problem of our inland waterways in the interest of the people. It submits no specific plans or recommendations concerning even the most important projects. The first of these, of course, concerns the Mississippi and its tributaries, whose commercial development will directly affect half our people. The Mississippi should be made a loop of the sea and work upon it should be begun at the earliest possible moment. Only less important is the Atlantic inner passage, parts of which are already under way. The inner passages along the Gulf coast should be extended and connected with the Atlantic waters. The need for the developing of the Pacific coast rivers is not less pressing. Our people are united in support of the immediate adoption of a progressive policy of inland waterway development.

Hitherto our national policy of inland waterway development has been largely negative. No single agency has been responsible under the Congress for making the best use of our rivers, or for exercising foresight in their development. In the absence of a comprehensive plan, the only safe policy was one of repression and procrastination. Frequent changes of plan and piecemeal execution of projects have still further hampered improvement. A channel is no deeper than its shallowest reach, and to improve a river short of the point of effective navigability is a sheer waste of all its costs. In spite of large appropriations for their improvement, our rivers are less serviceable for interstate commerce to-day than they were half a century ago, and in spite of the vast increase in our population and commerce they are on the whole less used.

The first condition of successful development of our waterways is a definite and progressive policy. The second is a concrete general plan, prepared by the best experts available, covering every use to which our streams can be put. We shall not succeed until the responsibility for administering the policy and executing and extending the plan is definitely laid on one man or group of men who can be held accountable. Every portion of the general plan should consider and so far as practicable secure to the people the use of water for power, irrigation, and domestic supply as well as for navigation. No project should be begun until the funds necessary to complete it promptly are provided, and no plan once under way should be changed except for grave reasons. Work once begun should be prosecuted steadily and vigorously to completion. We must make sure that projects are not undertaken except for sound business reasons, and that the best modern business methods are applied in executing them. The decision to undertake any project should rest on actual need ascertained by investigation and judgment of experts and on its relation to great river systems or to the general plan, and never on mere clamor.

The improvement of our inland waterways can and should be made to pay for itself, so far as practicable, from the incidental proceeds from water power and other uses. Navigation should of course be free. But the greatest return will come from the increased commerce, growth, and prosperity of our people. For this we have already waited too long. Adequate funds should be provided, by bond issue, if necessary, and the work should be delayed no longer. The development of our waterways and the conservation of our forests are the two most pressing physical needs of the country. They are interdependent, and they should be met vigorously, together, and at once. The questions of organization, powers, and appropriations are now before the Congress. There is urgent need for prompt and decisive action.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 26, 1908.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 3, 1908.

The PRESIDENT.

SIR: Your attention is respectfully invited to the following preliminary report of the Inland Waterways Commission:

CREATION OF THE COMMISSION.

The Inland Waterways Commission was created by the President of the United States through the following instrument:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 14, 1908.

MY DEAR SIR: Numerous commercial organizations of the Mississippi Valley have presented petitions asking that I appoint a commission to prepare and report a comprehensive plan for the improvement and control of the river systems of the United States. I have decided to comply with these requests by appointing an Inland Waterways Commission, and I have asked the following gentlemen to act upon it. I shall be much gratified if you will consent to serve:

Hon. THEO. E. BURTON, chairman.
Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.
Senator WILLIAM WARNER.
Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD.
Gen. Alexander Mackenzie.
Mr. W. J. McGee.
Mr. F. H. Newell.
Mr. Gifford Pinchot.
Hon. Herbert Knox Smith.

In creating this Commission I am influenced by broad considerations of national policy. The control of our navigable waterways lies with the Federal Government, and carries with it corresponding responsibilities and obligations. The energy of our people has hitherto been largely directed toward industrial development connected with field and forest and with coal and iron, and some of these sources of material and power are already largely depleted, while our inland waterways as a whole have thus far received scant attention. It is becoming clear that our streams should be considered and conserved as great natural resources. Works designed to control our waterways have thus far usually been undertaken for a single purpose, such as the improvement of navigation, the development of power, the irrigation of arid lands, the protection of lowlands from floods, or to supply water for domestic and manufacturing purposes. While the rights of the people to these and similar uses of water must be respected, the time has come for merging local projects and uses of the inland waters in a comprehensive plan designed for the benefit of the entire country. Such a plan should consider and include all the uses to which streams may be put, and should bring together and coordinate the points of view of all users of water. The task involved in the full and orderly development and control of the river systems of the United States is a great one, yet it is certainly not too great for us to approach. The results which it seems to promise are even greater.

It is common knowledge that the railroads of the United States are no longer able to move crops and manufactures rapidly enough to secure the prompt transaction of the business of the nation, and there is small prospect of immediate relief. Representative railroad men point out that the products of the northern interior States have doubled in ten years, while the railroad facilities have increased but one-eighth, and there is reason to doubt whether any development of the railroads possible in the near future will suffice to keep transportation abreast of production. There appears to be but one complete remedy—the development of a complementary system of transportation by water. The present congestion affects chiefly the people of the Mississippi Valley, and they demand relief. When the congestion of which they complain is relieved, the whole nation will share the good results.

While rivers are natural resources of the first rank, they are also liable to become destructive agencies, endangering life and property; and some of our most notable engineering enterprises have grown out of effort to control them. It was computed by Generals Humphreys and Abbott half a century ago that the Mississippi alone sweeps into its lower reaches and the Gulf 400,000,000 tons of floating sediment each year (about twice the amount of material to be excavated in opening the Panama Canal), besides an enormous but unmeasured amount of earth salts and soil matter carried in solution. This vast load not only causes its channels to clog and flood the lowlands of the lower river, but renders the flow capricious and difficult to control. Furthermore, the greater part of the sediment and soil matter is composed of the most fertile material of the fields and pastures drained by the smaller and larger tributaries. Any plan for utilizing our inland waterways should consider floods and their control by forests and other means; the protection of bottom lands from injury by overflow, and uplands from loss by soil wash; the physics of sediment-charged waters and the physical or other ways of purifying them; the construction of dams and locks, not only to facilitate navigation but to control the character and movement of the waters; and should look to the full use and control of our running waters and the complete artificialization of our waterways for the benefit of our people as a whole.

It is not possible to properly frame so large a plan as this for the control of our rivers without taking account of the orderly development of other natural resources. Therefore, I ask that the Inland Waterways Commission shall consider the relations of the streams to the use of all the great permanent natural resources and their conservation for the making and maintenance of prosperous homes.

Any plan for utilizing our inland waterways, to be feasible, should recognize the means for executing it already in existence, both in the Federal Departments of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce and Labor, and in the States and their subdivisions; and it must not involve unduly burdensome expenditures from the National Treasury. The cost will necessarily be large in proportion to the magnitude of the benefits to be conferred, but it will be small in comparison with the $17,000,000,000 of capital now invested in steam railways in the United States—an amount that would have seemed enormous and incredible half a century ago. Yet the investment has been a constant source of profit to the people, and without it our industrial progress would have been impossible.

The questions which will come before the Inland Waterways Commission must necessarily relate to every part of the United States and affect every interest within its borders. Its plans should be considered in the light of the widest knowledge of the country and its people, and from the most diverse points of view. Accordingly, when its work is sufficiently advanced, I shall add to the Commission certain consulting members, with whom I shall ask that its recommendations shall be fully discussed before they are submitted to me. The reports of the Commission should include both a general statement of the problem and recommendations as to the manner and means of attacking it.

Sincerely, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

PROCEEDINGS.

After conference and correspondence between the chairman and other Commissioners, a meeting for organization was held in the United States Capitol beginning April 29 and ending May 3. A second meeting and inspection trip on the Mississippi from St. Louis to the Pates took place May 13 to May 23. A third meeting and inspection trip, first on the Great Lakes from Cleveland to Duluth, next on the Mississippi from St. Paul to Memphis, and then on the Missouri from Kansas City to St. Louis, took place September 21 to October 13. A fourth meeting was held in the United States Capitol beginning on November 25, 1907, for the purpose of preparing a preliminary report; it ended February 3, 1908.

At the first session of the meeting for organization (on April 29), the Commission expressed concurrence in the designation by the President of Mr. BURTON as chairman; and by viva voce votes Senator NEWLANDS and Mr. McGEE were elected vice-chairman and secretary, respectively.

During the organization and two inspecting meetings, thirty formal sessions were held in addition to informal meetings and conferences. At several of these sessions the entire Commission were present; at no session were there fewer than five Commissioners; the average attendance was over seven. During the meeting for the preparation of this report there were twenty-seven sessions, with an average attendance of seven.

While provision was not made for formal hearings, experts on matters entrusted to the Commission were present by invitation at twenty-four sessions; of these experts there were twenty-four (of whom several attended two or more sessions), a majority being now or formerly attachés of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

In addition to the formal sessions, the Commissioners devoted much time to the consideration of the waterways and related matters; two or three Commissioners jointly inspected the upper Missouri, the Columbia and Snake, the Sacramento and San Joaquin, and their leading tributaries; several employed agencies under their direction in collating and digesting data relating to canals, water transportation, etc.; and most of the Commissioners attended conventions and other meetings connected with the development of waterways and related interests.

A journal was kept, including brief minutes of the sessions and itineraries of inspection trips, with stenographic reports of the statements and deliberations of the second and third meetings; and in addition correspondence was conducted and a number of useful manuscript and printed statements were brought together and used in the deliberations of the Commission.

At the eighteenth session a special committee of one was appointed to prepare a list of statutes, etc., relating to water power. Pursuant to action at the twenty-third session (the President of the United States presiding) a letter requesting a conference on the conservation of natural resources was framed and presented to the President on October 4; and at the twenty-fifth session a committee of three was appointed to communicate further with the President on this matter, and also to prepare a preliminary draft of report. The former committee prepared an exhaustive digest of statutes, and the latter held a number of sessions; both committees reported at the fourth meeting.

RESULTS.

The investigations and discussions have resulted in certain statements of fact connected with navigation and other uses of the inland waterways set forth hereinafter as "findings," with certain conclusions set forth as "recommendations," and also certain matters still under discussion which are set forth as "inquiries in progress."

The Commission is fully aware that its creation was due to a demand of the people, and that there exists an expectation in certain localities that the report here presented will include plans extending in detail to the principal waterways of the country. To prepare and consider such plans would require extended study at large expense by engineers and other experts whose services were not available. Under the instructions from the President, and in the absence of funds and of the men and time required for such study, the Commission was necessarily confined in preparing this preliminary report to the more general features of "a comprehensive plan designed for the benefit of the entire country," viz., a statement of principles and an outline of policy, coupled with recommendations which, if adopted, will insure the continuation of the work and the practical application of the principles and policy.

FINDINGS.

1. The possibilities of inland navigation are indicated by the fact that there are in mainland United States some 25,000 miles of navigated rivers and at least an equal amount which are navigable or might be made so by improvement; there are also some 2,500 miles of navigable canals, and over 2,500 miles of sounds, bays, and bayous readily connectable by canals aggregating less than 1,000 miles in length to form inner passages paralleling the Atlantic and Gulf coasts—these being additional to some thousands of miles (reckoned between leading ports) of regularly navigated waters in lakes and land-locked bays. These waterways lie in or along the borders of Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin, i. e., 42 States; while the development of rivers for irrigation, power, and other purposes will also render navigable certain waterways in Arizona, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming. Although it is not probable that any considerable share of this vast mileage of navigable waterways will be improved to a high standard of efficiency at least at an early date, yet the assured growth of the country and the capacity of these waters not only for navigation but for other uses render imperative the necessity for their control and utilization as an asset of almost unlimited value. It is desirable that these waterways, of which portions have been surveyed or improved for purposes of navigation, should be further investigated with a view to the systematic development of interstate commerce in coordination with all other uses of the waters and benefits to be derived from them.

2. While the railways of mainland United States have been notably efficient in extending and promoting the production and commerce of the country, it is clear that at seasons recurring with increasing frequency they are unable to keep pace with production or to meet the requirements of transportation.

3. While navigation of the inland waterways declined with the increase in rail transportation during the later decades of the past century, it has become clear that the time is at hand for restoring and developing such inland navigation and water transportation as upon expert examination may appear to confer a benefit commensurate with the cost, to be utilized both independently and as a necessary adjunct to rail transportation.

4. While the decline of navigation in the inland waterways was largely due to the natural growth and legitimate competition attending railway extension, it is also clear that railway interests have been successfully directed against the normal maintenance and development of water traffic by control of water fronts and terminals, by acquisition or control of competing canals and vessels, by discriminating tariffs, by rebates, by adverse placement of tracks and structures, and by other means.

5. Any complete or practically successful plan for the general improvement of waterways must eventually provide for satisfactory adjustment of the relation of rail lines to such waterways. Since present and prospective railways reach all parts of the country, while navigable waterways are confined to certain natural lines, it is clear that railways can so control transportation as to leave the waterways insufficient traffic to support the requisite vessels and terminals. The railways have accordingly, save in certain exceptional cases, substantially absorbed the traffic of the country, and unless the present ante-stricted and shortsighted competition between the two systems is intelligently adjusted they will continue to do so. So large a portion of railway traffic is free from water competition that railways can readily afford to no reduce rates on those portions affected by such competition as to destroy the profits of the water lines without appreciably affecting the profits of the rail systems, which recoup these reductions by higher rates elsewhere. This has been the case with most of the great inland waterways, excepting the Great Lakes, where the conditions of water and traffic approach those of open seas. In spite of the great increase of traffic and the continued improvement of waterways, the total river traffic of the country has steadily decreased both proportionately and absolutely, with the result that few rivers are used to anything approaching their full capacity. It will not relieve traffic congestion to improve our waterways unless the improved waterways are used; hence it is obvious that relief from the existing congestion by waterway improvement can be made permanently effective only through such coordination of rail and water facilities as will insure harmonious cooperation rather than injurious opposition.

* Details appear in the appended statistical and other papers.

6. Existing data as to the nature and amount of the internal commerce of the country are extremely meager and incomplete. Such information is essential to the intelligent treatment of the inland waterways, and it is desirable that means be employed to obtain it.

7. Improvements of navigation in inland waterways in the main affect favorably the purity of the waters and the regularity of the supply, and these objects should be carefully kept in mind. The increasing pollution of streams by soil wash and other waste substances connected with a growing population reduces the value of the water for manufacturing purposes and renders the water supply for communities injurious to and often destructive of human life. The prevention of these evils should be considered in any scheme of inland waterway improvement.

8. Engineering works designed to improve navigation affect favorably the regimen of the streams, including floods and low waters. The annual floods of the United States occasion loss of property reaching many millions of dollars, with considerable loss of life, while the low water of late summer involves large loss in diminished water supply, in reduced power, and in the fouling of streams, with consequent disease and death. It has been claimed that in specific cases the cost of works required both to control floods and meet the needs of commerce would be less than the amount of this loss. It is desirable that more detailed information be collected concerning the effects of floods and low waters and their prevention by engineering works and other devices.

9. The annual soil wash in mainland United States is estimated at about 1,000,000,000 tons, of which the greater part is the most valuable portion of the soil. It is carried into the rivers, where it pollutes the waters, necessitates frequent and costly dredging, and reduces the efficiency of works designed to facilitate navigation and afford protection from floods. The direct and indirect losses from this source have not been measured, but are exceedingly large; and it is desirable that definite determinations be made, with the view of devising means for reducing the loss of the land and preventing the impairment of the streams for purposes of commerce.

10. Both the regimen of streams and the purity and clarity of waters are affected by forests and other natural growth, and by farming, mining, and other industrial operations over the watersheds in which they gather. Millions of acres in mainland United States have been deforested unnecessarily, and the floods and low waters ascribed to this cause have in some localities occasioned losses commensurate with the value of the timber. Means should be devised and applied for coordinating forestry, farming, mining, and related industries with the uses of streams for commerce and for other purposes.

11. The effect of wide variations in the level of navigable streams is to render difficult the establishment of necessary terminals for the handling of traffic, and thus to interfere seriously with the utilization of our inland waterways. The prevention or mitigation of such variations would be most helpful to the revival of river traffic, and means to this end should be adopted in plans for waterway improvement.

12. The storage of flood waters combined with the diversion of streams to arid and semiarid lands for purposes of reclamation by irrigation creates canals and also tends to clarify the waters and increase the seepage or return waters during times of drought. There have already been put under irrigation over 10,000,000 acres of fertile land, adding a quarter of a million homes and several hundred million dollars of taxable wealth; and it is estimated that by fully conserving the waters and by utilizing the water power developed in connection with storage and other works, fully three times as much land can be reclaimed in the western half of the United States. It is desirable to continue the collection of data with a view to so adjusting irrigation and power development with navigation and other uses of the streams as to secure the highest value of the water to the greatest number of people.

13. Locks and certain other works designed to improve navigation commonly produce head and store water in such manner as to develop power available for industrial purposes, while works designed to develop power on navigable and source streams affect the navigation and other uses of river systems; and these uses must necessarily be considered together. Information concerning water power in the several States and sections is incomplete, yet it is known to be a vast and intrinsically permanent asset which should be utilized for the benefit of the people of the country, in whose interests it should be administered with careful regard for present and prospective conditions. The facts ascertained in certain specific cases furnish a basis for the claim that the value of the power would pay the cost of all engineering and other works required in such cases to control the streams for navigation and other uses. In the light of recent progress in electrical application, it is clear that over wide areas the appropriation of water power offers an unequalled opportunity for monopolistic control of industries. Wherever water is now or will hereafter become the chief source of power, the monopolization of electricity produced from running streams involves monopoly of power for the transportation of freight and passengers, for manufacturing, and for supplying light, heat, and other domestic, agricultural, and municipal necessities, to such an extent that unless regulated it will entail monopolistic control of the daily life of our people in an unprecedented degree. There is here presented an urgent need for prompt and vigorous action by State and Federal governments.

14. Any comprehensive system of improvement of inland waterways will necessarily affect the drainage or reclamation of swamp and overflow lands, which are mainly rich alluvial tracts largely along or near waterways. The construction of dikes and levees or bank-protective works and the deepening of channels are often closely connected with means of control both of overflow and of underflow by drainage. It is estimated that there are 77,000,000 acres of such land, now unproductive, but which with drainage and protection from overflow will have an exceptionally high agricultural value. If divided into 40-acre farms these lands will furnish homes for some 10,000,000 people.

15. The control of waterways on which successful navigation depends is so intimately connected with the prevention of floods and low waters, and works designed for these purposes; with the protection and reclamation of overflow lands, and works designed therefor; with the safeguarding of banks and maintenance of channels, and works employed therein; with the purification and clarification of water supply, and works designed therefor in conjunction with interstate commerce; with control and utilization of power developed in connection with works for the improvement of navigation; with the standardizing of methods and facilities and the coordinating of waterway and railway instrumentalities; and throughout the larger area of the country with reclamation by irrigation and drainage, and works designed primarily for these purposes—that local and special questions concerning the control of waterways should be treated as a general question of national extent, while local or special projects should be considered as parts of a comprehensive policy of waterway control in the interests of all the people.

16. Governmental agencies whose work is related to the use and control of streams are now in existence in the Federal Departments of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce and Labor; and it is desirable in order to prevent duplication of work and function and to avoid unnecessary delays in the development of the inland waterways that means should be provided for coordinating all such agencies.

17. While precise figures are not now obtainable, it is safe to say that the current value of our inland transportation facilities (of which railways form all but a small percentage) exceeds one-eighth of our national wealth; yet these facilities are so far inadequate that production is impaired and the growth of the country is retarded. While trustworthy estimates can not be made without further data, it is reasonable to anticipate that congestion of interstate commerce can be obviated in large measure by judicious improvement of waterways adapted to barge and boat traffic, at a figure much less than that estimated by competent authorities for so increasing railway facilities as to meet present needs. It is desirable that additional data be obtained by requisite expert investigation.

18. It is conservative to estimate that judicious improvement of the waterways of the country will confer direct benefits through increased transportation facilities which will exceed the cost, while the collateral benefits will be at least comparable with the gain to commerce. Under a coordinate plan, such collateral benefits as the enhanced value of lands reclaimed by irrigation and drainage, the value of water power developed, the increased values due to the prevention of floods and low waters, and the great benefits of purified and clarified water, will more than balance the cost of the works.

19. In a comprehensive system of waterway improvement and control designed to meet present and future needs, the practicability of any project will depend not alone on local and general demands of commerce, but measurably upon attendant natural and industrial conditions, including nature of banks and beds, suitability of the ground as a foundation for works, volume of water and liability to floods and low stages, configuration of the watershed and its susceptibility to control by judicious agriculture and forestry or by reservoirs and other means, local and general demand for pure water supply, amount and value of available water power incident to the works, proximity and cost of structural materials, relations to existing and prospective projects on the same and neighboring waterways, and all other physical and economic factors entering into or tending to counterbalance the cost; and the local surveys or plans for any project should take account of all such natural and industrial conditions and be adapted to the attainment of maximum benefits at the minimum cost.

20. Existing data concerning the volume, regimen, and other physical features of most streams are meager and imperfect. Since plans for improving and controlling the waterways and utilizing the waters must rest on these facts, it is desirable that means be employed to extend and perfect physical data relating to the navigable and source streams of the country.

21. The benefits of a comprehensive system of waterway improvement will extend to all the people in the several sections and States of the country; and the means employed should be devised so far as possible to distribute the cost equitably through cooperation between Federal agencies, States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals.

22. In order to improve the inland waterways for navigation and at the same time coordinate the agencies and means of transportation, develop the collateral benefits of waterway improvement, adapt all natural and industrial conditions related with waterways to the attainment of maximum benefits at the minimum cost, and perfect means for distributing the cost equitably between Federal agencies, States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals in a prompt and efficient and economical manner, it is desirable to maintain an administrative agency with large powers for the investigation and elaboration of projects under suitable legislative regulation.

23. The immediate use of natural resources in the rapid development of the country are often allowed to stand in the way of more beneficial and permanent utilization. This is especially true of all resources connected with running waters, the substantial value of which has not been adequately appreciated. It is clearly practicable, without undue expense or interference with current use, to carry out broad plans for the complete development of the resources of the country, and thus assure to the greatest number of people the greatest good for both the present and the future; while if this is not done the temporary or partial development of these resources will prevent their full utilization for the general benefit. Steps should be taken without delay to outline and initiate the more pressing projects of conservation, and to apply practically the principle of conservation before it is too late.

24. Our unsurpassed natural wealth and the eagerness of our people for immediate results regardless of future needs have led to a policy of extravagant consumption of national resources and to an encouragement of monopoly, whereby an excessive share of such resources has been diverted to the enrichment of the few rather than preserved for the equitable benefit of the many. Monopolistic tendencies have appeared (a) in the extensive control of mineral fuels on public lands, whereby large values essential to the development of the country have passed beyond public regulation; (b) in the acquisition and needless destruction of forests, whose preservation is a public necessity for stream control, for timber supply, and for other purposes; (c) in the acquisition of controlling sites on waterways and the appropriation of valuable water powers with their segregation from public use without adequate compensation, whereby, indispensable utilities escape public regulation in the interests of the people; (d) in the segregation of lands, especially in the semiarid regions, whereby development is retarded so that the lands remain without benefit to commerce or advantage to the growth of the country; (e) in the control of products and of transportation to disturb the normal values and natural channels of trade, thereby imposing undue burdens on producers and consumers; and (f) in various interferences with the production and commerce of the country, whereby prosperity is curtailed and progress impeded. While such monopolistic tendencies have been conspicuous in connection with the agencies of transportation, they are now in many cases opposing the best utilization of streams by diverting their control from State and Federal jurisdiction in the public interests to personal and corporate means of excessive and burdensome profit. Since transportation is a primary factor in the existence and development of any people, and is increasingly important with the growth of population, it is essential that its means should be regulated in the public interests; and any plans for relieving congestion of transportation in the United States should be so framed as to employ all proper State, Federal, and municipal agencies in protecting from monopolistic control not only the agencies and avenues but also the materials of interstate commerce.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

A. We recommend that hereafter plans for the improvement of navigation in inland waterways, or for any use of these waterways in connection with interstate commerce, shall take account of the purification of the waters, the development of power, the control of floods, the reclamation of lands by irrigation and drainage, and all other uses of the waters or benefits to be derived from their control.

B. We recommend that hereafter both local and general benefits to the people shall be fully considered in any such plans for the improvement of navigation in inland waterways, or for any use of these waterways in connection with interstate commerce; and that wherever practicable Federal agencies shall cooperate with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals with a view to an equitable distribution of costs and benefits.

C. We recommend that hereafter any plans for the navigation or other use of inland waterways in connection with interstate commerce shall take full account of transfer facilities and sites, and of the location of tracks, grades, bridges, dams, depots, and other works on navigable and source streams with a view to equitable cooperation between waterway and railway facilities for the promotion of commerce and the benefit of the people.

D. We recommend that any plans for improving the inland waterways shall take account of the present and prospective relation of rail lines to such waterways, and shall ascertain, so far as may be, whether such waterways when improved will be effectively used in the face of railway competition, and that the relations between railways and waterways be further examined with the purpose of devising means of rendering the two systems complementary and harmonious and making such fair division of traffic that rates and management may be coordinated economically and with benefit to the country.

E. We recommend the adoption of means for ascertaining regularly all facts related to traffic on the inland waterways and for publishing the same in a form suitable for general use.

F. We recommend the adoption of means for ascertaining and rendering available, at such rate as to meet public necessities, all requisite data related to the physical character and general utility of the navigable and source streams of the country.

G. We recommend that hereafter any plans for the use of inland waterways in connection with interstate commerce shall regard the streams of the country as an asset of the people, shall take full account of the conservation of all resources connected with running waters, and shall look to the protection of these resources from monopoly and to their administration in the interests of the people.

H. We recommend that the Congress be asked to make suitable provision for improving the inland waterways of the United States at a rate commensurate with the needs of the people as determined by competent authority, and we suggest that such provision meet these requisites, viz: Expert framing of a definite policy, certainty of continuity and coordination of plan and work, expert initiative in the choice of projects and the succession of works, freedom in selection of projects in accordance with terms of cooperation, and the widest opportunity for applying modern business methods.

I. We recommend that the Congress be asked to authorize the coordination and proper development of existing public services connected with waterways; and we suggest that such enactment might provide that the President of the United States be authorized, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint and organize a National Waterways Commission to bring into coordination the Corps of Engineers of the Army, the Bureau of Soils, the Forest Service, the Bureau of Corporations, the Reclamation Service, and other branches of the public service in so far as their work relates to inland waterways, and that he be authorized to make such details and require such duties from these branches of the public service in connection with navigable and source streams as are not inconsistent with law; the said Commission to continue the investigation of all questions relating to the development and improvement and utilization of the inland waterways of the country and the conservation of its natural resources related thereto, and to consider and coordinate therewith all matters of irrigation, swamp and overflow land reclamation, clarification and purification of streams, prevention of soil waste, utilization of water power, preservation and extension of forests, regulation of flow and control of floods, transfer facilities and sites and the regulation and control thereof, and the relations between waterways and railways; and that the Commission be empowered to frame and recommend plans for developing the waterways and utilizing the waters, and as authorized by Congress to carry out the same, through established agencies when such are available, in cooperation with States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals, in such manner as to secure an equitable distribution of costs and benefits.

INQUIRIES IN PROGRESS.

I. Those clauses in the instrument creating the Commission advising that "our streams should be considered and conserved as great natural resources," and that the Commission should "consider the relations of the streams to the use of all the great permanent natural resources and their conservation," have received attention and have resulted in action thus far incomplete. The principles so affirmed are fundamental and far-reaching, and demand comprehensive and mature consideration; and it was thought needful to ascertain and adjust the needs of all sections of the country and to invoke the joint judgment of officials of the several States. At the fifteenth session (May 21) it was decided to propose a conference on the conservation of resources, to be held in Washington early in 1908, and a special committee was appointed to present the matter to the President of the United States. At the twenty-third session (October 3), at which the President presided, it was decided to call such a conference in conformity with the desire of the Commission as thus expressed:

ON BOARD STEAMER COL. A. MACKENZIE,
October 3, 1907.

The President,
On Board U. S. S. Mississippi.

SIR: In the course of inquiries made under your direction "that the Inland Waterways Commission shall consider the relations of the streams to the use of all the great permanent natural resources and their conservation for the making and maintenance of prosperous homes," the members of the Commission have been led to feel that it would be desirable to hold a conference on the general subject of the conservation of the natural resources of the nation.

Among the reasons for such a conference are the following:

1. Hitherto our national policy has been one of almost unrestricted disposal of natural resources, and this in more lavish measure than in any other nation in the world's history; and this policy of the Federal Government has been shared in by the constituent States. Three consequences have ensued: First, unprecedented consumption of natural resources; second, exhaustion of these resources, to the extent that a large part of our available public lands have passed into great estates or corporate interests, our forests are so far depleted as to multiply the cost of forest products, and our supplies of coal and iron ore are so far reduced as to enhance prices; and third, unequaled opportunity for private monopoly, to the extent that both the Federal and State sovereignties have been compelled to enact laws for the protection of the people.

2. We are of opinion that the time has come for considering the policy of conserving these material resources on which the permanent prosperity of our country and the equal opportunity of all our people must depend; we are also of opinion that the policy of conservation is so marked an advance on that policy adopted at the outset of our national career as to demand the consideration of both Federal and State sponsors for the welfare of the people.

3. We are of opinion that the conference may best be held in the National Capital next winter, and that the conferees should comprise the governors of all our States and Territories, a limited number of delegates to be appointed by each governor, and representatives from leading organizations of both State and national scope engaged in dealing with natural resources or with practical questions relating thereto.

We have the honor to ask that in case you concur in our view you call such a conference.

Respectfully submitted.

THEODORE E. BURTON, Chairman.
W. J. MCGEE, Secretary.

In his Memphis address on October 4 the President announced the intention of calling such a conference, and on November 13 he issued invitations to the governors of the States and Territories to meet at the White House May 13-15, 1908; the conferees to comprise also three assistants or advisors to be selected by each governor; the Senators and Representatives in the Sixtieth Congress; the members of the Inland Waterways Commission, and representatives of certain national organizations dealing with natural resources. The Commission anticipates from the deliberations of this conference results of the utmost value as regards both conditions and policies.

II. The clauses in the same instrument declaring that "the time has come for merging local projects and uses of the inland waters in a comprehensive plan designed for the benefit of the entire country," and that "such a plan should consider and include all the uses to which streams may be put," has received attention; and while the consideration resulted in several of the foregoing findings and recommendations, the time and means at the disposal of the Commission have been wholly insufficient to frame a comprehensive plan extending in detail to all the waterways of the country. The task is large and is affected by projects for improving waterways and opening canals for navigation and other purposes which are now advocated by numerous associations of citizens in various parts of the United States. These projects are so connected with geographic conditions and with natural resources as to fall into four great systems, viz, (1) the Atlantic-Interior system, comprising the Atlantic watershed, the Mississippi Valley, the Gulf slope, and the Great Lakes with their watershed; (2) the Columbia-Puget system, comprising the territory west of the Rocky Mountains and north of the forty-second parallel of latitude; (3) the California system, comprising the valley of California, and (4) the Colorado system, comprising the watershed of Rio Colorado and the Great Basin of the interior. In the Atlantic-Interior system there are projects for a deep waterway from Gulf of Mexico to the Great Lakes; a deep and continuous Atlantic inner passage from New England to Florida; improving or canalizing Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio rivers with their leading tributaries and connecting the Mississippi waters with the Great Lakes by canals; improving the navigable rivers flowing into Gulf of Mexico and Atlantic Ocean; connecting the Mississippi with the Rio Grande and with the waters of Florida by inner passage, and connecting the Atlantic coast with the Great Lakes by canals. In the Columbia-Puget system there are projects for improving the lower Columbia and the Willamette and Snake for navigation and power development; opening the channels and lakes of the upper Columbia and some of its tributaries to navigation, and constructing feeder and connecting canals, and also for extending reclamation through irrigation, drainage, and the control of floods. In the California system there are projects for improving and canalizing Sacramento, San Joaquin, and Feather rivers and the coastwise bays in such manner as to open California Valley to interstate and foreign commerce, and also for clarifying the streams, preventing floods, and developing power; and in the Colorado system there are projects chiefly thus far for irrigation, but prospectively for navigation and power. In all these systems—indeed, in every State and Territory—the respective obligations of the State and Federal governments to the people and the relations of vested interests are of such complexity as to demand prolonged consideration not only by the Commission, but by State and Federal officials; and it would seem premature to outline a general plan necessarily affecting so many and so varied obligations and interests pending the conference on conservation, at which it may be anticipated that the interests of all the people will be fully represented.

III. The intimation in the same instrument that "any plan for utilizing our inland waterways . . . should recognize the means for executing it already in existence, both in the Federal Departments of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce and Labor and in the States and their subdivisions, and it must not involve unduly burdensome expenditures from the National Treasury," has received attention and has resulted in the eighth and ninth of the foregoing recommendations; yet pending the recommendation of the "comprehensive plan" alluded to in the preceding paragraph, it would be premature to submit estimates of cost.

IV. The suggestion that "the reports of the Commission shall include both a general statement of the problem and recommendations as to the manner and means of attacking it" has received consideration and has led to the foregoing findings and recommendations. The Commission is, however, fully aware of the incompleteness of this report, and is desirous of continuing investigation and discussion with a view to further action.

V. It is to be understood that the inquiries and conclusions herein are of general character, and that the mention of any stream or project does not involve expression of opinion as to the desirability or practicability of doing work upon it.

Respectfully submitted,

THEODORE E. BURTON,
Chairman.

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT OF COMMISSIONER-GENERAL ALEXANDER MACKENZIE.

1. As a member of the Inland Waterways Commission, I am in accord with the general principles enunciated as proper for consideration in connection with the preparation of plans for improvement and control of inland waterways; and with recommendations which advise suitable provision for continuing the improvement of inland waterways at a rate commensurate with the requirements of commerce; and, so far as justifiable, with cooperation between Federal agencies and States, municipalities, and communities with a view to a distribution of costs and benefits; and I am in accord with a suggestion that in the carrying out of examinations and surveys and in the making of plans of improvement of inland waterways, such consideration be given by the War Department to the subject of water power, floods and low water, drainage, and such other related subjects as may have a bearing upon the improvement of navigation and such as Congress, in its wisdom, may provide for.

2. I am in the fullest accord with recommendations looking to the protection to the greatest extent of the natural resources of the country, both in their relation to the interests of navigation and in the interest of multiplying prosperous homes; and I am in accord with the thought of utilizing such resources in every legal and proper way with a view to recompensing the Government for expenditures made in carrying out improvements.

3. I am not fully in accord, however, with the thought that all the related subjects mentioned, important and worthy of consideration by the Government as they may be, are as clearly and necessarily associated with the subject of channel improvement and interstate commerce as is assumed in the report, or that such assumptions can properly be made in all cases without further investigation, including, possibly, some legal questions.

4. I am in accord with the desire of this Commission to continue its investigations and discussions with a view to further consideration of interior-waterway improvements after consultation with transportation experts, and a more detailed consideration of the conservation of natural resources and coordination between the General Government and States after the conference on conservation to be held in May.

5. I can not, however, agree with the recommendation for the establishment at this time of a permanent inland-waterways commission, vested with the authority indicated, in addition to or as a substitute for the existing Commission. Until this Commission shall have fully carried out the duties allotted to it and prepared a comprehensive plan for the improvement and control of the river systems of the United States, or at least until such work is more advanced and results more thoroughly considered, I believe a recommendation for so radical a departure in the methods of planning and executing the improvement of waterways as that proposed is at least premature.

6. Moreover, it is my belief that further investigation will demonstrate that when this Commission shall have completed its labors all necessary cooperation can be secured, and all work proposed for the permanent commission can be equally well provided for by the existing agencies of the Government, and that through such agencies, without the interposition of a permanent commission, improvement of waterways and attention to allied subjects will be more promptly accomplished. While fully appreciating the importance of having general principles and schemes considered and recommended by a commission, as is now being done and as will continue to be done, I have grave fear that the scheme of operations recommended in connection with the proposed permanent commission would be found to be impracticable.

A. MACKENZIE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT OF COMMISSIONER-SENATOR FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

I concur in the report of the Commission, but desire to emphasize my belief that it is of the highest importance that in dealing with subjects relating to the respective powers, rights, and interests of the nation, States, municipalities, corporations, and individuals, large powers and a comparatively free hand should be given to an administrative body of experts in the full development of projects, lest the complexity of the transactions, the time necessary to secure Congressional approval, and difference of view as to purpose or method, may result in indecision and delay, the worst enemies of effective development.

An ample fund should be provided, to be reinforced from time to time either by legislative appropriation or by bond issue, and the administrative board or commission should be given the power, not only to investigate projects, but also, when determined to be feasible, to enter, with the approval of the President, upon their immediate execution; but the power should be limited so as to prevent such administrative body from entering into any contract unless there are sufficient unappropriated moneys in the fund to meet the cost thereof.

Unless some method of construction and development, insuring prompt decision and execution and continuous and consecutive work by a body of experts is adopted, I fear that the best of projects may be wrecked in the shoals and quicksands of legislation.

FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

APPENDIX B.

Resolutions adopted by the governors at the White House conference May 16, 1908.

We, the governors of the States and Territories of the United States of America, in conference assembled, do hereby declare the conviction that the great prosperity of our country rests upon the abundant resources of the land chosen by our forefathers for their homes and where they laid the foundation of this great nation.

We look upon these resources as a heritage to be made use of in establishing and promoting the comfort, prosperity, and happiness of the American people, but not to be wasted, deteriorated, or needlessly destroyed.

We agree that our country's future is involved in this; that the great natural resources supply the material basis upon which our civilization must continue to depend, and upon which the perpetuity of the nation itself rests.

We agree, in the light of the facts brought to our knowledge and from information received from sources which we can not doubt, that this material basis is threatened with exhaustion. Even as each succeeding generation from the birth of the nation has performed its part in promoting the progress and development of the Republic, so do we in this generation recognize it as a high duty to perform our part, and this duty, in large degree, lies in the adoption of measures for the conservation of the natural wealth of the country.

We declare our firm conviction that this conservation of our natural resources is a subject of transcendent importance, which should engage unremittingly the attention of the nation, the States, and the people in earnest cooperation. These natural resources include the land on which we live, and which yields our food; the living waters which fertilize the soil, supply power, and form great avenues of commerce; the forests which yield the materials for our homes, prevent erosion of the soil, and conserve the navigation and other uses of our streams; and the minerals which form the basis of our industrial life, and supply us with heat, light, and power.

We agree that the lands should be so used that erosion and soil wash shall cease, that there should be reclamation of arid and semiarid regions by means of irrigation, and of swamp and overflowed regions by means of drainage; that the waters should be so conserved and used as to promote navigation, to enable the arid regions to be reclaimed by irrigation, and to develop power in the interests of the people; that the forests which regulate our rivers, support our industries, and promote the fertility and productiveness of the soil should be preserved and perpetuated; that the minerals found so abundantly beneath the surface should be so used as to prolong their utility; that the beauty, healthfulness, and habitability of our country should be preserved and increased; that the sources of national wealth exist for the benefit of all the people, and that monopoly thereof should not be tolerated.

We commend the wise forethought of the President in sounding the note of warning as to the waste and exhaustion of the natural resources of the country, and signify our high appreciation of his action in calling this conference to consider the same and to seek remedies therefor through cooperation of the nation and the States.

We agree that this cooperation should find expression in suitable action by the Congress within the limits of and coextension with the national jurisdiction of the subject, and, complementary thereto, by the legislatures of the several States within the limits of and coextensive with their jurisdiction.

We declare the conviction that in the use of the natural resources our independent States are interdependent and bound together by ties of mutual benefits, responsibilities, and duties.

We agree in the wisdom of future conferences between the President, Members of Congress, and the governors of the States on the conservation of our natural resources with the view of continued cooperation and action on the lines suggested. And to this end we advise that from time to time, as in his judgment may seem wise, the President call the governors of the States, Members of Congress, and others into conference.

We agree that further action is advisable to ascertain the present condition of our natural resources and to promote the conservation of the same. And to that end we recommend the appointment by each State of a commission on the conservation of natural resources, to cooperate with each other and with any similar commission on behalf of the Federal Government.

We urge the continuation and extension of forest policies adapted to secure the husbanding and renewal of our diminishing timber supply, the prevention of soil erosion, the protection of headwaters, and the maintenance of the purity and navigability of our streams. We recognize that the private ownership of forest lands entails responsibilities in the interests of all the people, and we favor the enactment of laws looking to the protection and replacement of privately owned forests.

We recognize in our waters a most valuable asset of the people of the United States, and we recommend the enactment of laws looking to the conservation of water resources for irrigation, water supply, power, and navigation, to the end that navigable and source streams may be brought under complete control and fully utilized for every purpose.

We especially urge on the Federal Congress the immediate adoption of a wise, active, and thorough waterway policy, providing for the prompt improvement of our streams and conservation of their watersheds required for the uses of commerce and the protection of the interests of our people.

We recommend the enactment of laws looking to the prevention of waste in the mining and extraction of coal, oil, gas, and other minerals with a view to their wise conservation for the use of the people, and to the protection of human life in the mines.

Let us conserve the foundations of our prosperity.

Respectfully submitted,

APPENDIX C.

A bill (S. 7183) for the appointment of a national commission for the conservation of natural resources, and defining its duties.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, a commission, not to exceed fifteen in number, and to organize the same for the investigation of all questions relating to the conservation, use, and control of the water resources of the United States for navigation, irrigation, municipal supply, power, and swamp-land reclamation, to the prevention of floods and the maintenance of stream control, to the prevention of waste in the mining and extraction of coal, oil, gas, and other minerals, to the protection of human life in the mines, and to the prevention of erosion and soil wash; to the conservation of the forests, to the preservation of the public domain for home seekers, to the protection of the timber, coal, iron, and oil lands of the United States against absorption by monopoly, and for the investigation of all other questions relating to the conservation of the natural resources of the United States for the preservation of its beauty, healthfulness, and habitability.

SEC. 2. That such commission shall cooperate with commissions or boards appointed by the respective States for similar purposes, with a view to recommending suitable action relating to the conservation of the natural resources of the United States by Congress within the limits of and coextensive with national jurisdiction of the subject and complementary thereto by the legislatures of the several States within the limits of and coextensive with their jurisdiction.

SEC. 3. That such commission shall be known as the "National Commission for the Conservation of Natural Resources."

SEC. 4. That such commission shall make to the President annually, and at such other periods as may be required either by law or by the order of the President, full and complete reports of all their acts, doings, recommendations, and expenditures, which reports shall be by the President transmitted to the Congress.

SEC. 5. That the President shall cause to be provided for the use of such commission and its employees under this act such offices in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and such equipment, as may be necessary for the proper discharge of its duties.

SEC. 6. That in order to carry out the purposes of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of the funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, to be expended under the direction of the President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole, and if there be no amendment it will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to know whether the bill applies to surveys of certain rivers.

Mr. NELSON. No, nothing of that kind. It is not a river and harbor bill.

Mr. McLAURIN. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether there is anything in the bill in reference to the joint resolution that was adopted by the Senate requiring the carrying of material and equipment for the construction of the Panama Canal in vessels owned by the United States?

Mr. NELSON. There is nothing of that kind in the bill.

Mr. McLAURIN. The reason why I asked the question was because there was an amendment to it which made the resolution practically unobjectionable, but which amendment, as I understand, was stricken out in the House.

Mr. NELSON. It is not in the bill, nor anything pertaining to that matter.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator give a short explanation of the bill?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; I can give a very brief explanation of it.

The first section of the bill, which is a House bill, provides that in case vessels make triweekly trips or oftener between our ports and foreign ports they shall not be required to take out a license and clear on every trip. That is the rule now in reference to ferryboats plying right across the Detroit River. The Commissioner of Navigation favors the proposition because he says there are only two places where it would have any application, in Puget Sound and on the coast of Maine.

The next provision of the bill is simply to amend the law in reference to the matter of licensing engineers of steam vessels. Under existing law as it is framed an engineer is not required to be examined and take out a license unless he is an engineer on watch, and that phrase is changed; that is all.

The third provision in the bill relates to the matter of tourists' boats plying short distances, as in New York Harbor and other places. Under existing law they are required to keep a list of names of passengers. The bill amends the law so that they are only required to keep a list of the number. It does not apply to ocean-going vessels.

Another provision of the bill relates to the matter of scows carrying refuse matter from New York Harbor into the sea. While there is a good deal on that subject in the bill, it is most of it a reenactment. The part of the bill that is new simply relates to the matter of requiring appliances of navigation that shall make the navigation of those scows safe and prescribing rules as to towlines and in other respects.

Another provision provides for an inspector of hulls and boilers in Hawaii and in Porto Rico for the convenience of navigation. At present inspection is done here on the mainland, and it is considered to be for the convenience of navigation that inspectors of hulls and boilers should be appointed, one in Porto Rico and one in Hawaii.

I think those are all the material provisions of the bill. I could explain it more at length, but I am unwilling to take up the time of the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF POSTMASTERS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. TELLER on this day directing the Secretary of the Treasury to have stated and audited in the office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department the salary accounts of former postmasters who served at post-offices in the various States and Territories of the United States in terms between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, when,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment offered as a substitute by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK].

Mr. KEAN. What is the substitute?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the substitute.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have stated and audited in the Sixth Auditor's office the salary accounts of former postmasters who served at post-offices in the various States and Territories of the United States in terms between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, and who applied to the Postmaster-General prior to January 1, 1887, for payment of increased salary under the act of March 3, 1883, such salary accounts to be stated upon the registered returns of each postmaster for each term of service specified, and by the method and rule laid down by the Postmaster-General for the statement and payment of salary accounts of former postmasters under the act of March 3, 1883, in his public order of February 16, 1884, directing payment of salaries by commissions and box rents, less the salaries paid at time of service; and to enable the Secretary of the Treasury the better to comply with this resolution the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to turn over to the Sixth Auditor all the data now in his hands pertaining to each and every such claim, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to report to the Senate as many such stated salary accounts of former postmasters, by States, as soon as they can be made ready.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. Do I understand that the amendment is to be voted on now? How does the resolution come before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. KEAN. Then I think it ought to go over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is before the Senate, without objection. The Chair put the question in the morning hour, and there was no objection.

Mr. KEAN. This is an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Colorado?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. KEAN. As I understand the question, these are purely claims against the Government of the United States that have been filed and have been audited by the Post-Office Department. Is that correct?

Mr. DICK. Audited by the Auditor for the Post-Office Department.

Mr. KEAN. And now the object is to have them audited by the Treasury.

Mr. DICK. No; audited and reported.

Mr. KEAN. They have not been reported to Congress at any time?

Mr. DICK. They have not.

Mr. KEAN. They have never been reported to Congress?

Mr. DICK. They have not.

Mr. KEAN. They have appeared here several times.

Mr. DICK. In piecemeal, but not in entirety.

Mr. KEAN. Has the Senator any idea as to the amount of these claims?

Mr. DICK. I have not.

Mr. KEAN. They are all audited.

Mr. DICK. I am not sure as to that. I understand that a part of them are audited—perhaps a fifth or sixth of them.

Mr. KEAN. Of course if the Senate wants to adopt the resolution, I shall not oppose it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. DICK. I do.

Mr. CARTER. I suppose the resolution is up for consideration, and I desire to take the floor in my own right in connection with it whenever the floor is available.

Mr. KEAN. The floor is available now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. DICK. I yield. I did not understand that I had the floor except for the purpose of answering the question of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I understand this to be a resolution similar to one to which I directed some objections some time ago, probably two years ago. The resolution had at that time passed the Senate, and having passed the Senate it attracted the attention of the Treasury officials. In the closing hours of Congress, in obedience to a request from the Treasury Department, I moved that the vote by which the resolution was passed be reconsidered.

That motion prevailed. My information at that time was that the statement of the respective accounts in the resolution referred to would require the service of high-grade clerks, none, I believe, according to the statement made, drawing less than $1,600 per annum and the number to be employed being quite large and for a period of six months, the amount of the expense to be incurred in making the statement, I understood, would be great.

After that action in the Senate I received numerous letters from ex-postmasters and the heirs of ex-postmasters, in each case accompanied by a letter from an attorney in the city of Washington, announcing that I had been the means of preventing the aforesaid ex-postmasters or their heirs from gaining certain access to the Treasury on an account, of which the ex-postmasters had never heard and of which the heirs had no knowledge until addressed by counsel learned in the law, who advised them that, through the meddlesome disposition of the Senator from Montana, they were being kept out of the payment of certain sums of money which were justly due them.

This class of correspondence caused me to give some attention to the nature of the claims covered by the resolution. I think the former resolution was broader in its scope than the one here presented, but this is broad enough covering a period, I believe, of ten years.

Now, the facts seem to be that, by a certain critical analysis, comparison of dates and laws and rules and regulations, counsel, desiring to stimulate business and see justice done at the same time, have figured out that several million dollars can be obtained from the Treasury for the benefit of people who accepted their pay at the time as in full for services rendered, wholly unconscious of the fact that anything else was due, and blissfully ignorant of these aforesaid laws, rules, and regulations, out of which, through construction and the incidental aid of Congress, a vast number of claims can be given standing, the names of the claimants can be disclosed, and a thriving business done.

These old matters have been long since settled and laid away by both the Post-Office Department and the Treasury Department. A portion of these claims has been presented individually, I believe, and paid. My contention is this: That if any individual asserting a claim against the United States will bring it forward, have it duly considered in the Department and in committee and presented to the Senate, we may vote for the payment of that claim; but I am unalterably opposed to advertising for claimants to come forward and assert claims against the Government as old as these claims are. They are sleeping quietly; and I would have them rest in peace, unless some one suffering conscious loss will come forward with the proofs, and then, in response to regular inquiries directed through the committees of Congress to the Departments, the facts can be elicited and justice can be done.

I think the resolution ought not to pass; and I hope it will not pass. I have said to every one in my section of the country who has written me on this question that if they would submit the facts, showing an equitable or a legal right, it would be a great pleasure to me to see justice done to them; but that in meting out justice to my constituents or citizens of the State of Montana, I did not wish to combine with others to issue a general invitation to anybody who might desire so to do to come into the Treasury of the United States with a stale claim, and get a payment which probably was never anticipated by the party, and can only be fixed upon the Government by a course of hypercritical construction of rules, regulations, and law.

The claims have been settled, the parties have been satisfied, and there is nothing in this proposition, in my humble judgment, but that which has been vitalized by the splendid, persistent, and acute efforts of counsel learned in the law and anxious for its rewards.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, these are claims under the law which have been decided by the Department of the Government having charge of this matter as properly due to these people. There is about $13,000 due to citizens of Colorado. None of these claims arose earlier than 1870. By 1884 the claimants had put their claims before the Postmaster-General, each individually, and they have been stated as due. I understand there are several States in which there are such claims. I do not know how much they amount to in the aggregate, but I do know that we should not measure our debts and their justness by their amount, whether it be small or great. If the Government of the United States owes this money to these people, it ought to pay it.

I have a list of claimants before me, whose claims I have been trying for the last five years to have paid. I have, however, always been met by just the same objection with which we are met in this case, that there are some attorneys somewhere who get up these claims. Mr. President, no attorney has ever said a word to me about them. There is not one of these men in Colorado who I believe has an attorney, or at least they have so declared to me.

If this debt is properly due—and the Department has repeatedly so declared—we simply have asked here to have a proper statement made. That is all I ask in the resolution which I have offered. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Dick] has offered a substitute for my resolution, because mine only deals with a part of the claims. There is a list of the claims in the different States. About half of the sum claimed has been paid, the other half being still due. I have on my list the names of some men whom I know personally. I had a letter not long ago from the widow of one of these men, a man who was a soldier and who rose to be a captain in his service during the civil war. I think he is entitled to about $900. I got a letter from his widow, saying that unless this was paid her she did not see any way to live, except to go into the poorhouse of the county in which she resided. I received a letter from another one, who is entitled to about the same amount. He was also a soldier during the late war, a man of high character, and he has sent me the communication which I am going to read. After making some comment on the fact that for years he has been trying to get this sum—he was a postmaster soon after he came out of the Army—he makes the following quotation from the Legal Adviser—a statement which I think fills the bill and fits the case:

The Government of the United States is the most cruel and rapacious creditor and the most dishonest debtor in this country. If a man has a claim against the Government which needs the kindness of Congress, he had better destroy all evidence of the debt so that future generations may not be distressed and made bankrupt in an effort to collect the claim. (Legal Adviser, vol. 3, No. 4, p. 31.)

Mr. President, the statement that these men are to come to Congress with claims, some of them not over two or three hundred dollars—

Mr. GALLINGER. Some of them much less.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; some of them not more than $50.

Mr. GALLINGER. And some not more than twenty or thirty dollars.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; some not more than twenty or thirty dollars. To compel these claimants to come here and submit their claims would cost more than the claims would be worth, and it would cost Congress twice as much in time spent as it would to pay them. These claims are all stated by the Department, and must be stated by the Department. They will not be paid unless the officials declare the amounts to be due. I do not see why these people should be compelled to come here, and why I should be compelled to introduce a bill for John Smith and John Jones to have the Government pay them so small a debt.

I find among these claims some for $46, $140, and $200. There is one of these claimants—and that is the man who sent me this clipping—who is as respectable and honorable a man as there is in the country anywhere, to whom the Government owes $1,800. It is not a great sum, but it is a great deal to a man who earns his own living. Here is another claim for $1,500. Here is one for $300; and so on. None of them is excessive. As I said, one is for $1,800, and I believe there is another for the same amount; but the aggregate is $13,000 for claimants in the State of Colorado.

I insist that this disposition of the matter is consistent with honesty and good administration of public affairs. It is no answer, Mr. President, to say that some shrewd lawyer discovered that the Government owed this money. It does not make any difference how that was found out. Does the Government owe it? That is what we want to find out. We have had the statement made repeatedly from the Department that the Government does owe it, and we want the statement now made in an authoritative form, which will enable us to make some appropriation when the next appropriation bill comes up. If it amounts to $2,000,000—which I think perhaps it does, though I do not know, but it is somewhere in that neighborhood—then we had better pay it. That is all I have to say, Mr. President.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I inquire whether this resolution has ever been referred to a committee of the Senate and has ever been passed upon by a committee?

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, the resolution has not been referred to a committee at this session of Congress. In former Congresses it has. In this session it was introduced in December and laid on the table, where it has been ever since. I presume the very best reason for that is that there was no committee to which it could with propriety be referred, and so it was placed upon the table. I do not know to what committee the Chair could refer it; I do not know to what committee I would request the Chair should refer it. It is not a matter for the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, since that committee has nothing to do with the auditing of accounts of postmasters; nor do I know of any other Senate committee that deals with the matter of auditing departmental accounts. It was for that reason that the matter went to the table without a request for reference.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I do not criticize the course taken—

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to say a word there?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have here the statement that was furnished me by the Post-Office Department showing the amounts standing on their books as due to the claimants. I had it all copied and put it in with my former resolution, which I called up some time ago, but which was objected to; and by arrangement I allowed the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Dick] to present his resolution, because his is a little more comprehensive than mine.

Mr. DICK. The difference, Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. DICK. The difference between the resolution of the Senator from Colorado and the one which I have proposed as a substitute is this: His resolution provides for about one-sixth of the accounts, while mine provides for all the accounts of all the postmasters who served in the various States of the Union. I hardly know why I should request the accounts of the postmasters of Ohio alone. I think it better that we should request that the accounts of the postmasters of all the States who were in like situation should be reported to the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I did not rise to put the question for the purpose of offering criticism; but I do think that had a committee been charged with an examination of this matter, they could have advised us of the amount involved and the expenditure necessary to make this statement. If the statement as made to me over the telephone wire on a former occasion is correct, I assume that it will be necessary to make some appropriation for an additional force of clerks to make this statement, because the work of the Department is so distributed that it is scarcely conceivable that the number of high-grade clerks necessary to make the statement in six months could be withdrawn from the current business of the Department.

Mr. DICK. If the Senator from Montana will allow me, I will make a brief explanation with reference to that.

Mr. CARTER. I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. DICK. The principal objection to previous resolutions was based upon the additional clerk hire that would be required to furnish the statements. A modified resolution is offered at this time in that regard, so that the statements shall be furnished to the Senate only so fast as they may be completed. If they were required to be furnished within a given time, I can understand how it would be necessary, perhaps, to increase the clerical force; but under the language of the resolution ample time is given to the Department to make these reports to the Senate as they complete them.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I submit to the Senate that from the statement presented by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], drawn, I assume, from the Treasury books, showing certain balances due to individuals, there can be no objection to an appropriation, but to require a general search over the books of the Treasury Department to ascertain every little item that may be due to every person on account of some service between 1864 and 1874, and to make payment to persons who in the main are making no demand on the Government, seems to me an extraordinary movement upon the part of Congress.

I have not examined the facts in reference to the particular case in any instance, nor have I gone into a critical examination of the law and the rules and their construction upon which this class of claims is based. I do feel, however, that the Senate should be advised of the nature of the claims, the legal conditions out of which the claims arose, and the equity connected with them, and, therefore, the duty on the part of Congress, if the equity be strong, of departing from a course of procedure which has been uniform on the part of the Government of waiting the presentation of some demand for money before going out to make an offer of it. He is said to be very good pay who pays on demand.

Two million dollars are said to be involved in this matter, and there are but very few persons coming forward to make a claim of any kind for the amount. We ought to pay those who make demand; but to go into the highways and byways with the money of the Government and insist that people who are not claiming it at all shall receive it for the public good and their private advantage seems a super-serviceable line of work on the part of Congress.

I think the claims of the Colorado citizens, tabulated and stated as shown by the Senator from Colorado, ought to be included in an appropriation bill and promptly paid. I can not see that any objection could be urged to that; nor do I see why, if the Senator from Ohio were to procure a statement of accounts due citizens of Ohio now capable of being located, an appropriation ought not to be made for the payment of such citizens, but, Mr. President, a great many of these alleged claimants can not now be found. Would it be our duty, after ascertaining the amounts due, to pay for advertisements to the end that they might be located, or if they are dead, that their heirs might be located in the different States? Then we might go further and ask that the heirs should have an adjudication in some court of competent jurisdiction to show the respective amounts they would be entitled to in a division. All of this ought to be done by Congress if we are to begin the advertising and examination system on our own motion.

I have been in Congress now, in both Houses, a long while, and I say here, without any mental reservation, that I never have had a single claim of this character presented to me by any citizen of the country, save and except a citizen stimulated by an advertisement of some lawyer. That is not true in all cases. The Senator from Colorado, with his usual remarkable diligence in looking after the interests of his people and State, has gone in person to the Department for the purpose of securing the names and the amounts due to persons who served the Government between 1860 and 1874, in the respective post-offices.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have all done that.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from New Hampshire has done the same, but this resolution proposes to do more.

Mr. DICK. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. DICK. My recollection is that the Senator from Montana has for a long time served on the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate, and to that committee at various times have been submitted resolutions by various Senators which, so far as I know, have never been reported. That is in answer to his complaint that these matters have never been invited to his attention. Here is a resolution offered by the late Senator Hanna, of Ohio; one offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]; one offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]; one offered by former Senator Mason, of Illinois; one offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]; one offered by the late Senator Platt, of Connecticut; one offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]; one by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]; one by former Senator Quarles, of Wisconsin; one by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and one by the late Senator from Vermont, Mr. Proctor.

I hardly think it fair to say of these resolutions that they were prompted by the diligence of an overactive attorney at law. My judgment is that in each instance they were presented upon request of constituents of the Senators. But whether they were or not, whether they were the result of activity upon the part of an attorney at law, about which I know nothing, is not the question, as it seems to me, which is before the Senate. The question is whether we can get from the Treasury an accounting of the sums due certain public officials. We are not asking the public officials what their accounts are. There does not seem to be any dispute as to the amount. The question is whether the Government of the United States owes them anything; and we are asking the Government—not these ex-postmasters—what those sums are.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I interrupt the Senator to say that, while I have introduced no resolution on the subject, I have a claim which has been sent to me directly by one of my constituents without any intervention of an attorney, upon this same line; and possibly there are other Senators in the same position.

Mr. DICK. I thank the Senator from Montana for yielding to me.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I think this resolution should go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and I hope the Senator will not object to that reference.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, there is no propriety in its reference. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has absolutely nothing to do with this question. It does not deal with the matter of salaries. It is a question of auditing and not a question of pay. I am a member of the Post-Office Committee and would be as insistent for its reference to that committee, if it ought to go there, as any member of it could possibly be; but the question is solely one, as it seems to me, for the Senate, and not for any committee. I do not think, therefore, there should be any reference, unless, in the wisdom of the Senate, it should be referred to some special committee appointed for that particular purpose.

Mr. CARTER. Does the Senator understand that the Post-Office Department recognizes liability in the cases referred to in the resolution?

Mr. DICK. I do not know what the attitude of the Post-Office Department at the present time is upon this matter, Mr. President.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I think the Department concerned should at least be consulted and some expression of its opinion with reference to the merits of the claims should be on our record.

Mr. DICK. Referring to that, I would say that when the matter is taken up for final disposition the suggestion would be a very good one. What we want to know is every feature connected with these claims, not only their amount, but all questions as to their legality or equity or the propriety of their payment, but, first of all, a statement, duly audited, from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Until 1864, under the law of June 22, 1854, the compensation of postmasters was upon the basis of payment to them of a commission on postage collected and box rents (act of June 22, 1854):

Be it enacted, etc., That in place of the compensation now allowed deputy postmasters, the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow them commissions at the following rates on the postage collected at their respective offices in each quarter of the year, and in due proportion for any period less than a quarter, viz:

On any sum not exceeding $100, 60 per cent; but any postmaster at whose office the mail is to arrive regularly between the hours of 9 o'clock at night and 5 o'clock in the morning may be allowed 70 per cent on the first $100;

On any sum over and above $100, and not exceeding $400, 50 per cent; and

On any sum over and above $400, but not exceeding $2,400, 40 per cent;

And on all sums over $2,400, 15 per cent;

On the amount of postage on letters and packages received at a distributing office for distribution, 12½ per cent commission may be allowed.

Every postmaster, when compensation shall not exceed $500 in one quarter, shall be allowed 1 cent on every free letter delivered out of his office, except such as are for the postmaster himself. But the special allowance now made by law to the postmasters at New Orleans and Washington City shall not otherwise be increased or diminished;

Each postmaster who shall be required to keep a register of the arrival and the departure of the mails shall be allowed 10 cents on each monthly return which he makes to the Postmaster-General;

Each postmaster may be allowed 2 mills for the delivery from his office to a subscriber of each newspaper not chargeable with postage: Provided, etc., (P. 298, vol. 10, Stat. L.)

In the year 1864, by the act of July 1 of that year, it was provided that they should be paid a salary based on the average of the annual compensation for the two years preceding July 1, 1864, with provisions for readjustment, this readjustment being intrusted to the discretion of the Postmaster-General, the purpose being to make the salary equal to the commission and box rents (act of July 1, 1864):

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted that the Postmaster-General shall review once in two years, and in special cases, upon satisfactory representation, as much oftener as he may deem expedient, and readjust, on the basis of the preceding section, the salary assigned by him to any officer; but any change made in such salary shall not take effect until the first day of the quarter next following such order, and all orders made assigning or changing salaries shall be made in writing and recorded in his journal and notified to the Auditor for the Post-Office Department. (P. 335, vol. 13, Stat. L.)

The Postmaster-General, by section 474 of the Postal Regulations of 1866 and published orders pursuant thereto, held that this was the intent of the act of 1864, but in its operations it proved very inequitable.

Postal Regulations, sections 474 and 476:

Sec. 474. The salaries of postmasters are established upon the basis of all the revenue of their post-offices during the two years preceding the passage of the law—i. e., 1863 and 1864. Box rents are included in these revenues. Every postmaster receives in the form of salary as much compensation as he formerly received from commissions and box rents.

Sec. 476. Where the justice of the case demands, the Postmaster-General has the authority to readjust salaries oftener than once in two years, and under this provision of law all inaccuracies and inadequate or excessive allowances of salary can be readily readjusted.

Postal Regulations of 1866 declaring the intent of the salary act of July 1, 1864:

It was not the intention of Congress by the amendment of 1866 to repeal any part of the statute of 1864. The latter statute was to stand, the amendment simply securing to officers of the designated classes the right to have their biennial adjustments of salaries made upon the basis of the act of 1854 instead of the act of 1864, whenever they could save 10 per cent by this course.

If, in fact, there are cases in which it appeared from the quarterly returns or from sworn reports of receipts and business that postmasters of the third, fourth, and fifth class at the biennial readjustment had their salaries fixed under the act of 1864, when, by an adjustment under the act of 1854, 10 per cent or more would have been added to their salaries, then under the act of 1883 such postmasters are entitled to whatever additional sum they would and should have received under the act of 1854.

Public order of the Postmaster-General of June 9, 1883, declaring the intent of the salary act of June 12, 1866, section 8, and of March 3, 1883:

In all cases in which it appears from the biennial adjustment of salaries of postmasters of the third, fourth, and fifth classes that they receive 10 per cent or more less than they would have received in commissions under the act of 1854 they are now entitled under the act of March 3, 1883, to the difference between what was paid them and what they would receive as commissions under the act of 1854. He also holds that it is not the intention of Congress by the acts of 1864 and 1866 to dispense with the biennial readjustments. It follows that a claimant under the act of March 3, 1883, must show that the acts subsequent to 1854 deprived him of 10 per cent or more of what he should have received if those statutes had not been enacted and he had been compensated on the basis of the act of 1854.

By section 8 of the act of 1866 the attempt was made to provide for the injustice that had been done in the change to a salary basis, and it was enacted that when the quarterly returns upon which the salary was based showed that the salary allowed was 10 per cent less than it would have been on the basis of commissions, then the salary should be readjusted so that the compensation should be equal as salary to what it would have been as commissions. If it was not as much as 10 per cent less than the commissions and box rents, then the difference was to be disregarded. (Act June 12, 1866:)

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to establish salaries for postmasters, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1864, be amended by adding the following: Provided, That when the quarterly returns of any postmaster of the third, fourth, or fifth class show that the salary allowed is 10 per cent less than it would be on the basis of commissions under the act of 1854, fixing compensation, then the Postmaster-General shall review and readjust under the provisions of said section.

This readjustment, however, was held to apply only to the salary for the succeeding term of two years, so that the postmaster who had actually earned the money would lay a basis for his successor's increase, but unless he was his own successor, though he had done the work to earn an increased salary and to enlarge the revenue, he would get only the salary fixed at the beginning of his term.

In 1878 suit brought in the Court of Claims and there decided in favor of the claimant was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. J. K. McLean. The opening sentence of the court's opinion is as follows:

The case of the claimant appears to be a hard one, but we think he has no remedy by suit in the Court of Claims.

The facts of that case are (they are not fully set out in the court's opinion) that McLean served as postmaster at Florence, Kans., from April 14, 1871, to June 30, 1872, and returned to the Post-Office Department $1,148, of which $70.20 was from the rent of boxes constructed at his own expense, which cost several hundred dollars. Under the law of 1854 his commissions and box rents would have amounted to $659.20, and he fairly earned this amount, but he was paid as salary just $8.48, this salary being based on the income of the office for the two years prior to 1871.

The large number of cases in which such injustice was done and this decision of the Supreme Court that no relief could be afforded them by the courts led those suffering to seek relief at the hands of Congress, and at their instance the act of 1883 was passed (act Mar. 3, 1883):

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to readjust the salaries of all postmasters and late postmasters of the third, fourth, and fifth classes, under the classification provided for in the act of July 1, 1864, whose salaries have not heretofore been readjusted under the terms of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, who made sworn returns of receipts and business for readjustment of salary to the Postmaster-General, the First Assistant Postmaster-General, or the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, or who made quarterly returns in conformity to the then existing laws and regulations, showing that the salary allowed was 10 per cent less than it would have been upon the basis of commissions under the act of 1854, such readjustment to be made in accordance with the mode presented in section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, and to date from the beginning of the quarter succeeding that in which such sworn returns of receipts and business or quarterly returns were made: Provided, That every readjustment of salary under this act shall be upon a written application signed by the postmaster or late postmaster or legal representative entitled to said readjustment, and that each payment made shall be by warrant or check on the Treasurer or some assistant treasurer of the United States, made payable to the order of said applicant, and forwarded by mail to him at the post-office within whose delivery he resides, and which address shall be set forth in the application above provided for. (P. 487, vol. 22, Stat. L.)

By the provisions of this act every postmaster who had made returns showing his salary to have been 10 per cent or more less than it would have been under the law of 1854, upon application having been made therefor could have his salary readjusted to date from the beginning of "the quarter succeeding that in which such sworn returns of receipts and business or quarterly returns were made."

Hon. Walter Q. Gresham, whose ability as a jurist is generally recognized, was then Postmaster-General, and he interpreted the law to mean that upon application being made therefor the postmasters whose salaries for the two years they served were shown by their quarterly returns to be 10 per cent less than they would have been if paid by commissions should have their salaries readjusted, and he paid such an amount as would make their salaries equal to a compensation on a commission basis, and upon a commission basis the changes in the postmasters' income were automatic. That is, on a commission basis, the compensation paid McLean would have adjusted itself and he would have been paid what he earned.

Before, however, this interpretation of Postmaster-General Gresham of the law could be put into effect he retired from the Post-Office Department and his successor, the Hon. Frank Hatton, changed his interpretation of the law of 1883 and decided that it meant that salaries were not to be readjusted quarter by quarter, but only on the termination of eight full quarters, and under their interpretation the salaries of succeeding postmasters were readjusted, but the salaries of men situated like McLean, who served the first biennial period and the period in which the work was done as a basis for increase, were not readjusted and never have been.

It would seem that the dissenting opinions of subsequent Postmasters-General were based more on the state of the public revenues than on the equity and justice of these claims—certain it is that it is not the policy of this Government to construe laws in a way that grants to one a readjustment of his dues, and deny it to another under exactly similar circumstances and conditions.

Under this second interpretation of the law of 1883 something more than a million of dollars was paid out to men serving the second biennial period whose salaries for that period were not what they should have been, and in 1886, at the instance of the Post-Office Department, this unjust interpretation of the law of 1883 was approved by a rider on the deficiency appropriation bill, approved August 4, 1886.

COMPENSATION OF POSTMASTERS READJUSTED UNDER ACT OF MARCH 3, 1883.

SEC. 8. For compensation of postmasters readjusted because of the act of March 3, 1883, and to pay the several amounts reported by the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department as due and unpaid, payable from deficiency in the postal revenue for 1883 and prior years, $380,209.46: Provided, That the method of reviewing and readjusting the salaries of postmasters and late postmasters of the third, fourth, and fifth classes, under the classification of the act of July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, which has been practiced in the Post-Office Department under and since the act of March 3, 1883, entitled "An act authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866," by which all such reviews and readjustments have been made prospectively for the biennial periods provided for in the said act of July 1, 1864, upon the basis of the quarterly returns of postmasters during the preceding biennial periods, respectively, whenever the salary actually paid was 10 per cent less in amount than such salary should have been if adjusted correctly upon such returns by computing what the commissions upon the same would have been under the act of June 22, 1854, and averaging the amount thereof annually, as directed by the act of July 1, 1864, for fixing salaries, is approved and ratified as a correct administration of the aforesaid act of March 3, 1883, and all other acts applicable thereto; and that the several readjustments which have been made are ratified as a correct disposition of the several claims which have been considered and disposed of, and for which appropriation is made; and the several persons to whom amounts have been respectively found due are declared the rightful persons entitled to the same, and such amounts to be the full sums due upon any and all such claims; and that all claims in excess thereof and all other claims for readjustment which have been examined and found by the proper officers of the Post-Office Department not entitled to readjustment within such rule of administration are disallowed and barred. That no claim for review or readjustment of any such salary shall be hereafter considered unless the same shall be presented to the Post-Office Department before the 1st day of January, 1887; and that in considering all claims not yet readjusted the same method shall be pursued which is hereby approved, and any and every different method of readjustment of salaries of such postmasters and late postmasters during the period between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, than is herein approved is hereby prohibited; and no action or suit shall be maintainable in any court against any officer of the United States by reason of his action in reviewing or refusing to review, or allowing or disallowing, any application for readjustment of such salary: And provided further, That payment of all sums hereby appropriated shall be made by warrants or checks, as provided by the said act of March 3, 1883, payable to the order of and transmitted to the persons entitled respectively thereto. (Pp. 307-308, vol. 24, Stat. L.)

Subsequently this construction of the law as approved by Congress got into the courts, and a discussion of it will be found in the case of The United States v. Ewing and the cases there cited. (184 U. S., 140.)

In that case the court said:

It is said that as thus construed the statute leads in many cases to great injustice, and hence such construction should not be adopted. The difficulty is that any other construction violates the clear directions of the law, and although the result may be to withhold its benefits from some who might be regarded as otherwise entitled to it, yet we can not for that reason alter its terms so as to include them, and thus ourselves enact instead of construing the law.

From these conclusions and from the statement made by the Supreme Court in the McLean case, "that the case of claimant appears to be a hard one, but that he has no remedy in the Court of Claims," clearly evidences that the Supreme Court recognizes the injustice done these claimants and, by implication at least, suggests that under the law the remedy is with Congress.

While the law of 1883 was on the statute books the men at whose instance it was originally passed—and who were deprived of its benefits by the construction put upon it by the Post-Office Department, approved as above stated—filed their claims showing exactly how much they received as salaries and how much they should have received upon a commission basis, which the fair purpose of the law as enunciated by the Post-Office Department in 1866 intended they should have.

These claims are now in the Treasury Department, with the evidence as to the exact amount due each claimant, and it is a statement of these claims that is covered by the resolution. When this resolution is answered Congress will have before it data upon which it can act intelligently and, following the suggestion of the court that Congress is the only source of relief, enact a law for the direct payment to these men of the money which they honestly earned and which has so long been withheld from them.

The proposition has been advanced that claims of this character are barred by the act of 1886. It will be noted, however, that this act specifically provides an exception that relates only to claims which have not been presented prior to January 1, 1887. The claims this resolution refers to were all presented before that date; consequently the act of 1886 can not be successfully pleaded against them.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the claim that it will take a large addition to the clerical force to do the work under this resolution is simply a mistake. The Department has just such a list for every State as the list which I have produced for Colorado.

I merely want to say a word as to the Senator's statement that the people are not asking for this. Of course, on this list there are a number of people who are not asking for it. They have died while waiting to get this money. There is on this list the name of the first lieutenant-governor of the State of Colorado; there is also on the list the name of the second lieutenant-governor of that State; there are on the list at least a dozen men who were soldiers in the Federal Army, and who have been demanding payment of these claims for years past. These claims have been known at least since 1884, because this statement shows the claims were made at that time.

Some were made in 1883; one or two in 1885 and 1886. This statement shows that every man has been making his claim against the Government.

The Senator says it ought to have gone on the appropriation bill. I thought so. But the Appropriations Committee, of which I am a member, declined, saying it was not an audited claim. I am not myself able to distinguish between an audited claim and a stated claim. When the Government states on its record that there is due me $500, more or less, I believe that is equivalent to an audited claim. I so insisted, but the committee thought not, and that it must have the Auditor's official name attached to it. This is a statement from the Department records, and these amounts stand there and have stood there for years, and then we are told that a man should come here and introduce a bill through somebody. It is not the business of Senators or Representatives to collect debts of this kind. It is the business of the Government of the United States to pay its debts whenever it knows they are due, and if the people do not claim, the Government need not pay them, but when they do claim, it ought to pay them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word before the motion is put.

I secured from the Department a list of 200 names of people in the little State of New Hampshire who believe they have claims against the Government. Some of them are as small as $20, some $30, some $40. I think the highest claim in the list is $800. I have an impression from what I can learn about this matter that these are amounts justly due the people who are named in this memorandum, or their representatives. A portion of these claims have been paid, and there are remaining claims. I never before to-day heard the amount stated to be in excess of a million dollars. I have heard it stated that it would take a million dollars from the Treasury.

But the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] disposed of that by the suggestion that the amount does not measure the obligation. We know that the Government would, if it were an individual, be in jail all the time if there was a law incarcerating it for dishonest conduct as regards its citizens.

I secured one claim during my public career for a citizen of my State. It was when I was a Member of the other House. I worked on it a good many weeks. It was an honest claim; as just a claim as ever existed. It came to the Senate, and after a long time it passed the Senate and went to President Cleveland, and he signed it. I went to tell my constituent that after seven long years—he had been here every winter for seven years—his claim, which amounted to only seven or eight hundred dollars, would be paid. I was told by the boarding-house keeper that he died three days before and had been buried by charity. That is the only claim I ever got through for a citizen of my State. I do not want to undertake to collect these claims of twenty or thirty or forty or a hundred dollars for the good people of my State. I know a great many of them. They believe these claims are due them. I believe they are due them, and I think they ought to be paid.

I want to ask the Senator from Colorado, who has looked into this matter more than I have—I have not looked into the statute—precisely what this language means:

And to comply in all respects with the public order of the Postmaster-General of February 17, 1884, for stating such salary accounts of former postmasters, under the act of March 3, 1883, and to enable the Secretary of the Treasury the better to comply with this resolution the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to turn over to the Sixth Auditor all the data now in his hands pertaining to each and every such claim specified in said memorandum schedule.

Mr. TELLER. That is an act something of this same character. I have not looked at it for a long time. I know there is an act that really required these claims to be audited.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the Postmaster-General has all the data in his possession, and what is asked is that it shall be turned over to the Sixth Auditor?

Mr. TELLER. Under that they have practically audited them. They have made a statement, just as I have read here, showing who is entitled to the money, when the indebtedness was incurred, and what it was for, and everything else.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not rash enough to suppose that these people will ever get their money. I have had experience in more than one case in trying to get honest debts paid by the Government to citizens of my State, and I have not had very great success. It does seem to me these claims being upon the books of the Postmaster-General, it being understood that they are due these people, a portion of them having been paid, that it is not asking very much to pass a resolution asking that these claims should be audited and sent to Congress. I hope that the motion to refer the matter to a committee that has no jurisdiction over it will not prevail.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Post-Office Committee seems to be the committee of the body with which the Post-Office Department generally communicates, so far as it communicates with any committee, on questions involving the official business of the Department. As stated before, I am not prepared to give to the Senate a clear and distinct account of the legislative enactments and rules under which these claims are alleged to have arisen. I understand, however, that in the close, the very last day of his official term, in 1883, Postmaster-General Gresham made an order, which order constitutes the basis of many, if not all these claims, and that order was rescinded the following day by his successor in office. It lived a brief twenty-four hours. It lived long enough to create these liabilities against the United States and then went out of existence.

The extent, I say, to which the claims are based upon that order of such brief existence I know not, but that they are rested to no inconsiderable extent upon that order of twenty-four hours' duration is stated by the Department to be a fact.

It may be, the Department believes, that some of these claims have virtue. I have here a resolution that the Department thinks ought to be passed if any resolution is passed on this subject, handed to me but a moment ago by the clerk of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I will have it read for the purpose of advising Senators of its contents.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have stated and audited in the office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department the salary accounts of former postmasters who served at post-offices in the various States and Territories of the United States in terms between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, and whose accounts have not been readjusted and certified for payment by the Postmaster-General under the act approved March 3, 1883, such salary accounts to be stated and audited upon the registered returns of each postmaster for each term of service specified by the method of reviewing and readjusting approved and ratified by the act approved August 4, 1886.

And to enable the Secretary of the Treasury the better to comply with this resolution the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to turn over to the Auditor for the Post-Office Department all the data now in his hands pertaining to each and every such claim.

Mr. DICK. I am willing to accept that as a substitute for the pending resolution.

Mr. CARTER. That, I think, will be satisfactory.

Mr. TELLER. I am entirely willing to accept that, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. CARTER. I offer it as a substitute for the resolution.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I desire to be heard on this proposition.

The reason why I rise at this time to address the Senate is found in a remark made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that the Government is not inclined to pay its debts, and that if it were an individual it would be in jail all or most of the time because of its attempt to avoid the payment of just claims. There are, and probably have been in the past, instances where the Government of the United States has not paid promptly claims which have been made against it, but I undertake to say that no individual or corporation in this country has ever been imposed upon to the extent that the Government of the United States has during its whole history by having stale and fraudulent claims presented against it.

The other day when the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] called up his omnibus claims bill, the Senate will remember that I called his attention to the fact that there were a number of claims in the bill that purported to be payments to parties whose property had been destroyed during the civil war, and as I understood the Senator at that time his statement was that the claims that were in the bill were all claims which had been properly considered and should be paid.

I have had occasion before this to examine many claims of this class that come from the South, and after the statement made by the Senator from Oregon I took occasion to examine a few of the claims. I find in that bill—not originating, I am happy to state, with the Senator's committee or in this body, but originating in the House of Representatives—old and gray and stale claims, and yet they have received favorable consideration from a committee of the House and have received favorable consideration from the House itself and have come to this body embodied in this bill and are presented here for the Senate to pass favorably upon them.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. Are they not all based on findings by the Court of Claims?

Mr. HOPKINS. Some of them are and some of them are not.

Mr. FULTON. All of them are, as I recall.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator that when I come, as I shall at some other time, to discuss the question as to how much credence shall be given to findings of the Court of Claims, I shall take up that proposition and discuss it. But at this time it is not my purpose to delay the Senate or delay the consideration of the bill under the control of the Senator from New York [Mr. DEWEY], with the exception of calling attention to one individual claim, and that claim, I will say to the Senator from Oregon, I find on page 7 of his bill. It is the claim of Plymouth Frazier, of Liberty County, $122.

Mr. FULTON. What claim is that?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is found on page 7 of the House bill. It is found on page 46 of the Senate bill. I suppose that the committee looking after these claims took the House claims and embodied them in the Senate bill, upon the theory that the claims had all been properly examined and that they were all just claims against the Government.

Mr. FULTON. I will say that on going over those claims we took the findings made by the Court of Claims and based our action on them.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; I have the original bill for the Frazier claim, which was presented in the House of Representatives by Mr. Lester, of Georgia. The claim does not purport upon the face of the bill to have received the consideration and approval of the Court of Claims. The bill itself reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Plymouth Frazier, jr., of Liberty County, Ga., the sum of $561.90, in full compensation for stores and supplies furnished the United States Army during the civil war.

I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact that when bills of this character are presented in the Senate, where the claims have been passed upon by the Court of Claims, it is so stated in the bill?

Mr. McLAURIN. Not always.

Mr. FULTON. No.

Mr. HOPKINS. Very well.

Mr. FULTON. It is only stated in the report.

Mr. HOPKINS. I made that inquiry because I notice that in some bills presented here, notably by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], that the finding of the Court of Claims has been stated. But that is not to the purpose. I care not whether the Court of Claims has favorably passed upon this claim or not. This is one of the items that was presented originally to the Southern Claims Commission, and that Commission went into this question thoroughly to determine whether this claimant should be allowed this money, and after due deliberation, after every opportunity had been given the claimant to present all the evidence in his possession, the Southern Claims Commission rejected the claim.

I have here a copy of the finding of the Southern Claims Commission, and it not only clearly identifies the claim itself, but shows the grounds upon which the Southern Claims Commission rejected the claim. I will state to the Senate that on page 202 of the report of the Southern Claims Commission, which was rendered in 1877-78 there are given the items of the claim of Plymouth Frazier, jr., which aggregate $520, the amount stated in the bill as originally presented. These are the remarks made by the Southern Claims Commission in the rejection of the claim:

This claim is a sample of several others. The claimant was a slave and continued such till the capture of Savannah. Then he claims to have owned the above property and to have had it taken from him for Army use. How he, a slave, could have owned such and so much property is only explained by the phrase "worked for it." (See question 70 and the answer.) He and his two colored witnesses give no further explanation as to his ownership. He was the slave of one Thomas S. Mallard. Lyman B. Mallard, the son of Thomas S. Mallard, testifies: "I know he was allowed to own and did own property previous to and during the war by my deceased father, who controlled him at that time." The value of this testimony may be judged of when we notice that this witness was 21 years of age in February, 1878, and was 5 years old at the beginning of the war. His knowledge as to how much this claimant "did own previous to the war" must have been precocious. One B. J. Cassels, a former overseer of the plantation of Mallard, is the attorney who seems to get up these claims. Claim rejected.

That was in 1878, and that report was made a part of the records of this country, and yet, according to the statement made by the Senator from Oregon, the attorneys representing the Government of the United States have permitted it to be presented to the Court of Claims in a manner so that it has been allowed, and if allowed I can appreciate how easily it would pass muster in any of these committees. But I call the attention of the Senator to it and of Senators upon both sides of the Chamber to emphasize the statement made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] the other day, that this class of claims should be rejected.

More than forty years have passed since the close of the war. Many of the parties whose property is alleged to have been taken have long since passed away, and yet under the manipulation of attorneys we find these claims that were rejected at the time when the Government was in possession of the facts, so as to show their falsity, creep in here in these individual bills, either in the House or in the Senate, and then in the hurry of the great work of a session of the Congress of the United States are embodied in a bill like this and passed.

This is only one of many claims of this character that I find in the bill, and I simply desire to challenge not only the attention of the Senator in charge of the Committee on Claims, but of the Senate itself, that some legislation should be enacted here that will put a stop to this drain upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, the Southern Claims Commission was established, I believe, in 1871, and was in existence two years. If I remember correctly, the act establishing the Commission was passed on the 4th day of March, 1871, and repealed on the 4th day of March, 1873.

Mr. HOPKINS. It was extended from time to time, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. McLAURIN. When was it extended?

Mr. HOPKINS. It was extended. The reports show. They are in the library of the Senate.

Mr. McLAURIN. Was there any extension—

Mr. HOPKINS. The reports of the Southern Claims Commission are published in three volumes, and those books show when the last reports were made.

Mr. McLAURIN. Was it extended except by the Bowman Act and the Tucker Act?

Mr. HOPKINS. As to what act extended the authority of the commissioners I am not able at the present time to say. I can simply give the Senator the fact that Congress did extend the power and authority of the Commission up to the time I have stated.

Mr. McLAURIN. I do not think there will be found any act which authorized the unrestricted going into court and presenting of claims without any action on the part of the Senate or the House to refer the claims to it. But I do not state that with authority because I have not examined it carefully lately.

But what I was going to say was that the Commission was in existence those two years. Of course it took some time to organize the Commission. As I was saying the other day when I was cut off by the arrival of the hour for laying before the Senate the regular order of business, there was a very unsettled condition of affairs in the South at that time. There were thousands, tens of thousands, I may say hundreds of thousands, of people who knew nothing in the world of this act or this Commission. There were many people who had just claims against the Government for the appropriation of their property during the war to the use of the Government's armies who knew nothing about their rights under the law to present their claims. News did not scatter then and get over the country as rapidly as it does now, and those people did not know anything about it.

It is not to be wondered at that there should get into the courts and that there should be judgments entered in the courts on claims that are founded on very little merit, and in many instances on no merit at all. The fact that the Senator from Illinois can cite here a case involving a hundred and twenty-two dollars that was put into this bill when it had been rejected by the Southern Claims Commission on evidence which, in my judgment, as read by the Senator, is not sufficient to have rejected it, but which I take to be settled on the ground of res adjudicata, is no reason why a great many meritorious cases should not be provided for by the action of the Senate in the bill known as the "omnibus claims bill."

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to ask the Senator from Mississippi if a slave, either in his State or in Georgia, in 1864 could own property—could have legal right and title to it?

Mr. McLAURIN. I can not say as to Georgia. In our State they could not. But I will say to the Senator—

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me ask the Senator—

Mr. McLAURIN. Let me finish one answer at a time; then I will let the Senator ask me another question.

I will say to the Senator that in the adjoining State of Louisiana negroes owned not only personal property but some of them owned slaves, and some negroes in the State of Louisiana owned a large number of slaves.

I suppose the Senator from Illinois did not know that before. There were in the adjoining State of Louisiana negroes who owned large plantations and a large number of slaves.

Mr. HOPKINS. That may be; but the Senator does not contend that those colored men were slaves at that time, does he?

Mr. McLAURIN. No; they were not.

Mr. HOPKINS. In Louisiana or in any Southern State, could a slave own property?

Mr. McLAURIN. As I said to the Senator, I know nothing about any State except the State of Mississippi.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. McLAURIN. In the State of Mississippi a slave could not own property, but the fact that in the adjoining State of Louisiana negroes were allowed to own property—they were free and they owned slaves—goes to show that there was a great deal of latitude in some of the States that did not exist in other States. But it may be that in the State of Georgia, where the claim originated, as I understand, a slave could own property.

Let me limit what I said a while ago. In the State of Mississippi slaves could own a small amount of property; but I know of no instance where a slave owned so much as is claimed in the case to which the Senator from Illinois refers. But as I said to the Senate, and I say to the Senator now, I take the action of the Southern War Claims Commission as being res adjudicata. However, I, or any other Southern man, well posted on negro character and nature, can show that this negro's claim ought not to have been rejected on that kind of testimony. The principal point is that one of his witnesses was only 21 years old in 1878, and therefore he could have been only 4 years old at the commencement of hostilities in 1861.

The fact about the business is—and any Southern man will tell you so, and especially a Southern man who lived before the war—that negroes have very little idea about time or distance, and especially about their ages, and particularly negroes who lived before the war. The negro of whom the Senator speaks, and whom the decision mentions in that case, may have been a negro 35 or 40 years old. He knew very little, probably, about his age. The fact is, now, that in a great many instances—

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator that he is in error.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. McLAURIN. With pleasure.

Mr. HOPKINS. The witness, who was 5 years old in 1861, was a white boy, the son of the master of the slave.

Mr. McLAURIN. I understood the Senator to say that it was a slave who was 5 years old in 1861.

Mr. HOPKINS. No—

Mr. McLAURIN. And 21 years old in 1878.

Mr. HOPKINS. I read again:

Lyman B. Mallard, the son of Thomas S. Mallard, testifies, and so forth. The value of this testimony may be judged of when we notice that this witness was 21 years of age in February, 1878.

Mr. McLAURIN. I will answer the Senator upon that ground—

Mr. DEPEW. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McLAURIN. One at a time; they will last longer. I will take the Senator upon that ground. A white boy of intelligence, 5 years old in 1861, may have known a great deal about the amount of property that was owned by a negro on his father's plantation in the year 1865, when he must have been 9 years old. So his testimony was rejected arbitrarily, it seems to me. That negro was cut out of his property arbitrarily by the Southern Claims Commission, and ought to have had his property, since the Senator will compel me to argue that which ought to be accepted and which I propose to accept as res adjudicata.

Now I will hear the Senator from New York.

Mr. DEPEW. It is simply a question. My curiosity was immensely aroused by the Senator's statement that the negro, as a rule, knew nothing about dates, nor ages, nor questions of that kind. I wanted to ask the Senator whether this particular negro could not tell whether he was 5 or 45 years old.

Mr. McLAURIN. I did not know this particular negro. I did not have the honor of his acquaintance. I will say that was the case in the Southern States when negroes were slaves there, just as it was the case in the State of New York when negroes were slaves in the State of New York, and in other States north of Mason and Dixon's line.

But I have been thrown off somewhat by the line I had started to pursue when the Senator from Illinois interrupted me. I appeal to the justice and the fairness of the Senate that if these men have an honest, just claim, Congress ought to provide for its payment. The Senator from New Hampshire is not to be censured or criticised because he contended that there had been in his State honest debts that had not been paid by the Government to citizens of his State. I know the fact, as the Senator from New Hampshire asserted with reference to his State, that there are many cases in the State of Mississippi where there is honest indebtedness due from the Government of the United States to citizens of the State of Mississippi, but they have not been paid, and there is no opportunity given them to present their claims and establish them by competent evidence.

Now, Mr. President, since the Senator from Illinois has seen fit to trounce the Senator from New Hampshire because he has said that there were claims that were honest claims in his State that have not been paid by the Government—

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to interrupt the Senator to say that I did not regard it as a trouncing. The Senator from Illinois is such a mild-mannered man that he would not administer a rebuke of that kind, I am sure.

Mr. McLAURIN. Probably not.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I disclaim either trouncing the Senator from New Hampshire or rebuking him. He made a suggestion that called out the remark I made, and I thought it was pertinent at this time to challenge the attention of the Senate and the country to the class of claims that are being allowed and are taking money from the Treasury to pay them. Millions of dollars have been taken from the Treasury upon just such flimsy claims as the one to which I called the attention of the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, the apology of the Senator from Illinois is accepted.

Just after the war some thirty million dollars were collected from loyal citizens of the United States. Ten million dollars of it has been paid. Ten million dollars of it in some way or another has been used by the Government in preserving that property. That money was turned into the Treasury of the United States. It does not any more belong to the United States Government than the horse which the Senator from Illinois owns belongs to the United States Government.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me there?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. McLAURIN. Of course.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am surprised that a man of the legal learning that I know the Senator from Mississippi possesses should ever make a statement of that kind. The claims the Senator speaks of now relate to the so-called "cotton claims of the South." He never mentions the $80,000,000 worth of cotton that was burned by the Confederate government when New Orleans was captured by the Federal forces. This was a class of property that not only under international law but under the decisions of the Supreme Court was legitimate prize wherever found in the Confederate territory.

Up to the time of the passage of the statute of 1863 every bit of the cotton that was taken was divided, under the rules of maritime and international law, among those who captured it in the enemy's territory. That statute was passed for the purpose of protecting the interests of the Government of the United States, and not for the purpose of protecting the interests of the parties who claimed to own the cotton. The Supreme Court has decided in half a dozen cases that that property was properly taken, and that the money derived from the sale of the cotton was the money of the United States. I know very well that in the discussion we had here some days since the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] presented a decision of the Supreme Court touching this subject—

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I have the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS. Just one word more. Since that decision it has been repeatedly held by the Supreme Court that the claimant had no interest in that property.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, if I have made a mistake, I was led into that mistake by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I have been following those men.

Mr. HOPKINS. But it may be that you did not properly read it.

Mr. McLAURIN. I did not read it, I will say, through the spectacles of the Senator from Illinois.

Now, just the reverse of what the Senator from Illinois says is the fact. The Supreme Court of the United States has held, time and again, that the property belonged to the people from whom it was taken. It is called the "captured and abandoned property act." If the Senator will get an able report that was made by a former Senator from Illinois upon this very matter here from the Committee on Claims, he will find a clear reference made there to case after case where the Supreme Court of the United States has held that it was the property of the individual citizen. It has never been held that it was the property of the United States. There has been no time when the claimants could get this property. The owners of the property have more than $10,000,000 now in the Treasury of the United States, and if justice were done to them it would be found that they have more than $20,000,000 there. Yet that money is not given to the people who owned the property.

What right had the Government of the United States to take this property? It was taken under the act of 1864, I believe, known as the "captured and abandoned property act." It was taken for the purpose of preserving the property and preserving it for the owners of the property; and it was not taken to confiscate it for the Government of the United States.

I say this property belonged to those people just as much as the property of the Senator from Illinois belongs to him. The proceeds of that property are in the Treasury of the United States, and the Congress of the United States will not appropriate money to pay them.

Some few years ago when I was upon the Committee on Claims (and just in passing here I will say that I served something like seven years on that committee), there was very scrupulous care taken to avoid the reopening of cases that had been decided by the Southern Claims Commission and that had been decided against claimants. When I was a member of that committee there was a bill introduced by my colleague [Mr. MONEY] and referred to the Committee on Claims and carefully considered by that committee, and by a unanimous report of the committee it was held that this property did belong to the citizen from whom it was taken by the authorities of the United States Government. It was held that it ought to be paid, and it was held by the unanimous verdict and judgment of the Committee on Claims that it ought to be paid.

Mr. FULTON. Which committee was that, may I inquire?

Mr. McLAURIN. The Committee on Claims.

Mr. FULTON. Of what body?

Mr. McLAURIN. Of the Senate.

Mr. FULTON. I have no recollection of it.

Mr. McLAURIN. I do not know whether the Senator was a member of the committee or not at that time. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] was at that time chairman of the committee; and there was not a dissenting vote against the report. How long has the Senator from Oregon been on the committee?

Mr. FULTON. I have been on the committee since December, 1903, as I recall it. The Senator from Mississippi was there before I was.

Mr. McLAURIN. I was on the committee at the time, and I know that the report was made, and that it was a unanimous report.

Mr. FULTON. Of course, the Senator knows that I did not intend to take exception to his statement. I only wanted to say that I did not recall such a question having been presented when I was on the committee.

Mr. McLAURIN. The Senator from Oregon was not then chairman of the committee, and I do not recall whether he was a member of the committee or not. I know the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] was a member of the committee at that time.

Mr. KEAN. I do not think the Senator from Mississippi remembers that I voted in favor of the report.

Mr. McLAURIN. The Senator from New Jersey did not vote for it in the Senate, but the Senator did vote for the bill in the committee.

Mr. KEAN. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not.

Mr. McLAURIN. Does the Senator claim that he voted against it in committee?

Mr. KEAN. I do not remember the consideration of the bill in committee, but I know I have never been in favor of paying those cotton claims.

Mr. McLAURIN. I could not say whether the Senator was in favor of it or not, but the Senator, according to my recollection, was present when it was reported, and I say there was not a dissenting voice against it. It is my recollection that the Senator was present at that time. There was a unanimous report made. The Senator remembers that, I suppose. There was a motion made afterwards by my colleague [Senator MONEY] to take up the bill, and the Senator then voted against taking it up; but that is the first opposition I ever heard from the Senator from New Jersey to the report.

Mr. President, I rose only to say that the Senator from New Hampshire is correct in saying that a great many honest claims are denied payment by the Government of the United States. I called attention to claims amounting to more than $10,000,000 in this one instance. In my judgment, the Congress of the United States ought to enact a law fixing some court where the people who have claims against the Government can have them adjudicated, and if they are adjudicated in favor of the claimant there ought to be an appropriation made for their payment. If they are adjudicated against the claimant, that settles it, and it ought to settle it—and be a bar for all time; the time ought to be limited, say, to two years; and then the Congress of the United States would not be bothered with these claims referred to committees to ascertain whether there is a prima facie case made out or not.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield for a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. McLAURIN. I will yield the floor in two minutes by the clock.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McLAURIN. I promised in two minutes to yield the floor. I yield now to the Senator from Montana for the purpose of making the motion he indicated.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President—

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. McLAURIN. I wish to say, if the Senator will allow me, that I have cut off a good deal that I intended to say because the Senator from Montana expressed a wish to move an executive session. If debate is to continue, I do not yield the floor.

Mr. CARTER. I will withhold the motion, at the request of several Senators.

INJURIES TO GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 21844 be taken up immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 21844 immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 21844) granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

Mr. KEAN. What is the request?

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CARTER. For morning business?

Mr. FULTON. No; for a statement. I wish to make a statement. It will be very short.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CARTER. I can not yield, in view of the statement of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN]. I said I would yield only for morning business.

Mr. KEAN. Do I understand that the Senator from New York—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Did the Senator from New Jersey object to the request of the Senator from New York for unanimous consent?

Mr. KEAN. I personally have no objection to it, Mr. President, but I think this is a very thin Senate to ask unanimous consent in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? If there be no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FULTON. I simply want to say that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] brought up the case, which he criticised as having been reported by the Committee on Claims. As the chairman of the committee, I feel that I have a right and ought to be accorded the privilege of at least very briefly replying to the criticism. It will not take me two minutes to say what I want to say, and it ought to be said in this connection. If the Senator from Montana will feel disposed to yield for that purpose, well and good. If not, I will have to take advantage of another opportunity.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator has already occupied two minutes. He may now occupy another to finish his explanation.

Mr. FULTON. Thank you. That is all I want.

Mr. KEAN. I understood that the Senator from Montana rose to move an executive session.

Mr. FULTON. I understood that the Senator from Montana yielded to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. FULTON. All I wish to say in response to the Senator from Illinois is that in the report of the Committee on Claims of the House is set out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case which has been criticised. The Committee on Claims of the Senate based its report on what it found to be the facts. The court did not find $520 due, but found only $122 due. That is the amount the bill carries, and it is based entirely on the Court of Claims finding.

If I had more time I would explain a little further. I think I can point out some reasons why the Senator from Illinois is mistaken, but I shall not take the time now.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator understands that I was not criticising him personally.

Mr. FULTON. I understand that the Senator was not criticising either myself or the Committee on Claims.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 27, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
A. B. CAPRON.

I agreed to this report, except as to the action on Senate amendment 69, that provides for the appointment of cadets at the Military Academy from the Philippines.

JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from New Jersey is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Texas to twenty minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, we have before us the conference report on the appropriation bill for the Military Academy at West Point.

The House appropriated about $820,000. The Senate raised that amount to $914,000. We have taken off all but $25,000 of that increase, leaving $845,634.87.

That reduction is principally in the pay of cadets. The Senate added ninety-two cadets, two from each State, which would have given one more appointment to each Senator. It is quite possible—although it is a matter of debate—that the number of cadets at West Point should be raised, but that must be a matter for future consideration. We believe that if the number is raised, opportunity should be given to the young men in the Army to be appointed by competitive examination, rather than give more patronage in appointment of cadets. But that is for the future.

We have likewise taken off $9,000 in other items, and the changes that are made in the bill by the Senate and agreed to only remain to be stated. We have added an instructor in English and history. It was desired to make him a professor. We thought it was important that we should get a good man for the new class that comes in in March, to work until June, too important to think it worth while to put in a permanent man right off the bat. We may rather try our man at $3,000 a year as an instructor before adding to the number of professors.

The same course has been followed as to the instructor in hygiene.

Mr. SCOTT. What is the salary of a full professor?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Three thousand five hundred dollars, besides quite a number of allowances. He is an officer of the Army and gets retired pay.

At the suggestion of the Senate we have given the adjutant at the post the pay of major. He not only has to take care of the cadets, but there are a great many details connected with the Army service detachment, the cavalry detachment, and the artillery detachment, and it is more than a regimental post.

We have acceded to an increase in the pay of the musicians. The band is a special band. We have not raised it anywhere near to what is paid the Marine Band here in town, but the pay is rather higher than that of the other bands in the United States Army, $45, $36, and $30 for the three grades, five or six dollars higher than to any ordinary regimental band.

The Senate has practically acceded to the amendment of the House with reference to the Board of Visitors. It was determined by the conferees that if both of the committees of eighteen each should go up to West Point it would make too large a visiting board. We have agreed on subcommittees of five from the Senate Committee on Military Affairs and seven from the House Committee on Military Affairs, who are to visit the academy one month before the session or during the sessions of Congress, so that we will have real information brought back to us from the Point. We have made some little changes which are not really additional, in the electric lights. There is more provided for electric lights and less for some other forms of light and fuel. There is an addition for certain oilers at the power plant and less for separate engineers. All this tends toward economy. We have given something for light furniture, an addition of some $2,500 in the appropriation, which is for policing and light furniture, because of the light furniture which has to be obtained for the new barracks.

We have made one or two changes of law germane to the bill.

We have appropriated $3,500 for the children's school. It has been a matter of debate whether there ought to be a school for the children of soldiers, rather than to have them taught as is usual in posts, by soldiers detailed for that purpose. On the whole, after a long urging in that regard, it has been determined that West Point is a different place from a regimental post. Old soldiers are kept, and families are encouraged, instead of being discouraged, and we thought these two or three hundred children should have a regular school.

We have likewise, at the special request of the Secretary of War, provided that a certain number of Filipinos may receive instruction at the Point. He asked for seven. That number was reduced to four, one for each class. It was thought necessary, really for the morale of the Philippine Scouts, that there should be some education of that sort open to their most deserving men at West Point. They are not to become officers of the Regular Army, but only officers of the scouts and to engage to serve in that capacity for eight years.

There is one item in the bill which, I will frankly say to the House, has no business there, but it was so just that the majority of the conferees—I was against any such item—placed it on the bill. Major Bingham, who is a quartermaster of the Army, had to consider the acceptance of a steamer originally ordered for the Signal Service and afterwards transferred to the Quartermaster's Department for ordinary use. There had been a penalty clause for any delay in the building of that steamer. There were delays which the Quartermaster-General thought excused, and he ordered the quartermaster at New York, Major Bingham, to accept the steamer and waive the forfeitures. The Comptroller has held that Major Bingham had no power to waive forfeiture. He would have had to go out of the Army, however, if he had disobeyed his superior officer. The Comptroller has, however, ordered his pay held up for $4,700, and the poor fellow is off in the Philippines. It was believed by the majority of the conference committee to be so just that he should not be forced to go without pay that they have allowed a provision to go on this bill that his pay should not be suspended. This does not dispose of the case, but leaves it to be determined hereafter by the Committee on Claims or by the War Department. The real person responsible, however, if anyone, was not Major Bingham, but his superior officer, and all the bill says is that the pay shall not be suspended.

I have to apologize to the House for any item being on this bill that ought not to be there, but this is a just item, so just that I was as it were overruled on that matter.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the statement of the conferees is a correct report of what happened in the sessions of the conference committee. The bill, as brought back to the House, is immeasurably better than it was as it came from the Senate, but it still has some features I regard as objectionable, although I have not carried my objection to the extent of dissenting from more than one of them. For example, the increases of pay and increases of expense that characterize every branch of the Government go through this bill as well.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield for a moment. I would ask the gentleman to explain one matter which I omitted—that of rations.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will, with pleasure. The gentleman refers in that request to the House conferees' amendment to the Senate amendment No. 2. When the Army pay bill was passed, and the compensation of cadets fixed, inadvertently the bill omitted to insert a provision that had been made in a previous act, some five or six years ago, that gave to the cadets a ration commuted at 30 cents a day, by which their annual pay was increased $109.50. It was inadvertently dropped when the Army pay bill passed, so that instead of increasing the pay of the cadets, as the Congress meant to do, it actually had the effect of reducing it $9.50 a year. It was replaced by the Senate and agreed to by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I was speaking of the increase of expenses which goes on steadily, and which no effort apparently can put a stop to, and I was about to call attention to the amendment with reference to the adjutant at the Military Academy. Originally, under the law, a second lieutenant discharged the duties of that office.

His pay was increased by $600 a year above that of his grade in the Army. Now a captain is detailed to do the work and his pay is increased $600 a year over his grade in the Army. The House may remember that less than thirty days ago the pay of a captain was increased $500, and this other increase of $600, because he has accepted a detail to the Military Academy, makes the net increase to him over the pay of his grade in the Army $1,100 a year. That, with allowances, will bring the pay of this captain up to approximately $3,500 a year, if I remember rightly. The position of adjutant at the Military Academy is a desirable one. He has good company, he has excellent quarters, he has an agreeable climate to live in, and the duties are not onerous, and there is not a captain in the United States Army, I take it, but who would be happy to have a detail there if there was not a cent additional compensation carried with it.

The change with reference to the Board of Visitors is a change of importance and real reform. It sends to the Academy gentlemen selected from this House and from the other who have to do with the making of the Military Academy bill each year.

They come back and bring to the House information which they gather there and do not report it to the President, as has been the custom of the old Board of Visitors. The attendance of the Board of Visitors at the Military Academy during the festivities attendant upon the close of the session has been an agreeable junket, and nothing else. It has been abolished and the cost of the visit reduced, and this Board is required to report directly to the House and to the Senate.

A school which the committee has provided for at the Military Academy is a proposition that has been persistently urged since I have had the honor of being a Member of the House. To some extent I have been an instrument in preventing the enactment of this legislation until this year. My views have been overridden and a school has been established at West Point. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it will be the beginning of a system of post schools throughout the United States; that the small amount of $3,500 which is appropriated in the Military Academy bill is a mere drop in the bucket to that which we will ultimately have to appropriate for all the other military posts throughout the Union.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that brings me to a consideration of one amendment of this bill to which I entertain serious and fundamental objections. I refer to the Senate amendment numbered 69, which provides for Filipino students at the Military Academy.

I have objected to Senate amendment numbered 69, because it binds us by yet another tie to the Philippine Islands. Should it become law, four Filipinos will be educated at West Point at the expense of the people of this country, obligating themselves to go back to their far-away islands for eight years' service with the Philippine Scouts.

It is a cheap bribe to the Filipinos and one of a series of efforts to break their loyalty to their own race and to the cause of Philippine independence. It is cunningly designed, too, for nothing is so apt to catch the fancy of a semisavage people as the military bauble.

But whether allegiance so obtained is to be relied upon is another question. It appears to me not unlikely that we will merely educate certain Philippine youths in the art of war to return subsequently to their own country and become leaders in some of the revolutions, as they will call them, or insurrections, as they are styled in our military dispatches.

I abhor the Philippine connection, and in nine years that have come and gone since that unlucky treaty of Paris was made and ratified I have never cast a vote that was not in a way a protest against the union between a white Anglo-Saxon republic and the 10,000,000 Malay hybrids who inhabit those islands. And if I stay here nine or ninety years more, and keep my reason, I shall never, directly or indirectly, vote approval of the connection with the Philippine Archipelago. It is an association that was conceived in greed, is supported by hypocrisy, and will end in disaster. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We are there over the protests of the rightful owners. We are there because we were strong enough to take their sovereignty by force. The strong, free American Republic has despoiled a feeble people who hope to be free.

In doing that hateful thing we abandoned the landmarks of Americanism and that which made us glorious has been forgotten. That which we hoped would make us richer tempted us to a policy that is not only un-American but far from honorable.

I hope that I would be honest, fair, and generous enough not to approve such a course even if it were profitable. But our Philippine venture has not been profitable and, I thank God, it is not likely to be.

We have squandered more hundreds of millions in the ten discordant and fateful years of our occupation of the Philippine Islands than could be made up from the profits of a century of peaceful possession. The money that it has caused us to waste on the Army and Navy was contributed by the American taxpayers. If there are any profits, they have all gone to the trusts. The people pay, the trusts gain. The taxpayer digs deeper and ever deeper into his pockets, while those who toil not in productive industry are petted and paid more and more. The man at arms always gets what he asks for. A complacent Congress rewards those who sneer at statesmen and demand more battle ships. Meanwhile, as I said before, the people pay.

This amendment to educate four Filipinos at the expense of the American people is only important as it indicates a policy. I would cheerfully contribute that and more as a gratuity for the education of these people if it advanced the day of complete divorce of the American Republic from the Malay incubus. But the effect of the amendment will be just the reverse. It is a small thing, but it is another connecting link. No doubt it originated in the mind of that excellent gentleman who is Secretary of War, who hopes to be President and who is Filipino mad.

Should Mr. Taft become President, the United States Government will be run as a mere annex to the Philippine Commission and valued only as a contributor.

Back here in the last line of seats two Filipinos and one Porto Rican now have places. When Mr. Taft shall have done full justice to his island friends and procured for them the same basis of representation that our people have, there will be about forty of them. Colonial row in this Chamber will overflow, and more room than there is now in the "Cherokee Strip" will have to be assigned to the gentlemen from the Philippines. Under his Administration there will be no vexatious constitutions and "grandfather" clauses to interfere with the franchise in the Philippines, and we may reasonably expect some of those dwarfish imps, the Negritos, also some Moros, head hunters, and other truly representative people of the islands, to take seats on this floor. It will be a motley and picturesque group, Mr. Speaker. A composite photograph of the House of the future will show a shade of color that I will, out of politeness, call brunette and features in which will be found a blend of Caucasian, African, and Malay. It will be a highly gratifying spectacle to some gentlemen on this floor who sympathize with everything in the world but imperiled Caucasian civilization at home and the integrity of the white race. The hybridization that it promises must be a gratifying prospect to them. This intimacy between Asiatic islands and continental America seems to be very pleasing now to our friends from the Pacific coast. They see a little profit in it now and are blind to the race question it covers. They rejoice in the possession of the Philippines, because troop ships with military supplies sail from San Francisco and Seattle. But have they thought the question out to its ultimate meaning?

The Philippines have not contributed to our wealth. They can not contribute to our defense. Indeed, and very much to the contrary, they are a point to be defended, and all military men say that they are a most vulnerable point. It is admitted that the Japanese, for example, could take them if they wanted to do so. And China, which is arming and drilling, could, with a few years of training, put enough men on the islands to take them in a short time.

It is these things that make one who speaks with authority in tones of thunder tell the people of San Francisco that they must open their schools to foreigners of all ages and races. It is these things that make the Congress of the United States refuse to enact exclusion laws that are plainly for the benefit of the white inhabitants of this country and in the interest of Christian civilization.

But, after all, Mr. Speaker, I may be mistaken in the impression I have heretofore had that the Pacific coast and its Representatives have race prejudices. They may not want Asiatics excluded. And I congratulate them upon this broadened catholicity of spirit; I congratulate them on the fact that they now seem ready to join hands with New England and welcome to the "land of the free and the home of the brave" people in any number and from all parts of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

They talk about the yellow peril and vote for the black death. They may some day have cause to regret that a yellow sky in the East so absorbs their attention that they can not see a black cloud in the South. Perhaps the confusion and inconsistency of the Pacific coast may yet furnish the solution of the problem of how to meet the demand for labor. The Chinese are said to be good workmen and cheap.

I sincerely hope the House will vote down the report and command the conferees to disagree to the Senate amendment 69. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey has twelve minutes remaining.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How much has the gentleman from Texas?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Four minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLLIDAY].

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Speaker, I entirely approve this conference report, and I congratulate the conferees upon the splendid showing they have made in the report. The objectionable feature in the Senate amendment was the proposition to add ninety-two cadets to West Point.

Mr. Speaker, we do not need any more cadets at West Point. I would not like to say from my place in this House that that proposition is simply to give some additional patronage, but it certainly looks very much like it. We are not increasing our Army. We do not expect to increase it, at least in the near future, and, besides that, if there is a necessity for more officers than we can graduate at the Military Academy I want something held out to the enlisted men to stimulate them to fit themselves for command in the Army.

I do not want the door of hope shut in the faces of the enlisted men. I can not agree with the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] in regard to the admission of four Filipinos to the Military Academy. I am not going to discuss the Philippine question. The gentleman has his views on it, and I have mine. The admission of one boy from the Philippines each year is not going to complicate the general question at all. I earnestly hope that nobody will vote against this conference report on account of the bugaboo of a Philippine complication in the future. It is too small a matter to be given serious consideration.

In one respect, in my judgment, the bill is better than when it left the House. It has provided for teachers for the 250 children of the common soldiers at West Point, and I heartily approve of that.

Mr. Speaker, as somewhat germane to the question of military affairs, I would like to say one other word. I read in the paper the other day that a soldier, sober and well behaved, was refused admission to a public restaurant because of his uniform. A few days before I read in another paper that a sailor, a decent, well-behaved man, was refused admittance to a place of public amusement on account of his uniform.

Mr. SLAYDEN. In what part of the country did that occur?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I regret to say that I do not recall the precise place at this time. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I think that touches the high-water mark of snobbery in this country.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Was it not in Philadelphia?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I am not certain. If the gentleman says it was, I will accept his statement. There have been quite a number of instances.

Mr. Speaker, the uniform of a soldier or a sailor is not a mark of degradation, and any man who thinks it is is unfit to live in America. [Applause.] I do not know that we can help it. I do not know that we are trying to help it, because we can not make people decent by Federal legislation, but we can protest against it. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that there are some extenuating circumstances. It may be that the proprietors of those establishments were unwilling that the dudes and degenerates who patronize those places should come in contact with real, live men of any description. I think it is well to take notice of these things, and to enter our protests against this sort of snobbery.

Ever since some of the American parvenues have been buying titled ranks for sons-in-law, the tide of snobbery in some parts of this nation has been growing higher and higher, until the time has come when men who call themselves Americans—born beneath the Star Spangled Banner—are actually ashamed to associate with men who make that banner glorious. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have eight minutes remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; the gentleman has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN].

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, in the brief time allowed me I can not add much to the discussion of the Military Academy bill now under consideration.

There is no desire nor intention on my part to discuss the Philippine question. This is neither the time nor place for that.

I regret that I can not agree with my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Texas, for whose opinions I have great respect. The admission of four young men, one in each year's class, from the Philippine Islands, is, in my judgment, a proper and meritorious recognition of these people, who are becoming friends of this Republic. Treated kindly and considerately, this feeling of confidence and loyalty will rapidly grow and spread until the Filipinos become good, creditable American citizens.

A word or two as to the Commissioners, or Delegates, from those islands, as well as the gentleman from Porto Rico: I have met personally and socially all these Members a number of times and am proud to call them my friends and associates. They are bright, educated gentlemen, graduates of leading colleges and universities, and I believe them to be thoroughly patriotic men. I wish that the Members of the House knew them as a number of us do. There would be no objection to the admission of the young men to either the Military or Naval Academy. Knowing much of the character, customs, and lives of these people, so little understood in this country, and realizing the standing, education, and patriotism of the gentlemen representing Porto Rico and the Philippines, I am heartily in favor of the adoption of the conference report submitted by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] and hope that it will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CAPRON], one of the managers on the part of the House, such part of the time remaining as he may desire to use.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, the result of the conference has been so clearly stated by the chairman of the committee that very little remains to say except as to those propositions in the conference report which have been attacked by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], and I will just take one moment to say that so far from it being a possibility hereafter that there will creep into every post of the United States a proposition for a post school, we would all see, if we understood conditions, that West Point differs from any other post in the country. With over 300 school children, children of the enlisted men largely, but of the officers to some extent, with no surrounding community where these children can attend school, there being but the small village of Highland Falls anywhere in the vicinity, it is utterly impossible for these children, even if they are carried 2½ miles to the school, to be properly educated outside of the reservation and by the State of New York, when no adequate facilities exist for such educational opportunities as these children require.

Now, the schoolhouse is built. Hitherto the school only could be carried on by a detail of enlisted men as teachers, and I think it will be clear to everyone that it is not a proper way to educate children of citizens of the United States, whether such citizens wear a uniform or otherwise.

Now, for a moment I will address myself to the proposition of the admission of four Filipinos to the Military Academy in order that they may after their education be detailed as officers in the Philippine Scouts. This seems to me to have raised in the mind of my friend from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], only, a bogey man, out of which he has constructed here a whole strip occupied by an alien race, as he chooses to call it. I desire to read the provisions of existing law in regard to the organization of the army in the Philippines.

When, in the opinion of the President, natives of the Philippine Islands shall, by their services and character, show fitness for command, the President is authorized to make provisional appointments to the grades of second and first lieutenants from such natives, who, when so appointed, shall have the pay and allowances to be fixed by the Secretary of War, not exceeding those of corresponding grades of the Regular Army.

Just now a Filipino, properly educated—as he must be under the existing law, which is not changed by the bill under consideration—is sent to West Point for what? To educate him more thoroughly, that he may more properly perform the duties of an officer of that army. Why, have we not always claimed that the thing above all others that would raise the Filipino people to a proper status for self-government is education? Now, with an army at present composed of 4,000 Filipino Scouts, possible to be raised under the law to 12,000 in an emergency, does anyone claim that we will be overloaded with Filipino influence if he have one cadet in West Point in each class, and who agrees to go back and become an officer in the Filipino Scouts for at least eight years subsequently?

Just think of the possibilities of evil the address of my friend from Texas pictures as resulting from this small accession given to the education of our Philippine Scouts, to bring them up to a proper status in military duty they are expected to perform. [Applause.] I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAWSON). The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I reserve that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas has four minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not care to use any more time myself; and if the gentleman from New Jersey is willing, we will have a vote.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, the defense of the Philippines is a most difficult problem. In the absence of a large, mobile Army in America and of transports, we shall have to rely for land forces chiefly upon the Filipinos themselves, and the education of their leaders at West Point is an important proposition. I wish to point out to my colleagues on the Democratic side in particular, during the one minute allotted me, that the ability to provide for self-defense is an essential part of the capacity for self-government. If we would hasten the day when the Filipinos could be safely entrusted with the responsibility of self-government, we must carry forward their education in the science and art of self-defense. The most effective way of accomplishing this end is to educate their sons at West Point. I introduced a bill in the early days of this session authorizing the appointment of five Filipinos to West Point. I consider the four allowed by this bill as reasonable. We have extended the privileges of our national academy to many foreign countries. We have extended them to the oriental nation that may come to conquer the Philippines. The least we can do is to extend them to the Filipinos, now committed to our charge, for whom we have the gravest responsibility. I call on my Democratic colleagues to support this measure as being in direct line with the policies of our party.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I reserved one minute of my time in order that I might say that if my friends on the other side believe the Filipinos capable of self-government there should be no question in dispute. At any rate there is no question that the Filipinos have shown themselves patriotic, that they make good officers, that the men who have come here as Delegates and the men who served in the Philippine Scouts love the United States, that they are doing their duty by the land that is trying to protect them, and that the opportunity we give them to take a course in the Military Academy at West Point has been more than earned by the men who have served the United States so faithfully in the islands. [Applause.]

I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired, and the question is on suspending the rules and adopting the conference report.

Mr. SLAYDEN. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members; as many as are in favor of suspending the rules and adopting the conference report will, as their names are called, answer "yea;" as many as are opposed will answer "nay;" those present and not voting will answer "present;" and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 172, nays 67, answered "present" 17, not voting 131, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the following order, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That general leave to print be granted Members from the adoption of this order until five days after the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, a second is ordered. The gentleman from New York is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi to twenty minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, at all times it is a bad policy to encumber the Record with speeches undelivered upon the floor, especially when the speeches do not go out with any notice to the people that they were not delivered here. They are, without that notice, a sort of deception of the people of the United States. If there had been no sharp partisan clash between the two parties this year I would still have objected, as I did successfully in the Fifty-eighth Congress, to a resolution of this description. I believe that what purports to have been said upon this floor ought to be said upon this floor, in the presence of one's colleagues, with an opportunity for reply. I believe that especially the habit of printing after Congress has adjourned and printing whatsoever one may evolve out of one's inner consciousness, without any opportunity of reply at all, especially upon the eve of an election, printing anything or everything, is peculiarly an advantage for an unscrupulous man as it is peculiarly unfair to the honest man, because the latter will publish only what he knows or believes to be exactly true. This is a reward, therefore, to men who are unscrupulous, who are dishonest of statement, who are careless and reckless of what they are willing to say. Mr. Speaker, I understand, of course, why this is offered by the leader of the majority at this particular time.

The majority party has pretty nearly gone into commission. It has organized commissions to consider nearly everything. It has abdicated its legislative functions. It has delegated to commissions of one sort or another many, and it is going to delegate to more commissions a great many more, public questions of every description. It has spent unparalleled sums of money belonging to the people, a great deal of it wastefully. It requires very much explanation. It would be cheaper and better for it to be made by a few selected men to whom there would be no opportunity of reply, whose remarks in the Record will not be seen by any Democrat, will be printed after adjournment, so that a reply can not be made in such a way as that the reply could be, like the observations themselves, franked to the country. The Republican party, as I said a moment ago, has appointed so many commissions that it had better appoint just one more. In Great Britain when a king goes crazy—and I am not saying that the Republican party is a king, only that it is here in Congress crazy—the great seal is put into commission for some time. After you get through with the currency commission and all the other commissions you have appointed, too numerous for me to remember at this moment, it would be very well for you to appoint one more commission and call it a commission upon Republican defense, and Republican defense through the Record after the House has adjourned, with no opportunity to reply to it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You have had your day in court just as much as we have had. There have been more of you than there have been of us. You are at least of equal ability with us—or you claim to be, and we will discourteously deny it. The only disadvantage that you have had is that you have had a bad, weak cause, or many bad, weak causes. You have been doing nothing, and you are going now to try to defend the policy of doing nothing. You have proudly, even vauntingly, asserted that you were "responsible for commissions and omissions of legislation." You will have some degree of explanation to make concerning your "commissions," and you will have a great deal of explanation to make concerning your "omissions." Of course you will undertake to say that one reason why you have not done a great many things the country demands and things which your President has demanded and things which Democracy has joined in demanding, was because the Democracy by demanding them, so far as it had the parliamentary power to demand and cry out aloud for them, had "prevented you" from doing them.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in ordinary fairness, in ordinary honesty, if there were no sharp party clash, this sort of resolution ought not to pass this House. I say that one reason why the House of Representatives has sunk so low is this: Its CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has become so bulky that nobody reads it. The people of the United States get their information of what occurs from the press, and the press tries to be accurate, but it necessarily can not do it. The press, of course, can not be full in its reports.

The reason why the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is so bulky that nobody can keep up with it is because what goes into it is not what is said upon this floor. In an ordinary Congress 50 per cent of what goes into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are things never said upon the floor—put in there under leave to print upon particular bills, under general leave to print, and under orders such as this. I say that this resolution, if carried, is especially unfair and deceitful, not to one another as Representatives alone, but to the American people. To introduce a resolution to allow men to shove into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD what they please for five days after Congress has adjourned, without any opportunity for anybody to read it and reply to it with equal frankable privilege is disingenuous, if not worse, and I hope that this resolution will not pass. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I have but a few words to say. It has been the custom of the House always toward the close of the session to grant by unanimous consent general leave to print for a period of from five to ten days. That has been almost a universal custom, and the gentleman while he has been here has assented to it by not making objection. It is more imperative that this resolution pass at this session of Congress because of the three or four weeks of time wasted—it is not necessary to say any longer how or by whom—in the House during the past two months. If that time could have been utilized in general intelligent debate, perhaps there would have been no necessity for this resolution at this time, but it was used otherwise. The gentleman talks about this side making apologies. Great heavens! If this side needs any apology, how much more do gentlemen on that side—and at their head the gentleman from Mississippi—need time to make apologies for the useless waste of the time of this House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We allow them to print. They have the same liberty we have. They have the same opportunity we have. They can put in speeches that can never be answered, as speeches may be put in by this side if gentlemen take the full time that is allowed; but this is simply doing what has ordinarily been done when we have had no useless waste by roll calls in former sessions of the House, and I say there is much more necessity and much more reason for it now than there has ever been for it before in my service in the House.

I reserve the balance of my time; I do not expect to use it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] four minutes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, in the face of the record, I am surprised to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] talk about our having consumed useless time, when this record shows this Congress met on the 2d day of December and adjourned for the holidays on the 21st, and was only actually in session eleven hours and eight minutes, and every single motion to adjourn during that time was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If to exercise our constitutional right of having a roll-call vote is a useless waste of time, then certainly our forefathers who prepared the Constitution and the people who adopted it must have made a very grievous mistake. I am opposed to this resolution for the reason that I believe that nothing should appear in this Record that is not actually said upon this floor. If the purpose is to give to the Republican party of this House an opportunity to explain its misfeasance or shortcomings, it certainly would require not five days, but would require until the meeting of the next Congress for them to attempt to make a sufficient explanation, if, indeed, they ever could do so. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York more than one time, in a grandiloquent manner, on this floor, announced that the Republican party would be responsible for the legislation in this House. We are willing to grant to them that responsibility, and if perchance, by accident, there has been some good legislation enacted, we will not envy them the modicum of praise to which they would be entitled for that accident, but it is a conceded fact that there has been appropriated this session, or will be when we adjourn, a round one billion of dollars. We can not comprehend how much that is. We are so accustomed to talking of millions and billions that we fail to comprehend the magnitude of these appropriations. This morning I concluded to try to put it in a little different form in order that we might have some little comprehension of the magnitude of the amount of money that has been appropriated by this Congress, and in doing that I called up the Treasury Department over the phone and asked them to give me the number of twenty-dollar gold pieces that is required to weigh one pound. I figured this out on a gold basis out of consideration for the feelings of my Republican friends, as they want everything figured on a gold basis. I was told, after they said they would have to weigh it, and they did weigh it, that thirteen twenty-dollar gold pieces weighed 15½ ounces avoirdupois. Figuring on that basis, in round numbers 1,300 twenty-dollar pieces weigh 100 pounds. Twenty-six thousand pieces would weigh 2,000 pounds, or 1 ton, and figuring 27,000 pieces to make up the odd fraction of ounces would be 1 ton of twenty-dollar gold pieces. Twenty-seven thousand twenty-dollar gold pieces, or 1 ton, would be equivalent to $540,000.

One billion dollars, the total amount of this appropriation, divided by $540,000, or the 1 ton, makes the stupendous amount of 1,851 tons of gold appropriated by this Congress at this one session. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. HAMLIN. Taking the average wagonload as 1 ton, it would take 1,851 wagons to haul it, and if you put a ton of gold in each wagon and string them out, touching each other, allowing 7 yards to the wagon and team, they would stretch over an approximate distance of 7½ miles.

Let us figure it in a different way. The average freight carload is 20 tons. Therefore, loading 20 tons in a car, it would require 92½ freight cars to haul it, which would be equal to nearly five train loads of gold. If you were to try to carry it off on your backs and each man carry 150 pounds, it would require the services of 24,063 men to carry it. By consulting the Congressional Directory I see that there were 22,804 votes cast for the Speaker of this House at the last election. It would therefore require every man who voted for the Speaker of this House at the last election, each carrying 150 pounds, to carry off the amount of money in gold appropriated by this Congress, and it would then require the additional services of 1,255 Democrats to help them carry it away. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the face of this record it occurs to me that you would require about ten years to explain your record, much less five days, and I am opposed to the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] wish to consume his time?

Mr. PAYNE. There will not be more than one speech on this side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution for two reasons. In the first place, the habit of printing in the RECORD is a despicable one. There can be no justification for a Member of Congress, after this House has adjourned, inserting remarks in the RECORD. He either lacks the intelligence or the courage to make them upon the floor of this House, where there is an opportunity for a reply to them. I wonder if the people of the United States know how much "stuff" is printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under general leave to print?

Here on the eve of an adjournment of Congress we find the floor leader of the Republican party asking leave to print in the RECORD for five or ten days after Congress shall have adjourned. What does it mean? It means that debate in the House of Representatives, once the greatest forum of debate in the world, has degraded into a competition between essayists. Why does he not say "for the next five days," as suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to me?

Then there is another reason why I am opposed to this resolution. It is too indefinite. It does not tell us when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, will withdraw from his pocket the general buildings bill and permit the American Congress to adjourn. We are served with notice through the press, published in the city this morning, that the gentleman from Missouri has informed the Speaker of the House that Congress shall not adjourn until a currency bill is passed. And you gentlemen are "between the devil and the deep blue sea." [Applause on the Democratic side.] You know that the people of the United States, to whom you have pledged currency legislation, are expecting you to act, and you can not come to an agreement, and now you are insulting the House of Representatives by characterizing a great bill as a "pork barrel," in which you think we are so much interested that we will submit to any sort of imposition. I resent the insinuation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I hope after this bill has passed it will be immediately followed by a bill to insure the publicity of campaign contributions. [Laughter on the Republican side.] And if it is at the head of those contributors, as the first, at least in this campaign, will be the American taxpayer, opposite whose name will be set the amount of postage to be saved and the amount in dollars and cents of the valuable contribution which the majority is compelling him to-day to put up for their campaign. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The American taxpayer will be held up in this matter in a way, Mr. Speaker, which will make the little incident referred to by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], in which is described the manner that the Speaker of the House has been held up by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], appear a pleasant exchange of courtesies. The taxpayer can not help himself. The Republican majority controls the situation and they will seize the public money for their political gain.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of opposing this resolution. Every word printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should be delivered on the floor of this House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] spoke about "apologies" that it might be necessary for Democrats to print in the RECORD. Let me say to him and to the country that the Democrats have no apologies to make to the country or to the other side for our conduct during this session of Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I suppose it is permissible now to discuss some of the questions sought to be discussed the other day when the point of order was made, for the first time during the session, that I must adhere strictly to the subject-matter before the House.

Mr. Speaker, on last Saturday we were told that word was passed around over the House that we were to adjourn that night; but all of a sudden a halt came, the powers that be in this House or the powers that be somewhere decreed that adjournment should not take place on Saturday night. And why, Mr. Speaker? The country will want to know why; and if the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] can not explain it, the people will know the reason.

There are other questions this Congress ought to have considered; there are other matters just as meritorious that should have commanded the attention of your side and prevented an adjournment until they are passed. We say to the Republicans and to the country, if you are ready to follow Mr. Roosevelt, if you will follow your candidate, Mr. Taft, or whoever he may be, if you will heed the sentiment of the country and give to the people of this Republic not class legislation, but legitimate, meritorious legislation, restricting the powers of the Federal judges in regard to issuing injunctions and preventing the abuse of their prerogatives, the Democratic party will remain here with you as long as it is necessary to bring about such result. [Applause.]

But, gentlemen, you will hold up adjournment for the purpose of answering the demands of Wall street and special interests, and from some other directions, but when it comes to pass a simple proposition of restricting the powers of Federal judges, you refuse to respond to a just sentiment. You had three caucuses of your side and adjourned by a very close margin, but you fail and can not explain to the country why you have not passed a reasonable and just anti-injunction law. Talk about apologizing! You must and shall apologize to the country for not answering their demands. You will have to apologize, Mr. Speaker, for not permitting consideration of an anti-injunction measure during this session of Congress. [Applause.] I say to you now in all good faith, Take up the question of anti-injunction legislation and we will vote for a sane, meritorious measure, whether it be one introduced by myself or some other gentleman, whether it be the one introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], which is meaningless.

We challenge you to consider bills introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG], Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, and other gentlemen on your side of the House. Let me say to you, Mr. Speaker, enough Republicans have introduced bills on the injunction question, who, if they would assert their rights and stand up with us here, could prevent adjournment until a fair and appropriate measure is given the whole country regardless of classes. [Applause.]

If you mean what you say, if you are in good faith, let us take action. Tell the Speaker and the powers that be if you hold up this Congress to pass emergency currency legislation you shall remain here till you do something to curb the power of Federal judges. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Has the gentleman used up all his time?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has been consumed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a matter of cruelty to adjourn without allowing the Democratic party to tell the country why they all turned their backs on the Bryan

Williams financial bill. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Every man on that side of the Chamber ought to get busy from this time on until five days after adjournment in order to furnish some excuse to the country for going back on that measure that was heralded here as a party measure, backed with the indorsement of the "Peerless Leader," the next Democratic candidate for the Presidency, and the indorsement, too, of the leader of the minority.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAYNE. No; I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Texas seems to have an idea that the newspaper reporters fix the day of adjournment for Congress. I want to assure him that whenever a day is fixed, it will be fixed by a concurrent resolution of the House and Senate; and if he will possess his soul in patience, when the majority of the House get ready to adjourn, they will adjourn without turning to and consulting the files of the newspapers as to the proper day. What the gentleman from Missouri has said illustrates the value of this resolution. If, instead of consuming valuable time of the House, he had embalmed that composition of his in a general leave to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and let Congress go on and transact its business it would have been fully as well, fully as proper, and accomplished the very purpose it would had it been read to the House. Every movement they make shows the propriety of passing this resolution.

I am informed that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Wilson] has had a computation made of the speeches made from December 19 to January 7, and the amount of space used in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Members of the two parties. In that time the Democrats used in printed speeches in the RECORD 189½ columns, and the Republicans during the same time only 38 columns. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Why, this is simply eloquent in showing which side of the House feels the necessity of apologizing to the people of the country for its actions here. That was before they commenced this idiotic policy of trying to block legislation by invoking the Constitution and wearing out the clerks with ceaseless, useless, foolish roll calls. [Applause.]

I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. As many as favor the resolution will say "aye," those opposed "no."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, let us have the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 118, nays 111, answered "present" 19, not voting 139, as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For the session:

Mr. BENNET of New York with Mr. FORNES.

Until further notice:

Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. ELLERBE.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware with Mr. LASSITER.

Mr. DOUGLAS with Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. GRAFF with Mr. KIMBALL.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa with Mr. McLAIN.

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. UNDERWOOD.

For the day:

Mr. CARY with Mr. RUSSELL of Texas.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to answer "present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman giving attention when his name should have been called, and did he fail to hear it?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I was not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. HOWELL]—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the vote being very close, I ask a recapitulation of it.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that that is dilatory.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no—

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has been the uniform practice in cases of that kind to have a recapitulation. It was had when there was a difference of eleven the other day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair having announced the result of the vote, the gentleman's request comes too late.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know how I could have made it before the vote was announced.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 21875. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6190) authorizing a resurvey of certain townships in the State of Wyoming, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. NELSON, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, and Mr. McLAURIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6163) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell and dispose of the surplus unallotted agricultural lands of the Spokane Indian Reservation, Wash., and for other purposes.

GRANTING RIGHT OF WAY TO SALT LAKE CITY AND ACROSS PLATTSBURG BARRACKS.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from further consideration of the bill (S. 6200) granting certain rights of way and providing for certain exchanges of property, and pass the same as amended, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to Salt Lake City, a municipal corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Utah, a perpetual easement and right of way for the operation, maintenance, repair, and renewal of the conduit and pipe line as now constructed over and upon the Fort Douglas Military Reservation in said State, the same being connected with the water supply system of the said city; and also for the construction, operation, maintenance, repair, and renewal of all valve houses which may be deemed necessary in connection with said pipe line: Provided, That the said conduit and pipe line must be at all times maintained entirely below the surface of the ground; that the ground must be at all times kept in such condition as will enable troops to pass over the same without hindrance; that no fences shall be constructed to prevent the passage of troops, and that all work done upon the reservation in pursuance of this grant shall be to the satisfaction of the post commander and under such regulations as he may prescribe in the interest of good order and discipline, and that in case of the removal of the conduit or pipe line or any of the valve houses the ground shall be restored by the grantee to its original condition.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, upon the release to the United States by the Delaware and Hudson Company, or its subsidiary companies, of all rights of way and other easements of said company and of its subsidiary companies within the limits of the military reservation of Plattsburg Barracks, at Plattsburg, in the county of Clinton and State of New York, as said reservation existed prior to January 1, 1890, to convey to said Delaware and Hudson Company, its successors and assigns, for the operation and maintenance of its railway, a right of way 100 feet wide through said military reservation, together with a right of way 66 feet wide along the north end of the reservation, and the right to occupy and use about 2 acres in the northeast corner of the same, within limits described in and shown upon a blueprint attached to a memorandum of agreement made between said company and the United States represented by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, Inspector-General United States Army, in October, 1908: Provided, That except as to the said 2-acre tract in the northeast corner of the reservation, which may be used for the storage of cars, engines, etc., the right of way herein authorized to be granted shall be used for main and passing track purposes only, and not for the storage of cars, engines, etc., thereon; and that the occupation and use of any land within the reservation shall be subject to such restrictions as the Secretary of War may prescribe to protect the interests of the United States and for the maintenance of good order and discipline on said military reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Utah is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Virginia to twenty minutes.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, the first section of this bill grants to Salt Lake City a permanent easement and right of way over the Fort Douglas Military Reservation for its pipe line and conduit in connection with its water system. This part of its water system has been constructed and is now in operation by virtue of a revocable license obtained from the War Department. The city in disposing of its water bonds has encountered an objection to these bonds because of the imperfect and temporary character of its right of way over this reservation. This legislation is therefore necessary to more fully safeguard the rights of the city and to remove the question raised regarding the value of its water bonds. The bill has been drawn according to the suggestions of the War Department, and meets with the entire approval of the officers of the fort, and is unanimously reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. The amendment proposed is S. 6200, also favorably reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, offered as an amendment to this bill for the purpose of economizing the time of the House. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MALBY].

Mr. MALBY. Mr. Speaker, section 2 of this bill provides that certain lands owned by the Government of the United States, in the county of Clinton, N. Y., known as "Plattsburg Barracks," may be exchanged for certain other lands with the Hudson River Railroad Company. The bill, which now appears as section 2 of the pending measure, was drawn by the Secretary of War, and I have received it from the Secretary of War. The company now owns three or four rights of way over Plattsburg Barracks, and it is designed on the part of the United States Government to have the railroad company exchange their lands for a single right of way. The bill itself is approved and drawn by the Secretary of War, from whom I received it, for the purpose of introduction, it being satisfactory both to the Government and to the railway company.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to this bill, but I do not want to say that I am in favor of it simply because the Secretary of War happens to be. This was carefully prepared by the Committee on Military Affairs, and I think there is no reason why it should not be passed.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, during this session of Congress I have not made any remarks that might be deemed political or partisan, so far as I can remember, but I wish to call the attention of this House and of the country to some things. For the last month or more I have watched the game of politics at close range. I have seen the majority play tactics to avoid issues and raise false issues to hide real ones. The country may not understand it, but I want them to. During this whole term the minority has not been allowed to even make a motion unless it had first been submitted to the Speaker and he had decided that it involved no issue on which he and his party did not wish to go on record. They have insolently told us repeatedly they would pass just such legislation and all the legislation they wanted to and no other, but for the last two weeks they have whined and excused all of their shortcomings by charging up their failure to do business to the roll calls demanded by the Democrats on this side. Now, I want to call attention to the fact that the roll call began on April 2, and yet this Congress had been in session for some four months, and up to that time no bill of general interest or importance had passed this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] What excuse is the roll call to them for the four months they wasted the people's time, and I charge here now that this House has done more since the tactics of the minority forced them to constant attention to business than it did in all the time prior to that. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I charge further that that excuse is a pretense and a fraud, for when they were forced by public opinion to bring some measure before this House—as the one in behalf of publicity of campaign contributions—they throttled that measure purposely by putting around its neck an amendment known as the "Crumpacker bill," which would cause the Democrats to oppose the measure. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They did that purposely with the hope that though it passed the House it would be talked to death—as it will be—on the floor of the Senate. They will then with unblushing hypocrisy tell the country they wanted and voted for a publicity bill; but they have made sure that they will go before the country with the opportunity to go into the pork barrel—not of public buildings—but of grafting interests, whose secret contributions they still seek and desire, and will have. [Renewed applause on the Democratic side.] They have played so that they can have one more turn—one more election, at which they can milk the interests who come to them for support. Now, every time they are challenged they say "Oh, you called the roll." When they are challenged for what they do they say "You called the roll;" and when they are challenged for what they do not do they say "You called the roll," and we did not have time to do anything else. Oh, yes, you have had no time; we have called the roll. You could not pass a plain publicity bill; you had no time. We called the roll. You couldn't even allow a vote on a dozen other measures which the people wanted; you did not have time. We called the roll. You could bring in your rules; you could seek to force through this House in the closing hours—as you always do—a ship subsidy of some three millions a year under the guise of improving the mails, and an infamous steal for railroads by a scheme to weigh the mails every year, when the Government's contract price for carrying the mails is based on weighing once at the beginning of every four-year period, knowing that that different method of weighing would give to the railroads annually some four millions more under their contract.

By these things you show your colors. You have invited the support of railroad interests and of subsidized interests and of all specially favored interests, and you refuse to pass the genuine publicity bill, so that you may once more "fry fat" for one more corrupt campaign. You can find the time to do all that is demanded by the corporate and protected greed; you can even seek to strip your own railway commission bill of last session of its efficiency by giving no funds to enforce its most vital section, and you would have done so but for the Democratic votes on this side, aided by some few on that side, who stood by us nobly. Oh, yes; you have ample time to show your colors, but when the people ask righteous laws you can not find time—JOHN WILLIAMS calls the roll.

Mr. Speaker, I fancy to-day that when the last trump shall sound and old Gabriel shall have blown his horn and these gentlemen on the other side march up to the gates of the New Jerusalem and St. Peter says to them, "Why have you done those things you ought not to have done and left undone those things which you ought to have done?" their answer will be, "JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS called the roll, and we could not do anything else." [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] My friends, we Democrats will march through the gates, and when we get inside we will call the roll once more, and, thank God, you will not be there to answer. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not oppose the pending bill. I suppose that it should become a law, but I want simply to call the attention of the country again to the fact that we can consume thirty minutes here to grant a right of way to certain corporations running pipe lines and enact laws for them, but we can not get one minute's time for the farmers of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Farmers' Union of this country wants the legislation that is embodied in my bill. The Southern Cotton Association stands for it to a man. The president of the Farmers' National Congress has endorsed it, and he told me that "Uncle Joe" told him that legislation along this line should be had during this session. I want to notify you gentlemen now that it has not been done. You have failed and refused to grant this legislation, and I ask you to-day, Why do you deny the farmers the protection that my bill gives to them?

It simply says that clerks and other officers in the Department of Agriculture, or any other Department, shall not sell information obtained about crop statistics. You refuse to give them this law that would safeguard the Department of Agriculture. You leave the matter open to the cotton gamblers of New York and New Orleans, to the grain gamblers of New York and Chicago, to speculate upon the crop that is now being grown, and you leave the matter of selling statistics open to them. They will contribute to your campaign fund this fall. I mean these stock gamblers and cotton gamblers and grain gamblers. I want to say to you that you have deceived the public for twelve years. You have been in power in every branch of the Government. You have had the House, you have had the Senate, you have had the President, and you have shut your eyes to the rights and interests of the people. You have done nothing for the common good, but you have humbly obeyed your tariff masters. You have walked under the lash of the trust kings of this country, and upon their demand you have wrung tribute money in a thousand ways from the common masses of the people, but judgment day is near at hand, and you are not prepared. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, you say the minority leader has been killing time. I deny it. You killed time for two long months. You did nothing until the minority leader said, "We are going to force you to do something; we will demand a roll call unless you bring in certain legislation." With a large majority on that side, you are now saying to the public: "We wanted to accomplish something, but the minority leader would not let us." Not long ago your floor leader [Mr. PAYNE] said: "We are responsible for everything; we who are in the majority are responsible for what we do and what we do not do." Now, I will remind him that last Congress you said the Republican party produced prosperity and that the Democratic party produced panics. I want to tell you that you have now a full-grown panic on your hands, and yet the Republican party is in power in the House, in the Senate, and in the White House. What are you going to tell the people now? Who produced this panic? Who made possible the army of the unemployed now crying for work and for bread? You could have passed my bill in the time I have occupied this morning. In the name of the farmers of this country I ask you to grant me one minute in which to pass this bill. Of course you will not do it. You are going to obey your masters, as you have done all these years.

From hat crown to shoe sole you belong to the trust kings and tariff barons of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If the average individual, Mr. Speaker, could be confronted with his tariff tax in a lump sum, he would be as much astonished as was Moses when he beheld the burning bush. This tax has grown until it is simply enormous, and the masses are beginning to realize that high protection is highway robbery. We are about to adjourn this session, and what have you done to take the robber fingers of tariff barons out of the purse of the people? You have talked about creating a tariff commission to investigate tariff schedules. You know, as I know, that you do not mean to revise the tariff.

You know that this tariff commission is a miserable subterfuge. You are hard pressed and you realize that you must fool the people with something on the tariff.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like three minutes more.

Mr. HAYES. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. HEFLIN. They want to appoint a commission, Mr. Speaker, to sit during the recess, to call in the tariff barons and ask them, "Shall we revise up or down? We had to do something. This is a makeshift, and you all understand it. The public was clamoring, and we had to do something to appease it, and this little commission is all that we would do. We want you to come across and contribute to our campaign fund as you have done heretofore." That is what you expect to do, and nothing more.

I want to say another thing, Mr. Speaker. You can not deceive the people any more. What objection have you to passing a bill here that will prevent cotton gamblers from speculating in cotton?

What objection have you to preventing grain gamblers from speculating in grain, and tossing the price up and down at will, and robbing the great army of producers in this country? It is simply because you have been so long entrenched in power that you have lost respect and regard for the masses. You have shown your disregard for the plain people. But this, Mr. Speaker, is the year when they are going to be restored to their own. Following the leadership of that matchless Democrat of the West, who, in his efforts to enforce the laws of justice, has never yet lowered his arm, victory awaits us, and Bryan will be President. [Applause on Democratic side.] We are going to drive you from place and power this fall. [Applause on Democratic side.] You do not know just what you are up against—even in your own party. You do not know whether Mr. Taft will be your nominee, or that queer politician who sits in the White House now. It would not surprise me to see something like this in the papers just after your convention at Chicago:

"Mr. Roosevelt was sleeping soundly. A message came at 1 o'clock at night, and when the great man was informed that he had been nominated, the tears streamed down his face, and for the first time in seven years the great man wept. When able to control his grief he exclaimed, 'This is the call of my country, and, Taft or no Taft, I must obey.'" [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to explain some of the provisions of the bill. The city of Salt Lake is about to inaugurate a new water supply. Its citizens have voted bonds for half a million of dollars. They find some difficulty in disposing of the bonds by reason of the fact that it is held they have no perpetual right to go over the Fort Douglas Military Reservation. This bill will give them that right.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote, unless the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] desires to consume some time.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to consume any more time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ten gentlemen present; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring in absentees. As many as are in favor of the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill will, as their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "nay," those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 214, nays 3, answered "present" 18, not voting 152, as follows:

REFUND OF STAMP TAXES.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21129 and that the bill do pass, with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21129, and that the bill do pass as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21129) to provide for refunding stamp taxes paid under the act of June 13, 1898, upon foreign bills of exchange drawn between July 1, 1898, and June 30, 1901, against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries, and authorizing rebate of duties on anthracite coal imported into the United States from October 6, 1902, to January 15, 1903, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the persons or corporations who have, prior to July 1, 1904, duly presented their respective claims therefor, the sums paid for documentary stamps used on foreign bills of exchange drawn between July 1, 1898, and June 30, 1901, against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries, such stamps representing taxes which were illegally assessed and collected, said refund to be made whether said stamp taxes were paid under protest or duress or not.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make full rebate of all duties imposed by law on anthracite coal imported into any port of the United States from foreign countries from October 6, 1902, to January 15, 1903, and to repay all money paid as duties upon anthracite coal at any port of the United States to the person, persons, or corporations who paid the same upon anthracite coal imported from the 6th day of October, 1902, to January 15, 1903: Provided, That the person or persons so to be paid shall produce satisfactory proof to the Secretary of the Treasury that they were not reimbursed for said tariffs in the sales to the consumer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GRANGER. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules a second is ordered. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. GRANGER] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H. R. 21129, was unanimously reported by the Ways and Means Committee; its passage is also recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. It involves in the neighborhood of $50,000. It is for the repayment of stamp taxes paid under the Spanish war tax law upon foreign bills of exchange drawn against foreign exports. This was in the nature of a tax on exports under the Constitution, and therefore unconstitutional.

The amendment offered is a bill, H. R. 11325, which I have consented to offer as an amendment to this bill at the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] simply in order to save time. This bill, in which the gentleman from Maryland is interested, is also recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and reported from the Ways and Means Committee by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL].

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOUTELL. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman be willing to accept as an amendment to that bill an amendment that would refund the tax that was unconstitutionally collected on cotton immediately after the war?

Mr. BOUTELL. That proposition has not been reported to the House, so that it would be irrelevant at this time. We can only consider at this time bills reported by a committee and on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. They are both against the rules of the House, as I understand it, and I would ask unanimous consent, if the gentleman would not object to that, to add that as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. BOUTELL. "The gentleman" objects. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, in demanding a second, it was not that I have any objection to a return of the stamp taxes improperly collected; but to that bill has been added H. R. 11325, which is a bill authorizing a rebate on the duties paid on anthracite coal, and an entirely different matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the facts of the case, as to H. R. 11325, are these: In 1902 the anthracite coal strike created a coal famine and the country by October was in a state of panic. Relief was looked for on every side and naturally attention was drawn to the duty on coal, placed upon it for the sole benefit of the rich coal barons of Pennsylvania.

The shoe began to pinch, and a demand was loudly made for the repeal of the duty on coal. The Republican party became alarmed and attempted to give relief, but not by a repeal of the duty, which could have been effected by a special session of Congress, but through an Executive order from the Administration. The Secretary of the Treasury issued what was practically an order in the form of a letter, under date of October 6, 1902, in which he states:

Reports indicate that quite a large quantity of coal is being imported. If any portion of this should arrive at the port of New York, the Department desires every facility afforded for its prompt delivery. So far as may be, give consignments of coal the preference over everything else and solve all reasonable doubts for the present in favor of the coal importer.

This letter was addressed to the collector of customs of New York City and copies were sent to other ports throughout the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that was taken by the custom-house officers of this country at all the ports, with the exception of Boston and Baltimore, to mean the suspension of an act of Congress. It was taken to mean that an act of Congress was temporarily suspended by an Executive order. The result was that coal was admitted free; that no attempt was made to find out whether it came within the law or not, with the exception of the two ports, Boston and Baltimore, where the duties were collected. There they were acting entirely within the law in so doing. The coal was taken and analyzed and found to be dutiable under the Dingley law. The duties in some instances were paid, in other instances they were not paid, and suits are now pending to recover them; and now they come here and ask Congress to place its seal of approval upon an act of the Administration in suspending an act of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, hard cases make bad laws. The cases were hard, I admit, but I believe that the law is bad, and I hold that the passage of this bill will create a dangerous precedent by placing the approval of the Congress upon an Administration act which was nothing more or less than Executive usurpation of legislative powers. I believe that this country stands today in danger of constant attempts on the part of the Administration to encroach upon the rights of the Congress. I believe that this act on the part of the Executive should meet the emphatic disapproval of Congress.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOUTELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE].

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me a very simple statement of the proposition contained in this bill is the strongest argument that could be made in favor of its passage. The fact of the matter is, a concise statement of any proposition is frequently the strongest argument that can be made in its favor.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we strip this matter of all partisanship, when we remove from it any kind of prejudice that may have arisen in connection with it, the proposition is simply this: It will be remembered by the Speaker and the Members of this House that in 1902 there was a great strike in the anthracite coal regions of the United States—in Pennsylvania. That gave rise to a coal famine, particularly with reference to anthracite coal.

The Secretary of the Treasury, anticipating that there would be a large importation of anthracite coal, and, indeed, when that anticipation had been verified by the fact, sent to the collector of customs at New York City a letter, which has been read by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. GRANGER] in his time. That letter is not in the nature of an Executive order, nor does it indicate in the most remote fashion any usurpation of the legislative power of the Congress of the United States.

On the contrary, it does not lay down any hard and fast rule, but it simply advises, under the peculiar circumstances then existing, from which the people of the United States and not the coal barons were suffering, namely, the lack of sufficient coal for the ordinary purposes of life, to keep the warmth in the bodies of the people who were accustomed to use anthracite coal, this letter was written, and it is simply a line of advice to the customs officers or the collector of customs of the port of New York, where large parts of this coal were coming in, to construe liberally for a certain length of time the tariff laws of the United States as they applied to anthracite coal, in order that all difficulty and obstacle to the rapid importation of anthracite coal and its transportation to the people who were suffering from the need of it, should be obviated as far as possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you will recur to the words of this letter, it will be apparent that there was no attempt to dictate, but simply a suggestion of advice, the words being that—

The Department desires every facility for its prompt delivery.

Is that the usurpation of legislative authority? Is that Executive usurpation? Then the other lines upon which the gentleman bases his argument, the other words in this letter, are as follows:

Solve all reasonable doubts for the present in favor of the coal importers.

For what purpose? For the purpose of enriching the coal barons of Pennsylvania? By no means; but for the purpose of meeting the demand and cry of the people of the United States who were suffering for the want of coal, that every facility should be furnished to enable them to get anthracite coal to put into their stoves and to use for other purposes. Why, Mr. Speaker, so strong was that demand that subsequently, when the Congress of the United States met, there being a recess when this letter was written, Congress passed an act suspending for a time the operation of the tariff as it related to anthracite coal, so as for that time to add to the facility, the ease with which anthracite coal could be gotten into the stoves of the shivering and suffering people of the United States who were in distress because of the dearth of coal, which arose from the fact of a strike in the anthracite coal regions of Pennsylvania.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not see that there is any violation of Executive discretion in that matter at all, and I want to correct for just a moment the statement made by the gentleman from Rhode Island to the effect that Baltimore and Boston were the ports into which this coal was admitted. If the gentleman will refer to the letter of Lawrence O. Murray, Assistant Secretary, addressed to Hon. JOSEPH V. GRAFF, Member of Congress, from the Department of Commerce and Labor, dated Washington, February 14, 1905, the gentleman will see that Mr. Murray said:

I have just received a telegram from the collector of customs at Baltimore stating that there was no dutiable anthracite coal imported at that port from July 1 to September 30, 1902. Therefore the figures given for Baltimore actually cover the period from October 1, 1902, to January 15, 1903.

But, Mr. Speaker, this was merely the exercise of a wise discretion in order to add to the facility with which coal could be gotten into the hands of the people, and as that letter was construed by certain collectors of customs of the United States in a liberal way, no duty was charged at certain ports, and then on the 15th of January the act was passed and the purpose of this bill is to refund the money that was paid in the meantime under an improper construction of the letter.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, the question as to whether this was an Executive order is easily answered by the fact that at all these ports they suddenly ceased to make any attempt to collect the duties on coal, but I have an interesting bit of evidence which I should like to read to the House, and that is the evidence of Mr. Hamlin, of Boston, before the Committee on Ways and Means, in which he says:

And our honored Senator, HENRY CAROT LODGE, in the heat of a lively campaign then going on, made a speech about every night, in which I think he asked the question, "Who admitted coal free of duty?" And he answered the question himself, "Mr. Shaw, the Republican Secretary of the Treasury." I think that question was asked and answered by Senator LODGE every night during that campaign, and I do not think there was anybody in all New England that did not thank the Republican party for what it had done with respect to coal.

Mr. Speaker, that shows exactly what my point has been. I am in favor of free coal.

I would vote for free coal and I have voted for free coal in the committee, and I would gladly vote for free coal on the floor of this House, and so would every Member on this side of the House, but when the shoe pinches I do object to having the Republican Administration come in and by its own order disregard an act of Congress, for which the Republican party is responsible, and then claim the thanks of the country at large for having relieved the country and given it free coal. What they should have done at that time would have been to call Congress together and let Congress act. There is no evidence that the tax was illegal. On the contrary, the tax was perfectly legal. This coal was taken and analyzed. The statement as to the analysis of the coal given by the coal dealers in Boston was proved not to be correct. It was believed by them to be correct, but it was found it was not correct, and that the duty was absolutely due upon the coal.

Mr. SULZER. As I understand it, this bill pays back to certain people taxes which the Government collected.

Mr. GRANGER. Which the Government had a right to collect.

Mr. SULZER. Why should the Government pay back the taxes?

Mr. GRANGER. Because in other ports they did not collect them is the only reason given; but if I bring goods in at one port—I have had some experience this winter—I have been informed by the Treasury Department that I had no right to complain because in another port they had admitted those same goods free of duty.

Mr. SULZER. And this is a bill of special favoritism, is it not?

Mr. GRANGER. Yes; I think it is.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this appears to me to be an attempt to unite two vicious bills in the hope that the union of the friends of both bills will be sufficient to force them through this House. Each bill provides for a rebate or repayment of taxes which have been legally collected. The one is a tariff tax upon coal levied legally several years ago, and the only excuse given for rebating this tax is that the Treasury Department had issued an ambiguous order which certain customs officers at certain other ports interpreted to be a suspension of an act of Congress levying a tariff on coal. Mr. Speaker, we all know that there was no such emergency at that time as would have warranted the President of the United States, even if he had the power, in suspending the tariff laws. Congress was to meet in December, and this duty was collected in the month of October. If there had been any great emergency the President had the power to call an extra session in advance of the regular session for the purpose of legally changing the tariff to fit the emergency. The President took no such action, and even now, upon the floor of the House, the apologists for this bill deny that the President intended or that the Secretary of the Treasury dared to attempt to suspend an act of Congress. The most that is claimed for this order is that the customs officers at certain ports so interpreted it, and because they interpreted it illegally at those ports it is argued that the rebate should now be made at all other ports.

Mr. Speaker, there is another reason which I think should be taken into account in defeating this bill. We all know that the coal trade of the United States is practically in the hands of a monopoly, not only the mining and the wholesaling of coal, but that monopoly dominates the retail trade, especially here in the East. The coal strike embarrassed the dealers and the trust and no doubt made it difficult to fulfill contracts, but that is no reason why the tariff laws should have been suspended in any port, and this House ought not to give its indorsement of such an illegal proceeding.

There is no traffic in this country more completely under the control and domination of a monopoly than the coal trade. If when the coal strike came on and the famine in coal began, the coal trust through its agents sought, for the purpose of carrying out its contracts, to suspend the tariff, this House should not now, at this time, assist it in doing so by authorizing a refunding of money legally collected from those merchants who imported the coal at that time.

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will.

Mr. PEARRE. Does the gentleman contend that the construction put upon this letter by the various custom-house officials, collectors of customs, etc., throughout the ports of the United States was legal?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is immaterial. I understood the gentleman from Maryland to say it was not a legal interpretation, and if it was not a legal interpretation then those officers went outside of the law, and certainly the others should not be compelled to do so. If it was legal then it was a usurpation of Executive power by the Secretary of the Treasury such as has occurred more than once in this Administration.

Mr. PEARRE. But what is the gentleman's opinion as to its legality?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It makes no difference.

Mr. PEARRE. The gentleman has no opinion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not care which interpretation is accepted. If it was an Executive order suspending the law it was usurpation of power. If it was intended to be ambiguous and to deceive the customs officers it was a trap, and worse than a bold usurpation. It is almost impossible, by reading the order, to tell whether it directed the officers at those ports to violate the law, or whether it merely opened the door for them to do so. In either case this House should not indorse and approve the act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, the letters of the Secretary of the Treasury and the reports of the Ways and Means Committee are ample and complete reply to the merits of the argument made by the gentleman from Nebraska. He, however, made one statement to which I must reply. I regret exceedingly he could make such a reflection as he has done upon his colleague, Mr. TALBOTT, of Maryland, when he said that this was an attempt to combine two vicious measures. My answer to that is, I am perfectly willing at this moment to have the union of these measures severed. I agreed, at Mr. TALBOTT's request, taking the amendment from his own hand, to add in his amendment to my bill, to which there has been no objection, because the gentleman from Maryland was called away to Baltimore.

Mr. PEARRE. That is right, and he asked—

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the gentleman will not put me in the attitude of failing to object to the measure of the gentleman from Illinois, for I think it is fully as vicious as the other, both of them referring to the coal trade. Time only failed to give me any opportunity of criticising the measure of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BOUTELL. I place the gentleman from Nebraska in no attitude other than the one in which he placed himself in saying this was an effort to unite two vicious measures in order to secure a vote. As far as union is concerned, I put on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland to my bill, to which there was no objection in the committee or on the floor, simply at the request of the gentleman from the other side to avoid two roll calls. Does the gentleman from Rhode Island desire to consume any more time?

Mr. GRANGER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a measure of special favoritism and does not appeal to me. I am opposed to it. I am in favor of putting coal on the free list. There is where this essential commodity belongs. The friends of the consumer will all vote to take the tax off coal; and if the Republicans will bring in a bill to put this necessary of life on the free list, we will all applaud them and pass the bill by a practically unanimous decision.

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly, although my time is limited.

Mr. PEARRE. Is the gentleman also in favor of the interest of the miner?

Mr. SULZER. Indeed I am. In fact, the coal miner has no better friend in all this land than myself.

Mr. PEARRE. And therefore you would put coal on the free list?

Mr. SULZER. Of course, and every miner who understands the question is in favor of it.

Mr. PEARRE. Every miner? Where—from what State?

Mr. SULZER. In every State. Why tax the miner on the coal he produces? He is paid little enough as it is. The miner, like every toiler, wants the tariff taxes taken off the necessities of life. He wants to stop the iniquitous system of robbing the many for the benefit of the few.

Mr. PEARRE. That is a remarkable statement for the gentleman to make, for the gentleman must know that that can not be a fact.

Mr. SULZER. I know it is a fact, and the logic of the statement is supported by the testimony of the ages. The consumer pays the tax of a tariff on coal. The tariff does not benefit the workmen a particle, but reduces his wages just that much by making him pay that much more for the necessities of life. It is all very clear and all very simple if you want to understand it. The workman in America has to compete in the open market with the labor of the world. There is no tariff on labor; no protection to the toiler. Labor comes in free. If you want to help the workingman, place the necessities of life on the free list. Take off the high protective tax. Give the dollar he earns a little more purchasing power. That is one way to protect the workingman of this country, and every wage-earner in the land who understands this tariff tax question is opposed to the high protective tariff policy of the Republican party which robs the many for the benefit of the few. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, protection has nothing to do with the price of labor. Capital buys labor as cheaply as it can. Wages are regulated by the inexorable law of supply and demand. Whenever you find two employers looking for one workman wages will be high, and whenever you find two workmen looking for one employer wages will be low. When the demand is greater than the supply wages go up, and when the supply is greater than the demand wages go down. Tariff taxes have nothing to do with it. While the tariff has nothing to do with the wage of labor, it increases the price of the necessities of life, and hence decreases the purchasing power of the laborer's hard-earned wage. There is the rub.

We know to-day, beyond all contention, that the tariff is a tax, and, beyond all dispute, that the consumers pay the taxes. Ultimately nearly all the burdens of protective taxation fall upon the consumers of the country. Protection for protection's sake is a system of indirect taxation which robs the many for the benefit of the few. No party that stands for the best interests of all the people can support it, especially where it fosters trusts, shelters monopolies, and saddles the great burdens of Government on the farmer and the toiler and the wage-earner of the country. The Republicans in Congress tell us that at some future time they may revise the tariff schedules of the Dingley law, but they do not tell us whether they will revise the schedules up or down. They may, if they are continued in power, revise the tariff taxes at some future time, but if they do I predict they will make the taxes higher instead of lower, and legislate for monopoly instead of man. [Applause.]

The Democratic party favors tariff reform in the interest of the consumers of the country. It wants to give the poor man's dollar as much purchasing power as possible. It desires to make the dollar of the toiler, earned in the sweat of his face, buy as much of the necessities of life as possible. It is in favor of reducing the tariff taxes wherever they foster trusts or shelter monopoly. It would reduce the tariff taxes on all goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured in this country and sold cheaper abroad than at home. It would revise the Dingley tariff schedules in a business way in the interest of all the people. The Dingley tariff law violates every principle of Democracy. It is the highest protection measure ever written on our statute books. It is a law for protection, for the sake of protection, and not for the sake of revenue. Most of the Dingley tariff schedules are entirely too high and in the interest of plutocracy and for the benefit of monopoly. They burden beyond the calculation of the human intellect the struggling people of our country. They foster trusts and make a few rich men a little more prosperous. They take from those least able to pay and give to those most able to pay. Most of the Dingley tariff schedules are for the rich and against the poor—for the few and against the many. These high protection tariff schedules that foster trusts and shelter monopoly should be revised not by their friends—the Republicans—but by those who would see to it that they are revised in a business way and in harmony with the principle of equal rights to all and special privileges to none. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, what does this bill do? Very briefly stated, it gives back to certain wholesale coal merchants about $82,000 of the people's money, which it is alleged they paid into the Treasury as tariff taxes on coal during a short time that Secretary Shaw suspended the tariff law. This money was really paid by the consumers who bought the coal, and if the money was to go back to the people who really paid it I would be in favor of returning it to them—to the consumers—but not a dollar will they ever receive under the terms of this bill—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. GRANGER. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. SULZER. I thank my friend; and as I was saying, as a matter of fact the merchants who paid this tariff tax in the first instance charged it to the people to whom they sold the coal—to the innumerable consumers; they paid this tax; they paid this $82,000. The consumers have paid this tax and not a dollar of this money will ever go back to them. If we appropriate this money it will be a gift to the big merchants who paid the tax in the first instance and then charged it up to the consumers who paid it because they had to pay the price asked for the coal or freeze. I am opposed to the merchant getting his money for his coal twice—once from the consumer and then back again from the Treasury of the Government.

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SULZER. I have only a minute.

Mr. PEARRE. If you will read the last line of the bill, you will find you are mistaken.

Mr. SULZER. The last line of the bill is the merest kind of a subterfuge. I can not yield more time to answer questions unless the other side will give it to me. I am making the point, and I think it is striking home, that this money paid into the Treasury as taxes if refunded will go back to people who have already received it from the consumers who bought the coal for use, and these people will never get a dollar of this appropriation. That is the injustice of the matter, and that is the reason I am against this bill.

Mr. PEARRE. Read the last line of the bill.

Mr. SULZER. I have, and it is a pretense—a subterfuge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL].

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I suppose there will be no use to make protest against the passage of this bill, as it will certainly be carried by the votes of the Republican party in this House; but I do wish to protest against legislation of this kind. At the time this coal was sold the tariff on anthracite coal had been suspended. That meant coal that had not less than 92 per cent free carbon. These parties bought an inferior quality of coal abroad. They shipped it in when they owned all the coal that was in the market in Boston and other points. They had a monopoly upon the trade. Having that monopoly, and shipping in this coal, they charged the poor people—because the majority of the people are not classed with the rich—they charged the consumers there in Boston $11, $12, $14, and as high as $16 a ton.

Mr. KELIHER. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Just a question; yes.

Mr. KELIHER. Does the gentleman not know that the coal of which he speaks in the city of Boston was sold for $9 a ton when the market price was $12 at the time?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I am coming to that.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Give me some more time and I will yield to your question; otherwise I will not do it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. This bill came up in the Committee on Claims, and I can not understand how it now happens to be turned over to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. It went to the Committee on Claims, where it seems it was not recognized, and next to the Committee on Ways and Means, and in some way it is before this House; but the purpose is to give to these people something for nothing.

The price of coal went up to $16 a ton, but the coal strike was settled, and coal went down, and when it went down to $12 a ton this inferior coal they brought in here was sold for $9 and some of it for $7 a ton, and yet they claim that they brought it in here as anthracite coal, having as much as 92 per cent free carbon. It is fraud on the face of it. They did not try to benefit the people. They made a deal to benefit themselves. They bought this inferior coal and proposed to palm it off as good anthracite coal. The coal strike broke, and the price went down, and on examination of the matter, when they no longer had a monopoly of the market, they were forced to take the value of coal, which was from $7 to $9 a ton.

Now, they come in and want the tariff remitted; thus getting a clear bonus of about $82,000. That is wrong. They want to be relieved at the expense of the people. Mr. Speaker, this claim is simply a sample of the graft that is commonly being worked in every department of this Government. We have no right to give those men this money any more than we would have the right to make a present to anybody else who had made a bad deal in coal or any other monopoly and wished to recoup their loss out of the Treasury. I ask the Members of this House, in all honesty, to vote this bill down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BENNET of New York). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOUTELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL].

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, the part of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Illinois and reported by him to the House makes rebate of the duty on foreign bills of exchange which were admitted to be unconstitutional, and in all probability most of those bills were drawn against exportations of cotton. That is the simple proposition in regard to that bill, and upon that measure the report of the Committee on Ways and Means was unanimous by both parties.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCALL. I will in a moment.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. This is a bill which was turned down by the Committee on Claims and has no place with the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. McCALL (continuing). Then, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the next measure. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] has fallen into an error. Of course he did not intentionally misinform the House.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. A point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I desire to make a point of order. I regret that I was not here to make it when this bill first came up. This measure concerning the refund of duty on coal, as I remember, came before the Committee on Claims, where it belonged and by which it is cognizable. It is not a bill cognizable under the general rules of the House by the Committee on Ways and Means. Such bills have always been classed as claims bills and been uniformly referred to the Claims Committee. How it came to be considered by the Committee on Ways and Means I can not see. It should never have been referred to that committee. It belongs to that category of bills which, under the rules of the House, should go to the Committee on Claims. It is a claim made against the United States. When it originally came before Congress in a former Congress it was referred to the Committee on Claims. It was given a hearing. It was considered a bad bill. It received no favorable consideration there. Many in the Claims Committee then looked on it with disfavor. I raise the point that it not being cognizable by the Committee on Ways and Means, it is not properly before us now.

Mr. McCALL. That point can not be made, as this is a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. McCALL (continuing). And that suspends the very rule that the gentleman is invoking, so that his point of order has perhaps no more substance than his proposition with reference to the bill itself.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Why do you not get it up in a regular way?

Mr. McCALL. If the gentleman will permit me to address myself to the observations of his colleague from New York, whom I acquit, of course, of any intention to mislead the House, he said this duty had been paid by the consumer; the importer had levied it against the consumer, and he was now going to get it again from the Government. If the gentleman from New York had read the proviso of the bill he would never have made that statement. I will now read the proviso:

Provided, That the person or persons so to be paid shall produce satisfactory proof to the Secretary of the Treasury that they were not reimbursed for said tariffs in the sales to the consumer.

The burden is upon them to prove that.

Now, I agree with the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. GRANGER] that the Secretary of the Treasury, and for that matter any executive officer, even the President himself, has no authority to suspend a law of the United States. But the Secretary of the Treasury made no attempt to suspend a law.

He said in his letter to the collector of New York:

So far as may be, give consignments of coal the preference over everything else, and solve all reasonable doubts for the present in favor of the coal importer.

Gentlemen talk about the coal trust. The coal trust is not importing coal. This bill simply applies to the importers, and the instruction of the Secretary of the Treasury was to solve all reasonable doubts in favor of the coal importer.

Now, if I may call the attention of the House to the facts with reference to the collection at the port of Boston, coal was admitted free of duty in New York, and no collections of duty were made there; but in Boston the duty was collected upon the importations; indeed, was levied upon all imports of coal. There were something like 50,000 tons of imports of coal, and there was a duty collected of $34,000. Now, the facts in regard to one particular invoice of coal there were these: The importer brought in the coal. He had attached to it a certificate of analysis of the English chemists, and that certificate of analysis showed that the coal contained 92 per cent of fixed carbon, and was therefore admissible under the law free of duty. It was given to the importer without any duty being charged upon it; and the evidence shows that the importer sold the coal without adding the duty to it, having made the sales upon the consignment. They intended to sell the coal at cost, and the duty was not added. They actually sold it all at a loss. But the customs officers in Boston retained part of the coal, and subjected it to an analysis according to a different method from that which the English chemists had employed.

The difference is stated in this way: In England the practice in estimating the amount of fixed carbon is to include all the fixed carbon in the coal, including that also in the volatile matter, and that rule was not enforced in Boston, and it appears therefore that strictly this should have been held for duty.

Now, it seems to me this presents a strongly equitable case. The Committee on Ways and Means thought it was a strongly equitable case, and so they made the report.

Mr. RAINEY. I simply want to inquire of the gentleman if this bill is not a confession on the part of the majority of this House that we would have coal considerably cheaper if it was not for the tariff on coal?

Mr. McCALL. I can not say what the majority of this House desire to confess, but as one of the majority I should not agree to make any such confession, because I do not think that point is involved at all.

Mr. RAINEY. Did not the gentleman state just a while ago that as he understood it the sellers of the coal forgot to add the duty?

Mr. McCALL. In reply to the gentleman I will say that that particular coal came in under extraordinary circumstances, when coal was bringing an artificial price, and the testimony shows that in Boston they brought in the coal simply to relieve the situation and intended to sell it at the actual cost of the coal imported.

Mr. GRANGER. Does not the testimony show that the Boston dealers agreed with those to whom they sold it that the purchasers from the importers were to pay the tariff in case one was afterwards levied upon it?

Mr. McCALL. I do not remember that testimony.

Mr. GRANGER. I think the gentleman will find that.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time has the gentleman from Rhode Island?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

Mr. BOUTELL. Then, Mr. Speaker, simply for the benefit of those who have come into the Hall since this discussion began, I wish to say that the bill now before the House is a bill recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, unanimously approved by the Committee on Ways and Means. To that, at the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT], I have offered an amendment which is a bill also recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. GRANGER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BOUTELL. The gentleman will not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BOUTELL. The bill introduced by me is for the repayment of stamp taxes levied upon foreign bills of exchange, and therefore in the nature of an unconstitutional tax paid by all of those who drew bills of exchange against foreign exports, most largely the exporters of raw cotton—

Mr. GRANGER. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman has made a statement here that this bill, a greater part of which is the coal bill, was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BOUTELL. The gentleman from Illinois has made no such statement. The gentleman from Illinois said that the bill 21129 was unanimously reported by the Ways and Means Committee. The gentleman from Illinois said that the amendment was approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the Ways and Means Committee. That was exactly the gentleman's statement. The second part of the bill was introduced by Mr. WEEKS—

Mr. RANDELL of Texas rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BOUTELL. No; the gentleman declines. I have only thirty seconds left.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield for any purpose.

Mr. BOUTELL. The bill in the nature of an amendment was introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and also was in the interest of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT]. That bill was placed upon 21129 at this time simply to save two roll calls. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole, agree to the amendments, and pass the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BOUTELL. I make the point that probably a quorum is not present.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Probably! That is not a point of order, that "probably" no quorum is present.

Mr. BOUTELL. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. All right. You did not say that before.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is evidently well taken. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will send for absent Members; as many as favor the motion will, as their names are called, answer "aye," as many as are opposed will answer "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 128, nays 104, answered "present" 18, not voting 137, as follows:

ADDITION TO ROCK CREEK PARK.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 4441 and move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill, and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the consideration of Senate bill 4441, and pass the same. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4441) to acquire certain land in the District of Columbia as an addition to Rock Creek Park.

Be it enacted, etc., That certain pieces and parcels of land lying in the vicinity of Massachusetts avenue and Rock Creek, as hereinafter described, be acquired, as hereinafter set forth, and they shall thereupon become a part of Rock Creek Park, District of Columbia.

Sec. 2. That the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, hereinafter referred to as the board of control of Rock Creek Park, shall cause to be made an accurate map of said pieces and parcels of land showing the location, quantity, and character of each piece and parcel of private property to be acquired and the location of proposed new streets, which map shall be filed and recorded in the public records of the District of Columbia, and from and after the date of filing said map the several tracts and parcels of land shown thereon shall be held as taken for public uses and the title thereof vested in the United States subject to the payment of just compensation to be determined by said board of control of Rock Creek Park and approved by the President of the United States: Provided, That such compensation be accepted by the owner or owners of the several pieces and parcels of land.

Sec. 3. That the pieces and parcels of land first to be taken shall be those tracts of land in the District of Columbia the title to which was vested in Charles J. Bell, Amos H. Plumb, and John Cassels, trustees by decree of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, entered on the 15th day of April, 1903, in equity cause numbered 23345, described as follows: All that part of the aforesaid property lying to the south of the south building line of Massachusetts avenue and to the east of the center line of Rock Creek drive, containing 3½ acres, more or less; also all that part of the aforesaid property beginning on the center line of Rock Creek drive and on the dividing line of the aforesaid property and Woodley Park; thence southerly along the line of said property to a point at or near Rock Creek, and thence southwesterly along the line of said property down Rock Creek to the north building line of Massachusetts avenue; thence northwesterly along said building line of Massachusetts avenue to where the west line of said property leaves said avenue; thence following said property line in a northerly and northwesterly direction to its intersection with the north building line of the Observatory circle; thence along said building line of said circle westerly to its intersection with the center line of Thirty-fourth street; thence north along the center line of Thirty-fourth street to the center of Garfield street; thence due east to a point perpendicular distant 325 feet from the center line of Cleveland avenue; thence south-easterly and parallel to said center line of Cleveland avenue and 325 feet distant therefrom along the center of a proposed new street to the point where said line intersects the center line of Twenty-ninth street; thence southeasterly by reverse curved line, following the center of a proposed new street, to the intersection of the center line of Rock Creek drive; thence about 350 feet along said center line of Rock Creek drive to the point of beginning, containing about 8½ acres; also all the portions of lots 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, block 14, and parts of lots 2 and 21, block 12, Woodley Park, as are included between Connecticut avenue, Rock Creek, the west line of Woodley Park, and the center line of Rock Creek drive, containing 8½ acres, more or less; also that part of a tract, known as Normanstone, owned by William E. Edmonston and others, trustees, and lying between Massachusetts avenue, the grounds of the United States Naval Observatory, and the east line of said tract north of Massachusetts avenue, containing 2½ acres, more or less: Provided, however, That the said board of control may exchange for a portion of this ground, foot for foot, that piece or parcel of ground now owned by the United States, containing seven-tenths of an acre, more or less, lying on the south side of Massachusetts avenue next to the Observatory circle and east thereto and bordering on the north line of the tract known as Normanstone. All references to streets, avenues, or highways in the foregoing description refer to such streets, avenues, and highways as the same are laid down on the third section of the plans for the permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities.

Sec. 4. That the portion of Benton street from where said Benton street intersects the reverse curved line of boundary referred to in the aforesaid description eastwardly to the junction of said Benton street with said Rock Creek drive, as laid down on said highway plans, be, and the same is hereby, abandoned as a highway and for highway purposes, and upon acquisition by the United States of the title to the pieces and parcels of land herein described, and to be purchased as aforesaid, the United States shall dedicate and set apart for and as a public highway a strip of land 30 feet wide along the boundary line of said park, as above described, wherever said boundary is the center line of a street laid down in said plan of the permanent system of highways of the District of Columbia or is the center line of any new street or streets provided for herein, and shall further establish a building restriction line 15 feet back of the said 30-foot strip of land.

Sec. 5. That as one of the conditions upon which this act shall become operative, and contemporaneously with conveyance of the title to the United States of the pieces and parcels of land hereinbefore described, the aforesaid trustees or owners, without compensation and free of all costs and charges to the United States or the District of Columbia, by proper conveyance, shall set apart, convey, and dedicate for the purposes of a public highway, out of and from the remainder of the property the title to which is vested in said trustees or owners aforesaid, a strip of land 30 feet wide along the boundary line of said park, as above described, wherever said boundary line is the center line of a street laid down on the said plan of permanent system of highways or is the center line of any new street or streets provided for herein; and shall, in addition to such conveyance and dedication and in the same deed, enter into an agreement to establish building restriction lines to agree with the street lines, as shown on said highway plan, or where any new street or streets are provided for herein, the said building restriction lines to be a width of 15 feet adjacent to the dedicated portion of the street, the intent of this act being that the width of such street or streets included within such building restriction lines shall be 90 feet: Provided, That the space between the street lines conveyed and dedicated as herein required and the building restriction lines established as herein required shall be considered as private property set aside to be used for parking purposes, and in such agreement said trustees or owners shall agree that said parking shall be subject to the regulations of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in regard to the height of parking and the projection of buildings beyond the building line, and that the District of Columbia shall have a right of way through said parking for sewers and water mains free of cost, and to lay thereon sidewalks, if, in the judgment of said Commissioners, the space between street lines is not sufficient to admit the construction of such sidewalk within said lines.

Sec. 6. That to pay the expense of inquiry, survey, cost of land taken, and all other necessary expenses incidental thereto, the sum of $423,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, one half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the said sum to be disbursed by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia as now provided by law, upon vouchers to be approved by the said board of control of Rock Creek Park.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second.

Mr. SHERLEY. As a member of the committee reporting the bill I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Kentucky opposed to the bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule a second is ordered.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I submit a point of order in relation to the question as to who should be recognized to demand a second. This is a bill which should have been referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I therefore ask that I be recognized to ask for a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state it is the practice of the House that when a demand is made for a second that a member of the committee opposed to the bill is always recognized. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for twenty minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky for twenty minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, Rock Creek Park, in the District of Columbia, is now one of the most beautiful and attractive parks in this country. It is a park which is visited very generally by the people of the city of Washington, and is admired by all who visit this city. There is a tract of land lying practically between the park and the city which is topographically the same as that of the park, and would make a very valuable addition to, and, in fact, would complete it. The proposition for the purchase of this land as an addition to Rock Creek Park has been before Congress for a number of years. The Members of the House who served in the last Congress, and doubtless gentlemen who are serving in this Congress, are familiar with the location of this land and the value that its purchase would be to the present park known as the "Rock Creek Park." The amount of land that it is proposed to purchase is about 100 acres, valued at about $4,000 per acre?

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. In just a minute. It is assessed at $7,500 an acre. The gentlemen who propose to dispose of the land to the Government at this price have had an option upon it for some time. The option will expire with the adjournment of this session of Congress, and the opportunity to purchase at the price now offered will, as I believe from careful investigation, never again be presented. This land is necessary to complete the park, and we can not in the future purchase it at the price at which it is now offered. It is the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations, or at least a majority of the committee, that the Government at some future time will purchase the land, and purchase it at a very much larger price or cost than that which it is now proposed to buy the land. One-half of the cost of this purchase price will be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the revenues of the General Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no necessity for my occupying any time in describing this land or the necessity for its purchase, for I think almost every Member of this House has visited the park and is familiar with the location of the land and that ravine which runs from Massachusetts avenue up to the Naval Observatory and which forms a natural connection with the present park. If the Members of the House feel that it would be better to purchase this land at the price which is now offered than to wait until some future time and pay 100 per cent more than it can be obtained for at this time, then, of course, they will vote against the proposition. On the other hand, if they believe that this purchase ought to be made and that it can be bought more economically now than in the future, then I trust the membership of this House will vote in favor of this proposition. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understood the gentleman to state the purchase price at which this park is offered now is $4,000 an acre.

Mr. TAWNEY. About $4,000 an acre.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is assessed in the District of Columbia at $7,000 an acre.

Mr. TAWNEY. At $7,500 an acre.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, has any property been sold in that neighborhood of which the gentleman knows, so that he can state to the House what is the market value?

Mr. TAWNEY. The testimony before the committee shows that property, not only in that vicinity, but contiguous to this property, has been sold at a great deal higher price than the price at which this land is now offered to the Government.

Mr. RODENBERG. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. RODENBERG. What proportion of this proposed additional tract is composed entirely of ravine?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know what proportion is ravine.

There is a very beautiful ravine, and, I will say, to my mind that ravine for park purposes is more valuable than it would be even for building purposes, and what we propose to buy it for is an addition to the existing Rock Creek Park.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I was exceedingly fortunate yesterday in paying my tribute to the economic strain of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], because had I waited until to-day I could not in good conscience have paid him the compliment. For weeks he has been warning the House of the danger of having a deficit in the Treasury, and after appropriations have run up to a gigantic height, he now comes in and asks us to pay $423,000 for the purchase of this tract of land in the District.

Now, one of the curious things about all tracts of land offered for sale here is the fact that if they are not immediately bought the offer will be withdrawn. That was the statement at the close of the last Congress. We had options then that were going to expire with the Congress, and the failure of Congress to take advantage of this wonderful bargain would forever preclude Congress from obtaining the land. And yet here we have the same proposition made this year, with the same argument that we must buy it now or be forever precluded.

Mr. RODENBERG. And that same proposition has been before the House for the last six years with the same price.

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably. It is also true that there is nothing more misleading than a statement as to land values, and particularly as to land values adjacent to a tract. You take the land on Massachusetts avenue, and it has a very high price, largely a false price brought about by the fact that certain people think it is the only fashionable residence portion in the District. You get down into the ravine off of Massachusetts avenue, and your land for building purposes is worth very little. Now, it is probable that some of this land ought to be bought, but it is not, in my judgment, right that we should buy as much land as is included in this option and run the park as far up as is proposed. I do not believe that this park project is by any means the most pressing or the most desirable. We have several other projects in regard to the purchase of land in very much more congested districts, in districts that will do the poor of Washington more good than the purchase of this land, and to my mind Congress is not warranted at this time in expending this money in the purchase of this land. Part of it eventually should be added to the Rock Creek Park system; part of it will be used as a park and never for anything else, because it is not fit for anything else. No house will be built on it, and you need not fear that that ravine is going to be built up overnight. It will be here knocking at the doors of Congress next year for admission into the park system. [Applause.]

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the passage of this bill at this time, because it was not considered by the committee which has had charge of this matter for the last six years. Two years ago, in order to enable Congress to arrive at an intelligent conclusion with regard to the several park propositions in the District of Columbia, a commission was appointed consisting of three Senators and three Members of the House. That Commission inspected, personally, all the different sites which were offered for park purposes by the citizens of Washington, and the Commission reported in favor of four different tracts of land—one at Georgetown, the other one on Meridian Hill (Sixteenth street and Florida avenue), a third one in Anacostia, and the fourth one was this proposition here to extend Rock Creek Park.

The members of the Commission felt that this Rock Creek Park proposition was one that could well wait, because it is mainly for such people as would visit the park in automobiles, but they strongly favored such parks as could be established within the city of Washington for the purpose of giving free air and breathing space to the people, especially the poorer classes, and to the babies brought there in baby carriages, but finally a compromise was effected and the Commission recommended all four propositions.

I would certainly be opposed to taking up a single proposition like this, which in my judgment is much less meritorious than the others which we have just been compelled as conferees on the public building bill to knock out because of the financial condition of the Treasury. In order that the public building bill should not be swelled to enormous proportions, these meritorious projects which had been attached to that bill by the Senate were stricken out upon the request of the House conferees. And now it is proposed to take the least meritorious proposition of them all and pass it singly here. I think there will be ample time next winter for the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to take up that whole question and solve the problem of additional park facilities in an intelligent manner.

I remember that two years ago we were told by the gentlemen mainly interested in the passage of this bill that unless we bought it at that time the options would expire. Now we are confronted with exactly the same statement. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky when he says that next winter the same options would still be open to Congress.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. What was the price then?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The price was just the same as it is now.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I have been told that several years ago, at least, the price was $600,000, against $450,000 now.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That was many years ago.

Mr. RODENBERG. And it is cheaper now.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I would consider that as a very strong argument in favor of the postponement of the consideration of this bill. It is true that many wealthy residents of Massachusetts avenue will be vastly benefited financially if Uncle Sam goes into his pocket and purchases this tract of land for the purpose of furnishing a park there free for them; but we are not legislating for those people alone. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I have always been in favor of parks and of playgrounds, but I believe they ought to be located where they can do somebody some good. In my judgment there is at this time at least no sound reason why we should appropriate any money for the purpose of purchasing this tract. The most of it is very rough, entirely too much so to be of any account for building purposes. A goat can not climb a great deal of it, and it is absolutely worthless for any purpose on earth except for sale to the Government.

Now, this matter has been before several committees. I was talking to-day to a Member who was several years ago on the Committee on the District of Columbia, and he said that when he was on that committee this tract was offered for $600,000, a price then said to be very cheap, and they were urged to accept it before the option ran out.

Two years ago the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds sent a subcommittee out to look it over. It was offered to them for $400,000, and while at one time in a compromise the committee reported this in connection with other propositions, I believe that standing alone it could not secure the support of any Member of the House for park or for any other purpose. I want to say to you, gentlemen, if we buy this land, the very next step will be to appropriate an enormous amount of money to put it in such shape that it will be of any use to anyone. I do not believe now, coming from the third committee that really has had hold of it, a committee that has had a reputation heretofore for economy, that we ought to go into this business. It is only an addition to the Rock Creek Park, one that is already large. If we are going to buy ground and build parks, we ought to get them in the vicinity where they will be reached easily by the people who will use them. No one will go to this one, and when you get out there, you would not want to go into it, because it would be worth your life almost to go down into those gullies and get back to the street again.

Mr. TIRRELL. What would it cost to make a road for driving purposes in this ravine?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know. I suppose it could be done. I suppose you could, for a sufficient amount of money, construct a road across, through, over, or under it, and it would not matter which way you took, as it would be an enormous expense either way. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it matters little whether this proposition comes from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or from the Committee on Appropriations. Better than either, it comes as an independent proposition and can be discussed purely on its merits.

Somebody has said there is no danger of this property being built upon. If gentlemen will take a trip across the Connecticut Avenue Bridge, barely completed, they will find that real-estate men are building to-day a sort of apartment house between the last two lamp posts, right up to the bridge, and covering a part of the ravine. We have spent nearly a million dollars on the Connecticut Avenue Bridge, and now they are putting a permanent blight upon the approach to that beautiful structure.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will ask the gentleman if it is a fact that that house stands on a little level piece of ground on the approach to the bridge and not down in the ravine at all?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. And between the two lamps which are a part of the bridge, and one end over the ravine.

Mr. SHERLEY. On a piece of flat ground that is not in the ravine at all.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Gentlemen, it is not for to-day we are buying this. The gentleman from Nebraska asked what is the use of it. There are men sitting here in this House who will live to see a round million of people in the District of Columbia. This is in the center of what is destined to be a dense population. All roads lead to Washington, and the time is but a little way off when there will be a million people here.

No one now regrets the purchase of Rock Creek Park. A rough, uninviting piece of nature in itself, it has been inexpensively made one of the finest of parks. I heard a gentleman who had traveled the world around say within a week that it was one of the finest parks he had seen on the globe. This land is a part of it. It can be bought for a comparatively small amount of money now. It will be of inestimable value when the city once possesses it; and let the coming millions build around it, so that it will be in the heart of a great, teeming population in this capital city. We can seize these opportunities once in a lifetime. It may be too late when we say "Oh, if we had bought it then!" No one, I think, contends that the price is extravagant as compared with other real estate lying in close proximity. In my judgment the chairman of the committee is maintaining consistently his course of procedure—inviting you to economy rather than to extravagance—in asking you to purchase this real estate now.

Then, again, I hope it is but a part of a proposed park system that will carry the city ultimately to the Potomac, when you can start from the Grant monument and go nearly the entire distance by park out to the District line and into Maryland.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. This bill does not come from a committee of which I am a member, but I feel justified in saying a word about it, because from its past history I think that in all probability it may come before a committee of which I am a member.

This bill was before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and from the unsympathetic members of that committee it received no encouragement. Then it went before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and there likewise it was defeated. So it was turned over to the court of final resort, the Committee on Appropriations, and it will not be at all surprising, if it be voted down to-day, if it should next lodge in the Committee on Insular Affairs. [Laughter.]

Now, as I understand this proposition, Mr. Speaker, it is one to buy about 100 acres of land which, according to the confession of everybody, the city does not now need, and which, according to the opinion of many gentlemen, the city probably never will need, because of the fact that we can get it now when we do not need it at our price, and in the future, when we also will probably not need it, we may have to pay a little more.

There is also another reason which I find in the hearings, though not in the report, and that reason, as I understand it, is that the gentleman who holds an option upon a large part of this land laid down the ultimatum before the Committee on Appropriations on the 15th of May, 1908, that he could not any more come to the committee or to Congress and lose time in trying to sell us this land. That, Mr. Speaker, is perhaps a matter of some regret when we look over the hearings and see the testimony of the gentleman who appeared before that committee. He says—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield the gentleman a half minute more.

Mr. GARRETT. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy, but I can not conclude within that time and had as well stop now.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDRUS].

Mr. ANDRUS. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of public parks in this city, parks located where the people can use them. No one will be more willing to appropriate Government money for parks than I, but I believe in a system for parks, as I believe in a system for the management of any business. Who is asking for this measure? How many of the citizens of this city have approached the Members of this House in regard to this matter? I don't know of but one man—a man who is working days and nights and Sundays, with a smile on his face, encouraging the Members of this House to buy what? To buy a ravine between Massachusetts avenue and Connecticut avenue—a ravine at the bottom of which there is a stream, and sufficient land for a roadway, and then steep sidehills on either side; and we are told here to-day that if we do not purchase this property it will increase in value 100 per cent. It was offered to us last year for the same price. That property is not valuable for commercial purposes, and you can not use it for any other purpose than the purposes of a park or a public dump. [Applause.]

That property is going to cost us about 12½ cents per square foot—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLCOTT].

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I think there has been a great deal of opposition to this bill because of the fact that some of us seem to think that the matter originally should have been referred to some other committee than to the Committee on Appropriations. It seems to me that is rather a narrow view to take of it. The only question for us to consider is as to whether it will benefit the city of Washington, the capital of the country, and the residents of the city of Washington, to have this additional land and increase the size of Rock Creek Park. I want to ask the gentlemen to think for a minute of the experience that was had in the city of New York, which we perhaps do not know from recollection, but which we who live in New York do know is a fact. When in 1855, 1856, and 1857 Central Park was created people held up their hands in holy horror and said, "Why do they build a park out in the country, where there is nothing whatever but rocks and goats?"

We must look not only to the present. We must look forward to the future, when that particular section around Rock Creek Park—north, east, south, and west of it—will be congested. We must not think that the only way for us to obtain parks in congested parts of the city is to buy blocks of land and tear down the buildings; but, seeing the trend of the building of the city, the growth of the city, we should take into consideration the question where parks will be needed, and in considering this we should come to the conclusion that the acreage of Rock Creek Park should be properly increased. My colleague from New York [Mr. ANDRUS] suggested there was lack of system in the park proposition. I think the system that promulgated Rock Creek Park was an admirable one. It seems to me that no one could have gone out there and carefully studied the ground without appreciating perfectly that this will be a great addition to Rock Creek Park. There is nothing whatever left for us to determine except as to whether the city of Washington is going to grow out in that direction so that the increased area of the park will be needed. We all of us know that as the population increases the value of property will greatly increase. I think it is unfortunate to suggest that there is anything sinister in the motive of the gentleman referred to as to the sale of this property. He is a man who is unquestionably a good and valuable citizen of Washington and one who is primarily desirous to increase its growth and beauty. I hope this bill will pass, because I believe it will prove beneficial to the city. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, my experience has been that the less valuable the land is in the city of Washington for any other purpose, the higher the price asked for it when it is offered to be converted into a park. I was a member of the subcommittee which considered the purchase of this park land, and I am frank to say that from the information submitted to me I was unable to determine that it was advisable at this time that the Government purchase this land for park purposes. I took the trouble to go out and look at this land for which $4,000 an acre is asked. I have never seen land of a similar character on which so high a value has been placed. The character of the land, I am quite convinced, if it be not purchased at this time for a park, is such that there will be no danger that it will be used for any other purpose in the immediate future which will prevent its ultimate utilization as a park. I might be disposed to purchase a part of the proposed tract which more nearly abounds Rock Creek itself for the purpose of protecting the creek, but I could not justify the expenditure of over $400,000 for the purpose of purchasing a ravine which it is believed could be converted into a very desirable park property.

It seems to me that in perfecting our system of parks in this city, before Congress authorizes the purchase some expert report as to its desirability should be obtained. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, just a word in conclusion. If the gentlemen will read this bill, to show some of the inequities in it, it will be found there is a piece of ground on Massachusetts avenue, perfectly level, very desirable for building lots, and worth a great deal of money, as values now go on Massachusetts avenue, that is to be exchanged for a like quantity of land in a ravine. Now, what has been suggested by the gentleman from New York is, to my mind, the crux of this whole proposition. Part of this land might be desirable for the extension of Rock Creek Park, but there has been no good reason advanced for its extension as contemplated in this bill. Gentlemen talk about congested districts. We may have a congested district in Washington, but it is not going to be on this part of Massachusetts avenue, and any man who has ever been on Massachusetts avenue knows that this is so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the opposition to the passage of this bill on the part of the members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, based as it is upon the question of which committee of this House should have jurisdiction of the bill, seems to me hardly worthy of a man who occupies a position upon this floor. This bill carried with it, coming from the Senate, not only authority for the purchase of this land, but it also carried the appropriation for the making of that purchase. The bill was, accordingly, under the rules of the House, referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee did not attempt, in view of that reference, to place the item in the sundry civil bill, as it otherwise could have done, but reported the bill as a separate and distinct proposition, a bill that the Committee on Appropriations had entire and full jurisdiction over, so that members of the committee do not need to disturb themselves about the question of the relative powers of any of the committees of this House. It was a Senate bill and carried an appropriation, and there was no other committee to which the bill could be referred except the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the purchase of this additional land for the Rock Creek Park, as I said in the opening of my remarks, has been before Congress for some time, but it has always been coupled with several other propositions, some of which are meritorious, others the merits of which I doubt, and they usually come to the House as amendments of the sundry civil bill and have invariably been rejected. This proposition, I submit, ought to be considered as an independent proposition for the reason that it is not the establishment of a new park. It is not for the establishment or purchase of land to be used as a new park, but for the purpose of completing a park which the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia now own, and it was recommended not only by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but recommended by the Commission which was appointed for the purpose of investigating this whole proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RODENBERG. And recommended as part of a general bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I care not whether recommended as a part of a general bill or as a whole, it is recommended nevertheless by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not also true that they recommended as more desirable two other park tracts?

Mr. TAWNEY. That may be; I do not know whether they made a preference in their recommendation. I do know they recommended the purchase of a few acres of land in the city of Washington at the top of Sixteenth street, as the gentleman from Missouri said, at $50,000 an acre.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. As an experienced legislator, my friend knows that sometimes in order to reach a compromise you are compelled to accept things which you are not in favor of in order to secure the things you do favor, and that was the result of the work of that Park Commission.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri, who has had as much, if not more, experience than I have had in legislative matters, that it is frequently, in the matter of reconciling differences between the two Houses, necessary for men to surrender to a certain extent, but not when a member of a committee is reporting to the House to which he belongs. I for two years have stood against this proposition. I have taken the position that if this was valuable land for building purposes that the city of Washington could build out to the present boundary of Rock Creek Park. I have reached the conclusion after careful investigation of the land and the proposition that is involved here in connection with the sale of this land, that the wise thing for us to do is to buy it now in order to save the additional cost which we will have to pay ultimately when we do buy it, as I feel absolutely confident we will be compelled to do, by reason of the pressure that will be brought upon Congress in the future.

When you can buy land in this city for $4,000 an acre that is assessed at $7,500 an acre, I say it is a very fair purchase.

Mr. RODENBERG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RODENBERG. Does the gentleman know how long that land has been assessed at $7,500 an acre?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know how long it has been assessed at $7,500 an acre, but I know it is assessed at that value, and that under the laws governing assessments in the District of Columbia the real estate is assessed at two-thirds of its value, or is supposed to be. In view of the fact that this land is a necessary annex, that it belongs to and lies contiguous to the Rock Creek Park, and will ultimately be purchased as an addition to this park, making the park, in round numbers, about 2,000 acres, I say we ought at this time to buy this property, rather than to wait and pay twice the price at which we can now purchase it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired.

The question is, Shall the rules be suspended, the Committee of the Whole be discharged from further consideration of the bill, and the bill be passed?

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 57, nays 164, answered "present" 19, not voting 147, as follows:

OPENING CHEYENNE RIVER AND STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill 1385, with the amendments that I present.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1385) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, as hereinafter provided, to sell and dispose of all that portion of the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota lying and being within the following described boundaries, to wit: Beginning at a point on the one hundred and second meridian of longitude west, where the township line between townships 9 and 10 north intersects the same; thence east on said township line to a point where the same intersects the range line between ranges 24 and 25 east of the Black Hills meridian; thence north on said range line to a point where the same intersects the township line between townships 15 and 16 north; thence east along said township line to a point in the center of the main channel of the Missouri River; thence in a northerly direction along the center of the main channel of said Missouri River to a point where the township line between townships 18 and 19 north intersects the same, and including also entirely all islands, if any, in said river; thence west on said township line to a point where the range line between ranges 22 and 23 east intersects the same; thence north along said range line to the north-west corner of section 19 in township 21 north of range 23 east; thence east on the section line north of sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 to a point where the same intersects the range line between ranges 23 and 24 east; thence north along said range line to the State line between the States of South Dakota and North Dakota; thence west on said State line to a point where the range line between ranges 84 and 85 west in North Dakota intersects the same; thence north on said range line to a point where said range line intersects the center of the main channel of the South Fork of the Cannon Ball River; thence in a westerly direction up and along the center of the main channel of the said river to a point where the same intersects the one hundred and second meridian of longitude west; thence south along said one hundred and second meridian of longitude west to the place of beginning, except such portions thereof as have been allotted to Indians: Provided, That sections 16 and 36 of the lands in each township therein shall not be disposed of, but shall be reserved for the use of the common schools of the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, as the same may be located in the said States, respectively: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may reserve such lands as he may deem necessary for agency, school, and religious purposes, to remain reserved as long as needed, and as long as agency, school, or religious institutions are maintained thereon for the benefit of said Indians: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee simple to the duly authorized missionary board, or other proper authority of any religious organization heretofore engaged in mission or school work on said reservations, for such lands thereon (not included in any town site herein provided for) as have been heretofore set apart to such organization for mission or school purposes.

SEC. 2. That the lands shall be disposed of by proclamation under the general provisions of the homestead and town-site laws of the United States, and shall be opened to settlement and entry by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall prescribe the manner in which the lands may be settled upon, occupied, and entered by persons entitled to make entry thereof, and no person shall be permitted to settle upon, occupy, or enter any of said lands except as prescribed in such proclamation: Provided, That prior to the said proclamation the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may permit Indians who have an allotment within the area described in section one of this act to relinquish such allotment and to receive in lieu thereof an allotment anywhere within the respective reservations thus diminished to which reservation the said Indians may belong: Provided further, That prior to the said proclamation the Secretary of the Interior shall cause allotments to be made to every man, woman, and child belonging to or holding tribal relations in said Cheyenne River and Standing Rock reservations, who have not heretofore received the allotments to which they are entitled under provisions of existing laws: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be surveyed all the lands embraced within said reservations, and to cause an examination to be made of the lands by experts of the Geological Survey, and if there be found any lands bearing coal, the said Secretary is hereby authorized to reserve them from allotment or disposition until further action by Congress: Provided further, That the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of the late civil and Spanish wars or Philippine insurrection, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 1, 1901, shall not be abridged.

SEC. 3. That the price of said lands entered as homesteads under the provisions of this act shall be fixed by appraisal as herein provided. The President of the United States shall appoint two commissioners, one for each reservation, each commission to consist of three persons, to inspect, appraise, and value all of said lands that shall not have been allotted in severalty to said Indians, or reserved by the Secretary of the Interior or otherwise disposed of, and excepting sections 16 and 36 in each of said townships, each commission to be constituted as follows: One resident citizen of the States of North or South Dakota, one representative of the Indian Bureau, and one person holding tribal relations with one of said tribe of Indians. That within twenty days after their appointment the said commissioners so appointed for each of the said reservations, respectively, shall meet and organize by the election of one of their number as chairman. Each commission is hereby empowered to select such clerks and assistants at such compensation as the Secretary of the Interior may approve. That said commissioners shall then proceed to personally inspect, classify, and appraise, in 160-acre tracts each, all of the remaining lands embraced within each reservation as described in section 1 of this act. In making such classification and appraisal said lands shall be divided into the following classes: First, agricultural land of the first class; second, agricultural land of the second class; third, grazing land; fourth, timber land; fifth, mineral land, if any, the mineral land not to be appraised. That said commissioners shall be paid a salary of not to exceed $10 per day each while actually employed in the inspection and classification of said lands, and necessary expenses to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior; such inspection and classification to be completed within six months from the date of the organization of said commissions, respectively, and no compensation shall be paid to either the commissioners or employees after the said six months. That when said commissions shall have completed the classification and appraisal of all of said lands the same shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 4. That the price of said lands shall be paid in accordance with the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the following terms: One-fifth of the purchase price to be paid in cash at the time of entry, and the balance in five equal annual installments to be paid in one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, from and after the date of entry. In case any entryman fails to make the annual payments, or any of them, when due, all rights in and to the land covered by his entry shall cease, and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited and the entry canceled, and the lands shall be reoffered for sale and entry under the provisions of the homestead law at the appraised price thereof: And provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent homestead settlers from commuting their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, by paying for the land entered the price fixed herein, receiving credit for payments previously made. In addition to the price to be paid for the land, the entryman shall pay the same fees and commissions at the time of commutation or final entry as now provided by law, where the price of land is $1.25 per acre, and when the entryman shall have complied with all the requirements and terms of the homestead laws as to settlement and residence and shall have made all the required payments aforesaid he shall be entitled to a patent for the lands entered: And provided further, That all lands remaining undisposed of at the expiration of four years from the opening of said lands to entry may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be reappraised in the manner provided for in this act. And it is further provided that any lands remaining unsold after said lands have been open to entry for seven years may be sold to the highest bidder for cash without regard to the prescribed price thereof fixed under the provisions of this act, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Sec. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reserve from said lands such tracts for townsite purposes as in his opinion may be required for the future public interests, and he may cause the same to be surveyed into blocks and lots and disposed of under such regulations as he may prescribe, in accordance with section 2381 of the United States Revised Statutes. The net proceeds derived from the sale of such lands shall be credited to the Indians as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 6. That from the proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of the lands aforesaid, exclusive of the customary fees and commissions, there shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the reservations aforesaid in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota the sums to which the respective tribes may be entitled, which shall draw interest at 3 per cent per annum; that the moneys derived from the sale of said lands and deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians respectively shall be expended for their benefit under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 7. That sections 16 and 36 of the land in each township within the tract described in section 1 of this act shall not be subject to entry, but shall be reserved for the use of the common schools and paid for by the United States at $1.25 per acre, and the same are hereby granted to the States of South Dakota and North Dakota for such purpose as the same are located in the said States respectively; and in case any of said sections, or parts thereof, are lost to said States by reason of allotments thereof to any Indian or Indians, or otherwise, the governors of said States, respectively, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, are hereby authorized, within the area in the respective States described in section 1 of this act, to locate other lands not occupied not exceeding two sections in any one township, which shall be paid for by the United States as herein provided, in quantity equal to the loss, and such selections shall be made prior to the opening of such lands to settlement.

Sec. 8. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of not more than $225,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay for the lands granted to the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, as provided in section 7 of this act. And there is hereby appropriated the further sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of making the appraisement and classification and allotments provided for herein: Provided, That the latter appropriation, or any further appropriation hereafter made for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, shall be reimbursed to the United States from the proceeds received from the sale of the lands described herein or from any money in the Treasury belonging to said Indian tribes respectively.

Sec. 9. That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner bind the United States to purchase any portion of the land herein described, except sections 16 and 36 or the equivalent in each township, or to dispose of said land except as provided herein, or to guarantee to find purchasers for said lands or any portion thereof, it being the intention of this act that the United States shall act as trustee for said Indians to dispose of the said lands and to expend and pay over the proceeds received from the sale thereof only as received and as herein provided: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive the said Indians of the Cheyenne River or Standing Rock Indian reservations, in South Dakota and North Dakota, of any benefits to which they are entitled under existing treaties or agreements not inconsistent with the provisions of this act: Provided, That Indians residing upon their allotments in townships 16 north of ranges 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 east shall have the right to use timber in said townships, except on sections 16 and 36, for domestic purposes only as long as the lands remain part of the public domain.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands a second; under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill opens a portion of the Cheyenne and Standing Rock reservations, in the States of South and North Dakota. The two reservations contain about five and a quarter million acres, and the portion that is opened under this bill is about one-half of the two reservations. The reservations are to be opened by the proclamation of the President, but not until all of the Indians of the tribes upon the two reservations are fully allotted. There are of these Indians, in round numbers, about 6,000. Some of them already have been allotted, and to the balance allotments must be made under the general allotment act, which provides that 160 acres must be allotted to each head of a family, 80 acres to every minor over 18 years of age, the same amount to every minor under 18 years of age, provided the minor is an orphan, and 40 acres to each minor whose parents are living.

The bill also provides that surveys shall be made of both reservations before allotments are made; and also that, through the Secretary of the Interior, and by the proper officials of the Geological Survey, a survey shall be made to ascertain whether there be any coal deposits upon either reservation, it being believed by some that there are such valuable deposits; and if it be discovered there are such deposits, those lands are to be reserved from sale or disposal until some future action of Congress; in other words, shall be held in trust for the Indians.

The lands are very valuable. Civilization has come up to a point close to the reservation. One railroad has already been projected through the reservation and another one has reached the border on the east, and is ready to push the line through the reservation as soon as it opens up for settlement.

The amount of land that will be required to allot fully to all of the Indians will be, I should guess without analyzing the census of the Indians, as one can not get the figures exactly, in the neighborhood of 600,000 acres. So that of the amount still reserved from opening under this bill there will be nearly 2,000,000 acres of land, which can be used as general pasture lands and the like.

The land is to be appraised on each reservation by a separate commission appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. The commissions are to be made up of one enrolled member of the tribe—he may be full blood or partial blood—one representative of the Indian Office, and one citizen of either the State of North or South Dakota; in other words, a commission which is supposed to be best qualified to pass upon the value of the land.

Then the lands are to be sold at the appraised value, one-fifth of the purchase price to be paid in cash upon entry of the land, the other four-fifths in five equal annual payments. Whatever land is undisposed of at the end of four years is to be reappraised and then again offered for sale upon the same conditions as the land was originally offered for sale. Any land not disposed of at the end of seven years is to be offered for sale and disposed of to the highest bidder.

A provision is made for the reservation of so much of the land taken under this bill for disposal as the Secretary of the Interior may think is necessary to provide for future town sites, and it is to be surveyed, appraised, and disposed of in the manner that town sites are ordinarily disposed of.

The expense of carrying out all the provisions of this act are to be paid out of the appropriation made herein, but to be refunded to the Treasury of the United States from the proceeds of lands sold; and the surplus arising from the sale of this land is to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of these Indians, to draw 3 per cent interest, and to be expended from time to time, not the principal, but the interest, for the benefit of these Indians in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior thinks proper.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. About what is the quality of the land to be disposed of?

Mr. SHERMAN. The quality is excellent.

Mr. FINLEY. Fine land, is it?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is good agricultural and grazing land. A very large percentage of it is agricultural land.

Mr. FINLEY. Worth about how much?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, it is difficult to say; it is worth, I should say, from $2.50 to $5 per acre.

Mr. FINLEY. Would not that be a very small valuation for excellent land?

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, it would be hard to tell if it would be worth a larger valuation, because you know a road has not yet gone through the part which is to be disposed of under this bill, and of course as you provide transportation through lands you make the property accessible and its value will increase.

That is a mere guess. Later on the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. HALL] will occupy some time, and he perhaps can give a better idea of the value of the land per acre than I can.

Mr. FINLEY. I observe from reading the bill that one of the commissioners to be appointed is a person who has tribal relations. Does that mean an Indian agent?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; it means an enrolled member of the tribe, but not necessarily one of full blood.

Mr. FINLEY. Would it mean an attorney?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; it means an enrolled member of the tribe, but not necessarily of full Indian blood.

Mr. FINLEY. This land is not arid, is it?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. FINLEY. Nor semiarid?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; not arid land at all. Now the bill further provides for a transfer to the States of North and South Dakota of sections 16 and 36 in each township. The enabling act of those two States provided that the United States should eventually cede such sections to the States, respectively, for school purposes. We make appropriation herein for payment to the Indians for the land thus taken. That will amount to something like 160,000 acres.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much per acre does it pay?

Mr. SHERMAN. One dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

Mr. WILLIAMS. For sections 16 and 36?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; in each township.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was there not an agreement with the Indians some time since to pay them $2.50 an acre?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; there was not exactly an agreement. An Indian agent has visited them, and they expect $2.50 an acre. They desire $2.50 an acre; that is correct.

Mr. HALL. He said he would recommend that.

Mr. SHERMAN. The agent who visited the Indians stated to them on the occasion of his visit that he would recommend the taking of sections 16 and 36 at $2.50 an acre. There was nothing like a regular agreement, but there was a general conference had to ascertain whether it was the desire of the Indians that these lands should be opened, and it was ascertained that that was the desire, and the agent said to the Indians that he would make this recommendation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the gentleman from New York think that, in view of that recommendation and in view of the fact that that probably entered into the willingness of the Indians to part with the land, and was a part of the consideration, this Government, which expends a good deal of money, could afford to pay these people $2.50 an acre?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt the United States Government could afford to pay these people $2.50 an acre.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do not you think that it could afford to do it as a matter of justice and right?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is fair for us to take into consideration that our going in there and opening up these lands and providing for their development, providing for the settlement of white citizens there, so enhances the value of the other lands that that should be considered as a part of the compensation for the land disposed of to the States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, what will be the value of these lands, in the gentleman's estimation, after the railroads get there and the land is opened up and developed by railroad construction?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, I should suppose that eventually most of this land—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Good farming land is getting to be pretty scarce.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; I should suppose the greater part of this land before a very great length of time ought to be worth in the neighborhood of $10 an acre. Let me ask my friend from South Dakota if that is correct?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The highest price we are going to get for them is $5?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; the land is to be appraised. In answer to somebody's question I said I thought perhaps the value of the land at the present time was anywhere from $2.50 to $5 an acre, but the land is to be appraised, and is to be sold at the appraised value.

Mr. WILLIAMS. By whom is it to be appraised?

Mr. SHERMAN. By commissions to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, those commissions on each reservation to consist of one member of the tribe, one official from the Indian Office, and one citizen of the State of either North or South Dakota, in which the reservations are located.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman or does he not think if these lands were opened up upon what we call the Oklahoma plan, letting people go in and pay what the lands are worth, that they would be much more rapidly settled and the Indians would get very much more money?

Mr. SHERMAN. I would rather somebody who has had more experience than I in reference to such openings would answer that question. If the gentleman from Mississippi will permit me to ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. HALL], who is more conversant than I, I would be very glad to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suppose the gentleman from South Dakota would not know nearly as much as would the gentleman from New York about what happened in Oklahoma, as the gentleman from New York was then on the Indian Affairs Committee.

Mr. HALL. What is the Oklahoma plan?

Mr. SHERMAN. Sealed bids.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Letting them go and look at the land and paying what those lands are worth. I can not see why when Oklahoma was to be settled it was treated one way and when other reservations are to be opened they are treated another.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will confess or admit that I like the sealed-bid plan myself, and if I were originally drawing the bill, I think I would always provide that the lands be disposed of on sealed bids. This is a Senate bill that is now before us. This bill did not originate in the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand, but it had a House amendment upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It might have had another House amendment upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman is correct. It might have had, and yet I believe that no injustice will be done to the Indians; that they may expect to receive a fair return for all of the land disposed of under the plan provided in this bill. There was some question whether the Secretary would be permitted to name a citizen member of the Commission from anywhere in the United States, and so that we might have a citizen member who was most likely to have knowledge of the value of the property, we made the limitation to the House amendment that that member must be a citizen of the States either of North or of South Dakota.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. In section 7 of the bill it provides that sections 16 and 36 are to be reserved for school purposes and to be paid for by the Government of the United States at the rate of $2 per acre. I wish to ask the gentleman this: When the State of South Dakota was made a State, was or not the State of South Dakota given school lands or lieu lands for school purposes to correspond with the amount of Indian lands held by Indians in reservations like this?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no. I am very sure that that was not done in either of the Dakotas, because it has not been done anywhere, so far as I know.

Mr. FINLEY. The States have not been granted lieu lands where lands were held by the Indians?

Mr. SHERMAN. There have been times later on when Indian reservations have been opened up that that has been done, but there are no lieu lands that could be used in the Dakotas at the present time.

Mr. FINLEY. When the Territory was created into a State, a provision was made for the homesteaders?

Mr. SHERMAN. A provision was made in the enabling act that the United States grant to the States sections 16 and 36 for school purposes.

Mr. FINLEY. Right here, was any calculation taken of the lands held by Indians—

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. HALL] to answer the question.

Mr. HALL. I will say that the enabling act under which South Dakota, North Dakota, Washington, and Montana were admitted—it was an omnibus bill—provided for the granting in present of sections 16 and 36 for school purposes, and then it provided that in the case of the Indian reservations that grant of these sections for school purposes should be held in abeyance until the reservation was opened. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If this bill becomes a law, I know I should have a great many inquiries about how people can get the land. I have not heard it explained.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have attempted to explain it. Possibly the gentleman was not here. It is to be opened under the proclamation of the President after surveys have been made, and upon terms that he states in the proclamation.

Mr. MANN. That is what I understood; but what terms is he going to state in the proclamation? Does anyone know?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have also stated that, that the land will be appraised—

Mr. MANN. I have heard all that, but what I do not know is by what process, if I want to obtain some of this land, I would proceed.

Mr. SHERMAN. You would proceed in this way: After the proclamation had been made you would then apply through the land office for a particular portion of the land which you desired to acquire title to, and by leaving with them the money, laying down one-fifth of the price of the entry to which you made claim, and paying the other four-fifths in five equal annual payments—

Mr. MANN. I understood from the gentleman, and that is what I wanted to understand, that the land was to be sold on secret bids after an appraised valuation—

Mr. SHERMAN. No; sold for an appraised valuation.

Mr. MANN. Who gets the land if forty people make claim for the same piece?

Mr. SHERMAN. Under the general land law.

Mr. MANN. Is there to be a rush for the land?

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman from South Dakota answer the gentleman?

Mr. HALL. I will endeavor to explain the matter to the gentleman. The application will be made substantially under the homestead law. A person entering the land which is to be disposed of under the provisions of this act will have to conform to the requirements of existing law concerning homesteads. In addition he will be required to pay this price in five annual installments.

Mr. MANN. That means a rush for the land.

Mr. HALL. No; I will get to that in a moment. In the Rosebud Reservation, a portion of which was opened two or three years ago, the methods adopted by the Department then so as to avoid this confusion and avoid these horse races was that persons might register for land. Then after a certain period and on a certain date a drawing was had of the number of claims that there were for disposal. They were drawn by lots so as to be absolutely fair.

Mr. MANN. This is the Oklahoma plan to which the gentleman from Mississippi referred.

Mr. HALL. This is not sealed bids.

Mr. MANN. But I understand the drawing plan was the Oklahoma plan to which I understood the gentleman from Mississippi referred. Is that to be the plan?

Mr. HALL. I did not so understand him. I understood him to say there were sealed bids for the land. In this case the price is fixed by this Commission and the lands are selected by lot in the manner in which I have indicated so as to avoid this confusion and rush.

Mr. MANN. In the same method which was used at the Rosebud Agency.

Mr. HALL. Yes. I assume that will be the method adopted by the Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I desire to use all of that time. It shall not be my purpose to enter into a discussion of the merits or demerits of this bill, but I do desire to explain my vote upon this measure. I am in favor of this bill as it was passed by the Senate and as it was thereafter reported by the House Committee on Indian Affairs, but I do not favor this amendment cutting down the price of the school lands from $2.50 an acre to $1.25 an acre. I do not favor that for the reason that there was what should be considered to all intents and purposes an agreement with those Indians in which they were promised by the Indian agent $2.50 per acre for sections 16 and 36. That is explained in the report, but I will not take up the time of the House to read it. I will say, however, that the exigencies of the occasion will somewhat influence my vote.

We can not afford, Mr. Speaker, to retard the progress of these two States by a minor matter like this, in my opinion. The States of North and South Dakota have, as I understand, something more than 2,000,000 acres of land involved in this proposition which can not be settled until some kind of an arrangement is made, as this bill provides, for the opening up of this reservation, and for that reason I expect to vote for this bill in the hope that when it goes into the conference committee the conferees will see their way clear to keep their agreement with the Indians and award them $2.50 an acre for sections 16 and 36. Now, there is one proposition which should always be taken into consideration in the opening of an Indian reservation, and that is this, that prior to the time of the opening of that reservation the lands are not worth near so much money as they are after the farmers begin to come in, settle, and build homes.

That is what makes the land valuable. The farmers can not come in under the present system, which is as it has been in my State, Oklahoma. They can not come in, and they can not improve the land. But when they do come in this land will be improved, and as it is improved it will increase in value all the land on what is now the reservation, including the allotments of the Indians who now own the lands. As the land around each Indian's allotment is improved and put in a higher state of cultivation just in that proportion will the Indian's original allotment increase in value and be made more productive. So that within a few years the Indian's allotment of 160 acres should be worth as much as all of his lands at present, including allotment and lands sold under the provisions of this bill. It would be a good deal for the Indian even though he is deprived of a portion of the value of sections 16 and 36. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I expect to give my sanction to the bill by voting for it, purely upon the ground, as I said, of the exigencies of the occasion and for the reason that I think the conference committee will undoubtedly see their way clear to reinstate $2.50 an acre instead of $1.25 an acre and thereby keep the plighted faith of the Federal Government with its helpless wards. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I can not agree with my colleague on the committee [Mr. CARTER], as to the conclusions reached in respect to this bill. I want to bring to the attention of the House the facts in relation to the case as they were developed before our committee.

Now, this is a case in which the Government of the United States has undertaken to pay for 166,000 acres of land for school purposes. It would seem to be a simple proposition that when the Government undertakes to take this land from these Indians, it would pay them a reasonable price for the land taken.

It was developed before our committee that this land is easily worth from $5, to $10 an acre. At a most moderate estimate it may be put at an average of $5 an acre. Then it was further developed before our committee, by the statement of Major McLaughlin, that in substance an agreement was made with the Indians for this purchase.

Now, I do not mean to say that any formal agreement was made, because there was none, but the circumstances under which Major McLaughlin undertook to say to these Indians that he would recommend that $2.50 should be paid for this land, and that was the specific amount that these Indians were demanding were sufficient to make a contract. When you consider the relations of these contracting parties, the representatives of a powerful Government on the one hand, the helpless Indians on the other, I think it can fairly be said in the light of what passed that there was almost a specific contract that $2.50 should be paid per acre for these lands. It was said in the course of this discussion, that as the United States Government is increasing the value of these lands, therefore it has a right, in substance, to reduce the price of the land that it takes and pays for, from $2.50, to $1.25 an acre.

The House ought to bear in mind that the opening of these reservations is not something that is sought after by the Indians, but something that is pressed upon these Indians by influences operating from the outside. This particular agency has been opened as the result of this pressure, and, that being so, you can not say that the Indians should pay in this indirect way for the benefit of the opening. If we have given any benefit to these lands, as the result of the other things that have been referred to in this debate, then the way for the Indians to get that benefit is by that simple and direct method which was taken in the State of Oklahoma, and that is to put this land up to the highest bidder.

I have never been able to ascertain, Mr. Speaker, why it is, with respect to these and other cases of this sort that have come before our committee, that a scheme that operates so well in general, a scheme that has operated so well in the State of Oklahoma, a scheme that is per se right, namely, to allow a man to come forward and on his judgment on the land, to make his bid, is not right under any, and all circumstances, under which land is put up to be sold for the benefit of any party?

Mr. HACKNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not recognize the fact that Oklahoma had been advertised for years, and that the eyes of the whole United States were centered on that land, and they were all on the lookout in making a rush there when the opening came? That would not apply to the other reservation.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Is the gentleman asking the question from the standpoint of the Indians, or of these other people?

Mr. HACKNEY. I am asking it from the standpoint of the Indians.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The answer naturally will be that the Indians, who are the people most interested in this land, and in what this land shall bring, will be only too glad to take the chances of putting the land up to the highest bidder, and ascertaining thereby whether they will get $1.25 an acre, or more for it.

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SAUNDERS. I can not yield further. I have only five minutes, and no time to yield.

Now, I want to say further, that my colleague on the committee [Mr. CARTER] says that he does not approve of taking this land from the Indians that is worth $5, or $10, an acre and paying them $1.25 for it, but under the exigencies of the occasion, he thinks it would be best to vote for the amended bill. Mr. Speaker, there is another way that we can meet the exigencies of this occasion, and an easy way, and that is to do what is the plain, obvious, direct and fair thing with these Indians, namely, when we take land worth $10 an acre, to pay them the agreed sum of $2.50 this being the pitiful sum that they are asking. [Applause.]

These are the facts of the case. Here is the statement of Mr. Commissioner Leupp and of Major McLaughlin, and, I say, now as I said in the beginning, that no one can read this statement without being impressed with the fact that what passed between Major McLaughlin, and the Indians, almost amounts in the highest form, and indeed in final form, to an absolute contract that they should be paid $2.50 an acre for the land.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield the gentleman two minutes more. So far as the Indians were concerned they so understood the situation.

Mr. SAUNDERS. They so understood it, and what was stated to them by Major McLaughlin was calculated to impress those people with the idea that the Government would pay them $2.50 per acre, and why should the United States Government not do it?

The Senate bill agrees to pay them $2.50 an acre for the land taken. What are the facts in the case as to its value?

As to the value of the land, it was agreed to in the deal between the Indians and Major McLaughlin. The Senate bill has done what is the plain and obvious thing for us to do—namely, to give the Indians $2.50 per acre, as agreed. This after all is far below the value of this land.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that taking all of these things together, no great hardship is going to follow to anyone if the result of our adverse action on this bill is to delay its passage. No mischief is going to result to anyone, as a result of that delay, and that being so, we ought to meet the exigencies of the situation by voting against this bill, and letting it be brought up again, as it can be, in this House, without this amendment being tacked to it. Then we can do what is just for these Indians.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, after the argument of the gentleman from Virginia I do not believe the facts of this case, as I understand them, can be stated any plainer to the House. It seems quite clear to me that the amendment ought not to be on the bill, and on account of it the bill ought to fail. Certainly, the gentleman can bring the matter before the House later on under a motion to suspend the rules, without the amendment, and in that way can give to the Indians for the school lands the $2.50 an acre that they understood they were to get from the United States Government, and that they were justified in expecting upon the statement which had been made to them by its agent. I hope the bill will be voted down. [Cries of "Vote!"]

OPENING OF CHEYENNE RIVER AND STANDING ROCK RESERVATIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules, discharging the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill, agreeing to the amendments, and passing the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the question of the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members; as many as favor the motion will, when their names are called, answer "yea;" those opposed will answer "nay;" those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 139, nays 79, answered "present" 17, not voting 152, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 21815. An act to amend the laws relating to navigation, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6363) granting title to a parcel of land in the city of Dubuque, Iowa, heretofore known as "St. Raphael's Cemetery," to the Archbishop of Dubuque and his successors in office and confirming and establishing title thereto accordingly.

SAFETY OF RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 19795) to promote the safety of employees upon railroads, and that the bill be passed as amended, as sent to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19795) concerning locomotive ash pans.

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 1st day of July, 1909, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad to use any locomotive in moving interstate or foreign traffic not equipped with an ash pan which can be dumped or emptied and cleaned without the necessity of any employee going under such locomotive.

SEC. 2. That on and after the 1st day of July, 1909, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to use any locomotive not equipped with an ash pan which can be dumped or emptied and cleaned without the necessity of any employee going under such locomotive.

SEC. 3. That any such common carrier using any locomotive in violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be liable to a penalty of $200 for each and every such violation, to be recovered in a suit or suits to be brought by the United States district attorney in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the locality where such violation shall have been committed; and it shall be the duty of such district attorney to bring such suits upon duly verified information being lodged with him of such violation having occurred; and it shall also be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to lodge with the proper district attorneys information of any such violations as may come to its knowledge.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce the provisions of this act, and all powers heretofore granted to said Commission are hereby extended to it for the purpose of the enforcement of this act.

SEC. 5. That the term "common carrier" as used in this act shall include the receiver or receivers or other persons or corporations charged with the duty of the management and operation of the business of a common carrier.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment or two.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, before that is done I want to make a request that I think will be complied with. I would ask that in line 8, on page 1, the word "dumped" be stricken out and the word "emptied" be inserted, and the same change be made in line 1 on page 2, because on all of the old forms of engines where the ash pan is low the conceded fact is that the pans can not be dumped, and the only purpose is to have them cleaned, as I understand it. The dumping is a mere immaterial matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Sometimes they blow them out, do they not?

Mr. WANGER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, then I modify my request by making that amendment, inserting, after the word "dumped," in line 8 on page 1, and in line 1 on page 2, the words "or empty."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will state that the passing of this bill will be a good day's work—

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked if there be objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I reserved the right to object and asked the gentleman from Illinois to yield to me for four or five minutes, and he yielded.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman has no time.

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi have five minutes' time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the bill may be considered as passed at the end of that five minutes, there will be no objection.

Mr. MANN. That is the request.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman modifies his request, that unanimous consent may be given for the discharge of the committee from the further consideration of the bill, and the passage of the bill with the amendments, and that the gentleman from Mississippi may have five minutes to address the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and the bill is passed, and the gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MANN. I do not want to take any advantage of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that. Mr. Speaker, the question that was put by the Speaker was not the request which was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], as the RECORD will show.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood it, and at least so stated it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Mississippi will not stickle about it, so long as he has the five minutes. He does not care, if the Chair thinks that that is the way of doing business that conduces to—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will indulge the Chair to state that the Chair stated the request as he understood it, and stated it plainly, and paused for an objection, and as neither the gentleman from Mississippi or any other gentleman objected, the Chair thought that he was authorized, with the approval of everybody, to announce that the bill was passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I shall not discuss that any further, because I want to discuss a matter so much more serious that I do not care a baubee about that, just at this moment.

Mr. Speaker, last year in the United States about fifty times as many employees were crippled or killed upon the railroads of this country, in proportion to the number of people traveling, as in Great Britain. The question of humanity in managing our roads is, in my opinion, of more importance than that of cheapness of rates. My reason for permitting this bill to pass by unanimous consent is because it is a bill for the preservation of human life. It is a bill in the interest of humanity itself. I once had the figures of how many men were killed per annum by being forced to go under locomotives in order to dump these ash pans.

I do not now remember, and I therefore can not state the figures, but it was a considerable number of people. Here is a bill that provides that the engines on these railroads shall be equipped with an ash pan which can be dumped or cleaned and emptied without the necessity of any employee going under the locomotive, and it provides, furthermore, in the second section, that on and after the 1st day of July, 1909, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to have any other sort of an ash pan. Then it goes on, in section 3, and provides a penalty that shall be visited upon any railroad which violates this law. In section 4 it makes it the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce the provisions of this act, and says: "All of the powers granted to that Commission are hereby extended to it for the enforcement of the act." The last section provides that the term "common carriers" here shall include a receiver or receivers of such property.

Mr. Speaker, party hostilities and dissensions, party programmes, party clashes, even the exposure of party impotency and deceit are of minor consideration whenever there is a question of obtaining legislation to save the lives of laboring men, or, for that matter, of any other class. I care not whether they be laboring men or not; but especially the lives of laboring men are to be considered who are forced to go into so many dangerous places. The great industrial army is subjected to more mortalities a year than an ordinary army in an ordinary war, as the actual statistics show. So that I have thought it wise to take this course of permitting the bill to pass by unanimous consent, and I wanted only an opportunity to explain to this side of the House, with whom I have had no opportunity to consult about varying the usual programme, why that was done. [Applause.]

PRINTING DIGEST AND MANUAL.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following House resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following House resolution, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 415.

Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 copies of the Digest and Manual of the Rules and Practice of the House of Representatives for the second session of the Sixtieth Congress, the same to be bound and distributed under the direction of the Speaker and Clerk of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this resolution is in the usual form?

Mr. LANDIS. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is the resolution which is usually passed and is part of the House procedure?

Mr. LANDIS. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution is agreed to.

PRINTING PROCEEDINGS OF CONFERENCE OF GOVERNORS.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following House concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution 41.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound 100,000 copies of the proceedings of the conference of the governors of the States and Territories, called by the President of the United States, to be held May 13, 14, and 15, 1908, to consider measures for the conservation of the country's natural resources, of which 35,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 65,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 2 strike out the words "one hundred" and insert the word "fifty." In line 8 strike out the word "thirty-five" and insert "fourteen." In line 9 strike out the words "and sixty-five" and insert the word "twenty-six," and at the end add the following: "and 10,000 copies for distribution by the President of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. This resolution is in the usual form and the publication is distributed in the usual way?

Mr. LANDIS. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the amendments are agreed to and the concurrent resolution as amended is agreed to.

There was no objection.

LIFE-SAVING APPARATUS, FARALLONE ISLANDS.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the passage of Senate bill 5083.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. KAHN. It is a life-saving proposition, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A life-saving station?

Mr. KAHN. No. If the gentleman will allow me—

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 5083) authorizing certain life-saving apparatus to be placed at the Farallone Islands, off the coast of California.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to cause a Lyle gun and the necessary bench apparatus used in connection with it to be placed at the Farallone Islands, off the coast of California, at such point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend, and to furnish ammunition for said gun and make repairs to the apparatus from time to time, as necessary.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to detail an experienced surfman from one of the life-saving stations on the coast of California for duty at the Farallone Islands for a sufficient time to instruct and drill the inhabitants of the islands as to the proper use and care of the life-saving apparatus.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

TRANSPORTATION OF EXPLOSIVES, ETC., IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up as unfinished business the bill H. R. 17228.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17228) to promote the safe transportation in interstate commerce of explosives and other dangerous articles, and to provide penalties for its violation.

Mr. SHERMAN. The pending motion, Mr. Speaker, was to suspend the rules and pass the bill, and on that motion debate has been exhausted, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, while I suppose it would not be in order, however, I have forgotten what the bill was—

Mr. SHERMAN. To regulate the transportation of explosives.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, when did all that transaction happen which the gentleman from New York talks about?

The SPEAKER. On the 9th day of April.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman will not ask for the passage of this bill without consideration. It is an important bill and—

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, debate has been exhausted. Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. When this bill was pending in the House, I gave notice that I desired to offer for consideration an amendment if any amendment was in order.

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rules is not subject to amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. If the motion is put, do we have twenty minutes' debate on each side?

Mr. SHERMAN. Debate was exhausted on the date it was considered, and we got to the point of taking a vote when we took a recess until the next day.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Debate was exhausted on what?

Mr. SHERMAN. On the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We did not take a vote then?

Mr. SHERMAN. No.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I rise for a parliamentary inquiry. Would it not be in order to have the proceedings of that day read?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. So that we could see what the motion was? Another parliamentary inquiry: I would like for the Speaker to state just what the motion was on that day, as we have not got it before us, and how much debate had been exhausted, and what the motion was, and under what rule it was exhausted.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen are seeking debate under the guise of a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Kentucky desires to make a parliamentary inquiry, and desires to state that he is not trying to debate the question. I would like to have some information. I desire to know whether the motion for the suspension of the rule requires a two-thirds vote to carry or whether it was made under the order of the House requiring only a majority vote?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Made prior to this rule.

The SPEAKER. At that time it required a two-thirds vote.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then I submit a parliamentary inquiry as to whether it can now be passed under a majority vote?

The SPEAKER. At this time it requires a majority vote.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not that suspend the rules further, and under that is not a second in order? I make that point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will acknowledge his error. The motion was made on the 9th day of April, while the rules of the House were amended for the remainder of the session on the 8th day of April.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to—

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection.

The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 122, nays 68, answered "present" 16, not voting 182, as follows:

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut with Mr. HEFLIN.

Mr. PEARRE with Mr. DE ARMOND.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio with Mr. HAMLIN.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, before the vote is announced I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the special rule that dispenses with the requirement of a two-thirds vote, and makes a majority vote sufficient upon a suspension of the rules, was not adopted until the 20th of April, 1908. At the time this motion was made to suspend the rules it required a two-thirds vote. I desire again to submit to the Chair the fact that under the rules when such motion was made, two-thirds was required for the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that since the roll call began, the Chair has examined the rule and the date, and finds that the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky is correct; but while it took two-thirds to pass the bill, if it had been voted upon the day that it was considered, twenty minutes' debate on each side, yet since that time the House, as a matter of procedure, as it was competent for the House to do, has adopted a new rule, that during the remainder of this session the rules shall be suspended upon a majority vote.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair will permit me a moment, The rule adopted by the House, the second part of it—

Mr. WILLIAMS. You have to recur to the old rule.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair will permit me, the second part of the special rule is only germane to the point of order, and it provides that "the vote on agreeing to the motion shall in all cases be a majority instead of two-thirds, and upon the demand of any Member opposed to the motion a second shall be considered as ordered." Now, it is clear, taking into consideration the plain meaning of this rule, that the proviso only relates to a future motion to suspend the rules, because the first proviso provides that such a motion shall be in order at any time and not simply as provided in Rule XXIII, and the last part of the second provision provides for the ordering of a second when a second is demanded, clearly indicating a future occurrence; and inasmuch as it related only to future motions, and inasmuch as this motion was made to suspend the rules prior to the adoption of the special rule, it can not be held to be retroactive and to affect a vote made upon a motion that was in order only where a two-thirds vote was required.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not require to hear—

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word upon the point of order before the Chair decides. The former rule—the old rule, and the new one as well—the one adopted prior to and the one adopted on April 20, provide "when a second shall be considered as ordered," and there shall be twenty minutes for debate upon a side. It was announced just now that the twenty minutes' debate upon a side had been exhausted on that day—the 9th of April. By an examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 10, I find that statement not to be a fact, but to be a mistake made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] when he made the assertion. I find on page 4710 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 9 that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] was speaking, whereupon the Chair, in accordance with another rule then in existence, interrupted him with the gavel and said:

In pursuance of an order of the House, the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the Chair declares the House in recess until to-morrow at 11.30 o'clock a. m.

The debate had not been concluded by five or six or more minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has the following memorandum from the Clerk, and the Clerk at the Speaker's table kept the time. For those opposing the motion the time was wholly exhausted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds for those advocating the motion that there were eleven minutes remaining, but in the control of the gentleman from New York, who did not choose to use that time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Under the control, on the contrary, of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER].

The SPEAKER. Well, the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not demand—

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, the gentleman from Pennsylvania had no chance for recognition or for the purpose of offering an amendment to the bill, as he desired.

The SPEAKER. The bill was not subject to amendment; and as the time was not claimed by those who favored the bill, those who opposed the bill can not complain.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the gentleman in charge of the bill had no opportunity to claim the time; the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] insisted upon a vote.

The SPEAKER. Precisely; and the gentleman in charge of the bill or some other gentleman for the bill did not choose to demand recognition, was not compelled to demand recognition, and did not demand recognition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Do I understand—

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. Under the Constitution, a quorum consists of a majority of the Members of the House.

On a vote, a majority of the Members present, a quorum voting, passes the bill. On a suspension of the rules the requiring of more than a majority is a question of procedure. Under ordinary conditions the rules very properly provide that there shall be two days in a month for a suspension of the rules, with twenty minutes on a side for debate, and a two-thirds vote of those present, a quorum being present, to pass the bill. When this motion was made and the bill was debated, it became unfinished business. Since that time the House has changed its procedure and has provided that a motion to suspend the rules shall prevail by a majority vote.

Upon this vote the yeas are 122, the nays are 68, present 16. A majority having voted in the affirmative, the rules are suspended, and the bill is passed.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASES—KUNZ v. M'GAVIN—MICHALEK v. SABATH.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman rises to a privileged report or question?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Report and resolution. By direction of Committee on Elections No. 3 I wish to submit a report in the contested election case of Stanley H. Kunz, contestant, v. Charles McGavin, contestee, from the Eighth Congressional District of the State of Illinois, and also a resolution, and I ask for present consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Stanley H. Kunz was not elected a Representative in the Sixtieth Congress from the Eighth Congressional District of the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That Charles McGavin was duly elected a Representative in the Sixtieth Congress from the Eighth Congressional District of the State of Illinois, and is entitled to a seat therein.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Before that motion is put, in order to save time, I wish also to submit, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 3, the report of that committee in the contested-election case of Anthony Michalek v. Adolph J. Sabath from the Fifth Congressional District of Illinois, and also the resolution in that case.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Anthony Michalek was not elected a Representative in the Sixtieth Congress from the Fifth Congressional District of the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That Adolph J. Sabath was duly elected a Representative in the Sixtieth Congress from the Fifth Congressional District of the State of Illinois and is entitled to a seat therein.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution in the first case will be agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the gentleman has offered two resolutions together, the one as an amendment to the other, the two to be considered as one.

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was not that the case?

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman reported the first resolution, and then he reported the second resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that one of them—the one first offered—may go through by unanimous consent, and the other may not?

The SPEAKER. Well, the question could be taken on both by unanimous consent, that the resolution in each case be agreed to. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that both resolutions be considered as passed by the House.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I am entirely willing. I believe it is my place to ask unanimous consent that both be considered as passed at the same time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolutions, by unanimous consent, are agreed to. They will be journalized separately.

ESTIMATES FOR CLERICAL SERVICE.

Mr. GILLET. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 191) requiring estimates for the clerical service to be transmitted to Congress.

Resolved, etc., That there shall be transmitted to Congress through the Secretary of the Treasury by the head of each Executive Department and Government establishment at Washington, in addition to the estimates now required by law, estimates for the clerical service in their respective Departments for the fiscal year 1910, classified and graded according to the following schedule, without reference to the amount of salary that may be hereafter authorized as compensation for each class or subdivision, and the Committee on Appropriations is authorized to prepare appropriation bills in accordance with either form of estimate. Grade A in each class shall represent the highest ability and character of work in that class.

SCHEDULE.

Senior clerks: Employees who are assigned to work largely supervisory, or requiring the highest order of clerical ability, involving much original thought, consideration, and investigation. Grades A, B, C, D, and E.

Clerks: Employees who are assigned to work more or less routine, involving responsibility, special ability, and original thought, consideration, and investigation. Grades A, B, C, D, and E.

Junior clerks: Employees who are assigned to clerical work of a routine character requiring but little original thought or consideration, but requiring judgment, responsibility, and special skill. Grades A, B, C, D, and E.

Under clerks: Employees who are assigned to clerical work of a simple or routine character requiring care, accuracy, and skill. Grades A, B, C, D, and E.

SUBCLERICAL CLASS.

Employees whose duties are not clerical or mechanical, but require some special skill or involve personal responsibility, as messengers, watchmen, skilled laborers, sorters, and counters. Grades A, B, C, and D.

Employees engaged in rough and unskilled work, as laborers generally. Grades A and B.

Employees who enter the service at an early age and are engaged in light work, as messenger boys. Grades A, B, C, and D.

Employees whose work occupies only a part of the time each day, as charwomen and janitors. Grades A, B, and C.

Salaries of employees engaged in professional, technical, or scientific work shall conform as far as possible to the classes and grades of the above schedules.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BOWERS. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, a second is ordered. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi to twenty minutes.

Mr. GILLET. Mr. Speaker, this is a report from the Committee on Appropriations, and I think I can very briefly explain the purpose of it to the House, and I hope and think it will command general approval. Last Congress when we increased our own salaries I think there was a general understanding or expectation that an increase in the pay of the Army and of the Navy and of the clerical force of the Government would ultimately follow. This year, despite the financial depression, we have already raised the pay of the Army and the Navy, and now there remains the question, which is much agitated, whether the clerical force employed by the Government should not also share in this rise. The way that force is now appropriated for is by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The committee which had that in charge found that it was impossible under the present existing law to make any fair rearrangement of salaries, because I think every Member of this House recognizes the fact that the salaries to-day in the clerical force are entirely unreasonable and unscientific as compared with each other, and therefore a certain per cent increase for all would not be just. You will find a clerk, for instance, getting $1,800 sitting beside a clerk who is getting $1,200, both doing exactly the same kind of work. You will find a man engaged in difficult employment, employment requiring a high grade of skill, receiving less salary than a clerk who is doing the simplest kind of copying work.

As the House is aware, this whole question had been investigated and examined by what is known as the "Keep Commission," and both in the last session and this session the Committee on Appropriations has considered the subject, and finally has drawn up the grading which is contained in the resolution just read to the House, and which provides that employees shall be graded not as now, simply in accordance with the salaries they receive, but as far as we can provide in accordance with the class of work they do. We attained the best classification we could arrive at, but we do not ask the House to adopt this as a law, because we ourselves are not satisfied to what result it would lead.

But this resolution does provide that next year the heads of all the Departments, in sending their estimates to Congress, shall classify their force in accordance with the present custom and also in accordance with this new classification, so that we can take it up and see what the result would be and whether it is capable of being framed into a law, compare the present system and the other system, and see if the results of a change would be advantageous, and if we think it would be desirable to give it a test.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Will he yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This resolution does not bind anybody to do anything?

Mr. GILLETTE. No; except it binds the heads of the Departments to send in their estimates in both ways, in the old way and the new way.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is a sort of feeler?

Mr. GILLETTE. Exactly; it is a tentative proposition.

Mr. DWIGHT. Does it decrease or increase the salaries?

Mr. GILLETTE. It does not touch that subject. It compels the heads of the Departments to send in their estimates, and then the committee and the House can take it up and see if under this new arrangement there can be a gradation of salaries according to the new rule, and what the cost would be.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand it, the committee is attempting to see if it can not secure a classification according to their rank and worth?

Mr. GILLETTE. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that the present anomaly of having some one do the same work as another, one receiving $600 and the other $900, may possibly be put an end to, if the House can find a practical way of doing it after this report.

Mr. GILLETTE. That is it exactly.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I do not see the necessity of my making any further statement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the joint resolution.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, on that proposition I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The point is sustained. No quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absentees, and the question will be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 182, nays 1, answered "present" 20, not voting 185, as follows:

HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. KNOX. I am directed by the Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 186) relating to the assignment of space in the House Office Building, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration. Identically the same joint resolution was introduced by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and referred to the committee, and I also report it back and ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania reports a House joint resolution, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I simply desire to state, in order that the record may be properly understood, that the joint resolution which was introduced by me was introduced at the request of a leading Member of the House of Representatives. I believe it has already been stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania that it is identical with the resolution that has been since passed by the House of Representatives. So there is no conflict between the two measures in any particular. In other words, the whole matter is in the interest of the House of Representatives, and is made necessary by the fact that their's is not a continuing body; and in order that they may have a permanent set of rules to govern the Office Building, it is necessary that there should be action by Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KNOX. I move that the joint resolution (S. R. 95) relating to the assignment of space in the House Office Building be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF OKLAHOMA CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

Mr. GORE. If there is no conference report pending, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 5329) to provide for an appropriation to defray the expenses of the constitutional convention and State election of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. I call for the regular order, which is the bill that was agreed to be taken up at the request of the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is in force after the routine morning business is closed. The routine morning business is not yet closed. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

PAPERS IN LABOR CASES.

Mr. CULBERSON. Several days ago, Mr. President, I asked and obtained the leave of the Senate to have printed as a Senate document certain injunctions that have been issued in the Federal courts and in State courts in labor cases. I desire this morning to ask leave to have printed as a Senate document a copy of an injunction issued in the United States circuit court for the western district of New York in the case of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, complainant, v. The Switchmen's Union of North America et al., and also I desire to present a paper touching the imprisonment of William H. Webber and John Haddow for contempt of court in certain labor cases and their pardon by the President of the United States. My request is for leave to print as a Senate document the papers to which I have referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the papers submitted by him may be printed as a document.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the last-named document, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. CULBERSON. The last document is a paper relating to the imprisonment of William H. Webber and John Haddow for alleged contempt of court and their pardon by the President of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think that the pardon was an improper one, or what point does the Senator mean to bring out by having the document printed?

Mr. CULBERSON. The object in printing it is to suggest the undue extent to which the judicial authority has gone in contempt labor cases. I have not examined the paper critically, but in my judgment the pardon of the President was proper. I think it was recommended by the then Attorney-General of the United States, who is now a member of this body from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course if the Senator vouches for the paper, I shall not object, but I think papers printed as a document ought to be very carefully examined. I have in mind some instances where abuses have crept in in that regard.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire frankly that I have not read all of it, but I will read it, if he suggests it, before it is printed. But I ask leave now that it may be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course if the Senator vouches for it now, I shall not object.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not vouch for it, because I have not read it all.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not object if the Senator asks to have it printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CROW INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask to have printed as a supplement to Senate Document No. 445, Sixtieth Congress, first session, certain papers relating to the hearings held before the Committee on Indian Affairs relating to the Crow Indian Reservation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HEARING ON ANTI-INJUNCTION AND LABOR BILLS.

Mr. GORE. I ask to have printed as a document a hearing held before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives February 5, 1908, on the Pearre anti-injunction and labor bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator what the document is?

Mr. GORE. It is a hearing before the House committee by Mr. Spelling with reference to injunction. It seems that we will not be able to discuss the measure at the present session of Congress, and I desire to have it printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUGAR-BEET PRODUCTION.

Mr. TELLER. I present data compiled by Truman G. Palmer together with beet-sugar resolutions passed at the national irrigation congresses in 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896, the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress in 1903, 1906, and 1907, together with the 1907 State legislatures of Colorado, Wyoming, and Michigan, and the National Association of Retail Grocers, remonstrating against any further reduction of the duty on tropical sugar, and also the sugar plank of the Republican national platform of 1906, together with the promises to farmers from the National Campaign Text-Book of 1900. I move that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

UINTAH INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that 500 additional copies of House document No. 671, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, being a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of surveys and examination of the Uintah Indian Reservation be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DEPEW. If the morning business is closed—

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GORE. I want to know if I am correct in supposing that prior to 2 o'clock unobjected bills on the Calendar are the regular order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They are not this morning, as a special order was made yesterday by unanimous consent at the request of the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], and that will displace the regular order.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from New York if he will wait a moment until we take a vote on the resolution offered as a substitute by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK]? There will be no discussion of it at all, I understand.

Mr. DEPEW. I have yielded the floor several days—

Mr. TELLER. If there is to be any discussion, we will not attempt to continue it.

Mr. DEPEW. I yielded to this resolution yesterday when the Senator from Ohio in the most bland and amiable way said there would be no possibility of any discussion, and at the end of two hours it was still pending, and I yielded to another Senator, who said he would take half an hour, and he spoke four. I think I must insist on the consideration of House bill 21844, according to the unanimous consent given yesterday.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 21129. An act to provide for refunding stamp taxes paid under the act of June 13, 1898, upon foreign bills of exchange drawn between July 1, 1898, and June 30, 1901, against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries, and authorizing rebate of duties on anthracite coal imported into the United States from October 6, 1902, to January 15, 1903, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

H. J. Res. 191. Joint resolution requiring estimates for the clerical service to be transmitted to Congress, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CONFERENCE OF GOVERNORS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound 50,000 copies of the proceedings of the conference of the governors of the States and Territories, called by the President of the United States, to be held May 13, 14, and 15,

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the concurrent resolution be considered and adopted at this time.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

LANDS IN SOUTH DAKOTA AND NORTH DAKOTA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1385) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, which were:

INJURIES TO GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and, under the unanimous consent agreement, the Chair lays before the Senate House bill 21844.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21844) granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pending amendment, which is the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN].

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 11, strike out the words "Secretary of Commerce and Labor" and insert "court of the United States for the district in which the injury is inflicted."

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] moved to insert the word "circuit" before the word "court," so that it amended the clause will read:

All questions of negligence or misconduct shall be determined by the circuit court of the United States for the district in which the injury is inflicted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if, in his judgment, that would provide for a case where the injury occurred in the Canal Zone.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was on my feet for the purpose of making the very suggestion the Senator from Connecticut has now made. I offered the amendment the other day, not because I was in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi, but in order to perfect it if it was to be passed at all.

It seems to me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi ought not to be adopted. I can see many difficulties which might arise if the bill should provide in accordance with that amendment. For instance, the suggestion made by the Senator from Connecticut is one of them. As I understand it there is no court of the United States in the Canal Zone, and so whether we put in the word "circuit" or leave it out the amendment would not apply in that sort of a case. Neither could it apply to injuries occurring in any of the insular possessions, I understand.

Mr. President, it was suggested the other day while this bill was under consideration that the provisions submitting questions of negligence or misconduct to the determination of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor would be invalid as an attempt to confer upon that administrative officer judicial power. I do not understand that that would be the effect of the legislation. The result of the entire legislation is to create a class of claims against the United States which would not exist but for the legislation. In other words, if no legislation at all is passed upon this subject none of the persons who come within the terms of the law would have any right of action or a claim against the United States whatever. So, by this legislation, it is proposed to confer upon these persons a pure gratuity.

I submit it is self-evident that where the Government of the United States undertakes to confer a right upon an individual which but for the legislation would not exist, it may itself impose conditions upon which the right would attach. One of the conditions which is annexed to this bill is that the United States Government shall reserve to itself through one of its Departments the right to determine whether the person seeking the relief has been guilty of negligence or misconduct.

It falls, I understand, expressly within the terms of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States v. Ferreira in 13 Howard. That was a case arising under the Spanish treaty which, among other things, provided that—

The United States shall cause satisfaction to be made for the injuries, if any, which by process of law shall be established to have been suffered by the Spanish officers and individual Spanish inhabitants by the late operations of the American Army in Florida.

Under the terms of that treaty Congress passed an act which, among other things, provided that the judges of the superior court established at St. Augustine and Pensacola should receive and adjust claims arising under that provision of the treaty, and it provided further—

That in all cases where the judges shall decide in favor of the claimants the decisions, with the evidence on which they are founded, shall be by the said judges reported to the Secretary of the Treasury—

I call particular attention to this provision of the law—who—

Relating to the Secretary of the Treasury—

on being satisfied that the same is just and equitable, within the provisions of the treaty, shall pay the amount thereof to the person or persons in whose favor the same is adjudged.

Under the terms of that law the Secretary of the Treasury not only undertook to pass upon questions of fact, but he undertook to pass upon the meaning of the law—that is, he undertook to say that the law did not apply to certain classes of persons; and the Supreme Court of the United States held that he was not thereby exercising a part of the judicial power of the United States. I read from the opinion of the court, on page 46:

The law of 1823, therefore, and not the stipulations of the treaty, furnishes the rule for the proceeding of the Territorial judges, and determines their character. And it is manifest that this power to decide upon the validity of these claims is not conferred on them as a judicial function to be exercised in the ordinary forms of a court of justice. For there is to be no suit; no parties in the legal acceptance of the term are to be made—no process to issue; and no one is authorized to appear on behalf of the United States or to summon witnesses in the case. The proceeding is altogether ex parte, and all that the judge is required to do is to receive the claim when the party presents it and to adjust it upon such evidence as he may have before him or be able himself to obtain. But neither the evidence nor his award are to be filed in the court in which he presides, nor recorded there; but he is required to transmit both the decision and the evidence upon which he decided to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the claim is to be held if the Secretary thinks it just and equitable, but not otherwise. It is to be a debt from the United States upon the decision of the Secretary, but not upon that of the judge.

So the court proceeds along that line. Finally, a little further along in the opinion, this language is used, and I invite particular attention to it because I think it completely answers the contention which was made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] with reference to this proposed legislation. The Supreme Court says:

Nor can we see any ground for objection to the power of revision and control given to the Secretary of the Treasury. When the United States consent to submit the adjustment of claims against them to any tribunal they have a right to prescribe the conditions on which they will pay. And they had a right, therefore, to make the approval of the award by the Secretary of the Treasury one of the conditions upon which they would agree to be liable. No claim, therefore, is due from the United States until it is sanctioned by him, and his decision against the claimant for the whole or a part of the claim as allowed by the judge is final and conclusive. It can not afterwards be disturbed by an appeal to this or any other court, or in any other way, without the authority of an act of Congress.

And again, on page 48:

The powers conferred by these acts of Congress upon the judge, as well as the Secretary, are, it is true, judicial in their nature, for judgment and discretion must be exercised by both of them. But it is nothing more than the power ordinarily given by law to a commissioner appointed to adjust claims to lands or money under a treaty, or special powers to inquire into or decide any other particular class of controversies in which the public or individuals may be concerned. A power of this description may constitutionally be conferred on a secretary as well as on a commissioner, but is not judicial in either case, in the sense in which judicial power is granted by the Constitution to the courts of the United States.

So in the legislation under consideration, when the Government of the United States agrees to recognize a claim which but for the legislation would not exist, it may impose such conditions upon its agreement as it pleases; and one of the conditions which it may impose is that questions of fact and even questions of law must first of all be submitted to and determined by an administrative officer.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Inasmuch as the whole controversy as to whether this is a conferring of judicial power upon an executive branch arises from the use of the word "negligence," I ask the Senator from Utah if in his opinion it would not be wise to strike out in line 7 of page 2 the words "negligence or" and leave the bill so that it would read:

That no compensation shall be paid under this act where the injury is due to the misconduct of the employee injured.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not see that that would in any manner help the matter. I do not see how it would affect it in any way. My contention is that we have the right to submit to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for his determination any question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree with the Senator on that point; but there are those who do not think as the Senator from Utah does, and it seemed to me that it would not at all weaken the bill but would strengthen it to strike out the words "negligence or" and leave the question then with the Secretary to determine simply whether there had been misconduct or not. It seemed to me that the word "misconduct" is broad enough to include negligence, but not to include that legal kind of negligence about which there has been so much discussion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the word "misconduct" is broad enough to include negligence, then we would not in any manner be altering the bill by striking out the word "negligence." I see no reason why we should strike out either word.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I stated—I believe yesterday or the day before—that I was willing to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah if it would improve the bill any. I have no objection to it, and if I am permitted to do so, I accept the amendment that was offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment which I offered.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, let the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] be read as it now stands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 2, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the words "Secretary of Commerce and Labor" and to insert "court of the United States for the district in which the injury is inflicted."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. What became of the pending amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment which has just been stated is the pending amendment. The next amendment is the one which is to be proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do.
Mr. CULBERSON. This provision reads, as it stands in the bill:

All questions of negligence or misconduct shall be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The print of the bill which I have before me strikes out the words "Secretary of Commerce and Labor" and adds "court of the United States in which the injury is inflicted."

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I will state, if the Senator from Texas will allow me, that that is the amendment which was proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] which was not adopted. That is the amendment which is now pending, and it is further proposed to be amended by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from New York, is it proposed to give the circuit courts of the United States jurisdiction in cases arising under this act in suits against the United States?

Mr. DEPEW. It is not. This is proposed purely as an administrative measure.

Mr. CULBERSON. How can you confer such jurisdiction as that upon a judicial body?

Mr. DEPEW. There is no question whatever on the decisions which have been quoted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] yesterday and by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] this morning, that such jurisdiction can be conferred; that it has been conferred, and that it has been acted upon in many cases. Now, we have—

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from New York, just as a matter of law, if he does not think it would be best, if we are going to refer this to the judiciary at all, to adopt such an amendment as this:

The employee or other beneficiary may bring suit in the circuit court of the United States against the United States in the district in which the beneficiary or employee resides or in which the injury occurred for the compensation provided for herein; and the question of negligence shall be determined by the jury, or by the court if no jury is demanded, and such suit shall be instituted within one year from the date of the injury.

I will ask the Senator from New York if he does not believe, if this question is to be referred to the judiciary at all, that it should be referred as a judicial question?

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I do not think that it should be referred at all to the courts. This is purely an administrative measure, in the interest of the workmen engaged in hazardous employment under the Government of the United States. It is intended that they shall get relief immediately upon the injury occurring, and that the process by which it shall be had shall be inexpensive and as simple as possible, and purely administrative. The same thing is done by the Postmaster-General in reference to postal clerks in the railway mail service, and it is done by the Secretary of the Treasury in reference to the people who are engaged in the Life-Saving Service.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] if it differs at all in principle from an allowance made by the Government in the form of a pension for service rendered the Government or injuries received by soldiers, which is administered through the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. DEPEW. The principle is exactly the same.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, that is a debatable proposition, I think.

Mr. BORAH. I do not care to interrupt the Senator from Ohio, but I should like to have the amendment again read. We have not been able to hear it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I want to say that that is not a proposition to be so easily settled. It is a debatable proposition. I think there is a wide difference between pension laws and this proposition. In the case of a pensioner there is no question arising about negligence. If the applicant was in the service, if he received his disability while in the line of duty, he comes within the statute, and is entitled to a pension. To prove that, is to prove simply specific facts; but in this case it is different. There is no specific fact to be proven here. It is a judgment that is to be exercised, and it at least partakes of a judicial character to make a deduction and determine whether or not there was negligence or an absence of negligence; and in the case of railway mail clerks there is no question of negligence allowed to enter. It is simply a question whether they were injured in the line of duty; if so, they are entitled to the allowance which the Government makes. It is the same as to the Life-Saving Service. If the applicants for relief were injured in the line of duty or met with death in the line of duty, they are entitled to the relief which the statute provides. It is so in every other instance where the Government has ever undertaken to give relief of this character. It has never yet undertaken in such legislation to confer upon an administrative officer the exercise of a judicial power or the exercise of a power that partook of judicial characteristics.

There is the case read by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. It is a long case, and I do not want to enter into an argument about it. It is plainly and easily distinguished from this proposition. In every one of those cases the inquiry is as to specific facts that anybody can determine. If the specific facts be found in favor of the complainant, the complainant then has the relief that the statute provides; but if this officer decides against the complainant on the question of negligence, that is the end, according to this legislation, of his right to ask anything at the hands of the Government. Now, I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am yielding to the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] has the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not know the Senator from Wyoming had the floor. I thought I was recognized, and I thought I was speaking in my own time. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am always delighted to yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I want to say before closing, however, if the Senator from Wyoming will allow me to go that much further, that I do not care to stand on any kind of technicality. I think the Government ought to be liable to these employees, and I think it ought to be required in some expeditious way to meet the liability for injuries which they incur while in the line of duty. I think we ought to make this law all that it should be in form; that we ought to make it effective, and that we ought to pass it, and to pass it before we adjourn today.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not care to yield all the morning. I have only a very few words to say, but I will yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I simply want to ask the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] a question with reference to the case to which I directed attention a moment ago in 13 Howard. In the course of that case, from which I have already read, the court said:

Nor can we see any ground for objection to the power of revision and control given to the Secretary of the Treasury.

This is the point to which I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio:

When the United States consent to submit the adjustment of claims against them to any tribunal, they have a right to prescribe the conditions on which they will pay.

But in that case I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury undertook not only to pass upon questions of fact, but he undertook to construe the meaning of the law, because he held certain persons did not come within the terms of the law; but the Supreme Court of the United States held that he was within his power in doing that; that the law was not invalid because it authorized him to do it, and that, even though the question was of a judicial nature, he was not exercising the judicial power within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. FORAKER. In my own time I will answer that suggestion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that I can not follow the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] on the legal phase of this bill. His judgment is almost uniformly so good upon matters of that kind that I hesitate to disagree with him; but I am so clearly of the opinion that there is nothing of a judicial nature entering into this bill that I must say a word in that connection.

The Senator is not entirely fortunate in his illustration of the power of the Commissioner of Pensions. The power of the Commissioner of Pensions is to decide exactly such a question as is to be decided here. For instance, if the Senator will recall it, in one of our pension laws it is not necessary that the disability arise from injuries received or disease contracted in the line of duty. By one of our laws a veteran of the civil war, if he become disabled or dependent, may make application for a pension, even if he is not able to trace disability to injuries received in the service. Under that law he has to establish to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Pensions three things: First, that he was in the service and honorably discharged therefrom; second, that he has the disability complained of; and, third, that that disability was not the result of his own misconduct or negligence—the term “negligence” is not used, but it means negligence—that it is not by his own fault.

Mr. GALLINGER. Nor the result of vicious habits.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Nor the result of vicious habits. That is as much a matter of judicial determination as is the matter of negligence as proposed in this bill.

Now I want to address one word to the amendment itself: Of course the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] is aware of the fact that if his amendment prevails it absolutely destroys the purpose and plan of this bill. The purpose of the bill is not to give the employee a right of action against the United States; it is not in any sense to remove the power of sovereignty, which, in its own protection, every sovereign power does interpose; it is not to give the beneficiary the right to sue the Government or to go into any court; but it is simply saying to the employee, “If you are injured in the service of the Government, inasmuch as we have denied you the right which the employee of every corporation has to recover compensation for injuries, we will provide, if the injury is caused without your misconduct, that the Government shall pay you a certain amount when you shall have satisfied the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that you are entitled to it under the limitations of the law which gives it to you.” That is all there is to it.

The practical effect of the amendment would be to destroy the remedy. No man who is injured can afford to go into a United States court and suffer the long, tedious, and expensive process of a suit in a United States court for the purpose of recovering the very small amount to which this bill would entitle him. So I say that the object of the bill being to give speedy—not adequate, but speedy—relief to the employee, the amendment should not, I think, be adopted.

Mr. FORAKER obtained the floor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will allow me just a moment, I have a request to make.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What the Senator from Ohio said about finishing this bill impressed me very greatly, as I am sure it must have impressed every other Senator. He said that we ought to finish this bill to-day and pass it. Therefore, Mr. President, my mind working upon that remark of the Senator from Ohio, I ask unanimous consent that, before the Senate adjourn to-day, we shall vote upon this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that before adjournment to-day a vote be taken on the pending bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if we could have any assurance that this constitutional argument would ever cease, I should have no objection. I have got some business amendments to offer to this bill. If the Senator feels that he and the other constitutional lawyers of the Senate will get through in any reasonable time, I will not object; but if all the day is to be consumed in arguments, with no two Senators agreeing on the proposition—being worse than doctors in that regard—I should like to know what suggestion he can make on that point.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In answer to that, I will say to my friend, the Senator from New Hampshire, that thus far in the discussion of this bill I have not taken any time whatever in arguing one way or the other. All the time I have consumed—which perhaps has not been half an hour all told—was to get the bill up for consideration and to advance it. I do not intend to take any part in the argument as I now see it being conducted. I can not answer for other Senators, of course, upon that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as the Senator requests that the vote be taken before adjournment, which may be midnight if necessary, I will not object to the request.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to make this suggestion to the Senator from Indiana: The only purpose in consenting to a vote before adjournment is to assure the consideration of a bill on a certain day and its disposition on a certain day, generally a request made for some day in advance. Now, it is a matter absolutely within the control of the Senate to remain in session, if the majority desires to do so. The Senator does not require to have unanimous consent for that purpose. If we get through the discussion, of course the Senate will be ready to vote; and if we are not through with it, we ought not to vote. So that, it seems to me, the only purpose of making the request now is to cut off debate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, no; I did not fix any hour.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know what the request is? I have not been able to hear it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana requests unanimous consent that the Senate vote upon the pending bill before adjournment to-day.

Mr. TELLER. I enter an objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], to remove any objection he may have in his mind, that in case the request I make is at this time agreed to, I shall not offer any substitute to the bill, if we can come to a vote. Does that help any?

Mr. TELLER. It does not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator says it does not help?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I hope I have not taken any time in discussing this bill that it was not necessary to take, and I hope I have not committed any offense in referring to a question raised in my mind as to the character of the bill as a constitutional question; but whether I have or not, Mr. President, I think I shall have to be allowed to take all the time I want and to say what I please, so that I say it politely. I have no antagonism to this bill; I have only friendship for the bill. I want a bill passed, but I want it to be a good bill when we do pass it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator meant to rebuke me in that observation, I accept it with due humility. I confess—if the Senator will permit me a moment further, as a layman—to astonishment that when we have precisely the same method of compensating injured postal clerks and members of the Life-Saving Service, and there has been no question whatever raised in regard to it, we should spend hour after hour discussing whether or not it is constitutional to pay the artisans and employees sought to be provided for in this bill. Mr. President, I can not understand why it is necessary to consume so much time on that proposition; but, of course, I shall listen with very great interest to any observation the Senator from Ohio wishes to make on that point. If he will allow me to make a further suggestion, I will say that we have spent a good many hours already in the discussion of the constitutional aspects of this question.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator meant to rebuke me by referring to constitutional arguments that have been indulged in, I do not accept his rebuke with humility, but I resent it as uncalled for.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not intend any rebuke.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire, who is always polite, would single me or any other Senator out for a rebuke, certainly not so far as this bill is concerned. There has not been any undue discussion. This bill was called up here, I think, day before yesterday at 2 o'clock, or after 2 o'clock, by the Senator from New York [Mr. DEFEW]. I did not know, until it was called up and read and the discussion of it was entered upon, that such a bill was on the Calendar. As I stated then, I happened to be ill when it was considered in the committee. It was there, I see, only two or three days, and I did not get the benefit of the discussions that were engaged in in the committee, if there were any, and upon reading the bill here in my seat some questions arose in my mind, to which I called the attention of my colleagues on the committee and my colleagues in the Senate, not in a controversial spirit, as I then said, but only to get the benefit of their opinions. It seemed to me, at first blush, that to decide whether or not a complainant against the Government had been guilty of negligence was the exercise of a judicial function. I did not undertake to say that it was, but it occurred to me that it was, and I wanted the benefit of my colleagues' opinions upon that subject.

We drifted along in a discussion that lasted for an hour, or perhaps two hours, but not more than that. The bill then was put to sleep somehow or another, and it is now brought out again for the first time. I do not think there have been, in all, three hours of consideration of this bill in the Senate; and judging from the way in which it is drawn, its indefiniteness and its inconclusive provisions, as they appear to me, I do not think it has received three hours' consideration anywhere by anybody. I do not know when I have read a bill that has impressed me as open to more criticism than this one is; and yet I may be entirely in error about that.

To the principle of the bill, I have no opposition. I think the Government ought to be responsible to its employees when they are injured in the line of duty in the Government service; and I think some safe way ought to be provided in order that that remedy can be secured; but when the Senator says that we have had laws exactly like this, that no question has ever been raised regarding them, and for that reason there ought not to be any discussion here, I say to the Senator there is a distinction between the other laws to which he refers and this proposed law.

This is not the same kind of a law as that to which reference has been made as applying to the railway mail clerks in the particular we have been discussing, for in that law there is not a word said about negligence. A man must, of course, be injured while in line of duty. He can not come in and recover from the Government if he left his car at some station and went out wandering around the depot and got bitten by a dog or knocked over by somebody and was injured. The man must have been injured in line of duty. He must have met with some accident. That is all that he is required to establish; and that is the establishment of a specific fact. So it is in the case of the Life-Saving Service men. All they have to establish is that they have met with their injuries while in the line of duty; or, if they have met with death, their representatives must establish that they met death while in the line of duty, while actually in the service. Then their right follows as a matter of course. So it is in every other instance.

This is the first time, Mr. President, so far as I have been able to learn, that the Congress of the United States has undertaken to say that a claim of this kind may be allowed on the condition that the party did not incur his injury through his own negligence.

It seemed to me when that was developed in the course of the discussion a few days ago that that was a great, broad, important difference to which we ought to give consideration. The only objection I have to this bill is that it does not declare—I will not say the only objection, but I will say another objection, and a fundamental objection, I think, to this bill is that it does not make the Government primarily liable to compensate the employee for injuries he may receive, and that, according to the rules that apply in such cases, he may go into some court or before some tribunal to assert his right to compensation.

What sort of a remedy is it that we are proposing to give? Here is a man working at $1,000 a year. He has a family dependent upon him. He receives an injury that may result in death. At the outside he gets but one year's pay, a thousand dollars in all. If he was not guilty of negligence, he ought to be allowed to recover more than that, and his representatives should not be required to come to the Congress of the United States and make application here for a special act authorizing him to go into the Court of Claims, there bring a suit, and there be met by the attorneys of the Government to interpose the defense that he was guilty of negligence, carrying him through two or three years of time and wearing him out until he has spent more perhaps to recover from the Government than all he gets will amount to.

I think there ought to be the creation of that kind of liability and the creation of a tribunal before whom he can go without having to resort to Congress to get a special act. I know how much trouble there is about coming here to get a special act. I said the other day that a man was unfortunate who had a claim of this kind against the Government, and so he is. A young man of my acquaintance, and as deserving a young man as I know of anywhere, received an injury for which I thought the Government was directly liable. He came here. I was two years—the other day in referring to the case I said it was one year; I have since looked it up and find I was two years almost—in getting a bill passed through the two Houses authorizing him to do what? To go to the Treasury and get compensation? No; authorizing him to go to the Court of Claims, institute a suit there, and prosecute any claim he might have for damages; and he has been there in that Court of Claims ever since with the Government of the United States interposing through an assistant attorney-general, and setting up defenses, negligence, and every other kind of defense the Government can interpose.

Nobody knows when he will get a final judgment, and I doubt if he will ever get any final relief. But whether he gets relief or not, it is a very expensive sort of an operation for a young man living in Ohio to prosecute a suit through attorneys in the city of Washington. I should like to cure that. I think there is an injustice about it that ought not to be tolerated.

But, Mr. President, passing that by for the moment, for I will not undertake to secure an amendment of the bill of that kind, because I know that would open the door to still further debate, and possibly to constitutional arguments that might unduly keep us here, and I want to see this bill pass even in this form, if we can not get it in any better form—but passing that by, I say that if the Government has not suffered—and I have not heard anybody make any complaint to that effect—by reason of the men employed in the Life-Saving Service being allowed to recover a year's salary when they meet with death or meet with injury without regard to negligence, I do not believe the Government would suffer if the employees proposed to be provided for in this bill were allowed to recover without regard to negligence. Therefore I think every question about negligence ought to go out of this bill, though I think it would be well enough, perhaps, to insert a provision that there should be no recovery in case of willful misconduct bringing about the injury. I understood the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] the other day to say that statistics show that in England, where they have a similar law, many men have intentionally caused slight injury to themselves so that they might get compensation under the law. I do not know anything about the facts except as he stated them, but assuming that men are capable of having a thumb or a finger cut off intentionally in order that they might recover, or are capable of having themselves maimed in some other way so that they may have a claim against the Government, I would provide against willful injuries, injuries that are brought about by willful misconduct. It seems to me, however, that the question of negligence ought to go out of the bill, and injured employees ought to be allowed, if they can satisfy the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they were injured in line of duty, while in the service of the Government, to have the remedy that this bill is intended to afford.

I might pursue this further, Mr. President, but I do not want to do so for the reason I stated a moment ago. I want a vote on the bill. I am not going to offer an amendment, although I think the bill ought to be amended. It is nothing more to me than to any other Senator. I think it is due to us to express our opinions about it and try to perfect it if we can. If we do not want to hear each other further, let us pass it as it is.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I have stated before that preferably I would give the party injured the right to go before a court. I would very much enlarge the amount he should be entitled to recover; but it would involve delay to insist on changing this measure so as to incorporate such a provision. It would necessarily mean to delay the bill beyond this session, I think. It does seem to me that some measure of relief ought to be given these people, and some provision should be made for compensating them for injuries received while in the service of the Government. The Senator said—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I said it is evident now that the outlook is that the adjournment will not be as speedy as the Senator and others have thought. I do not think any person who has had much experience here will be surprised if it is not very much before the end of next week. So there will be time to act on amendments.

Mr. FULTON. I do not expect to risk any reputation I may have as a prophet by stating when the Congress will adjourn.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator did the other day.

Mr. FULTON. I do not think I made any suggestion as to the particular time. I said the other day that we were in the last hours of the session, but that is a very indefinite proposition.

To frame a bill submitting these questions to the court would require considerable consideration. It would require, no doubt, considerable time in conference, and as it is at least doubtful when we will adjourn, and as it is not improbable, I should say, that Congress may adjourn at any time within a few days, I shall not insist upon it. I should let the measure go substantially as it is, and hereafter take up the proposition of framing a bill to allow these people to go to the courts.

One objection I have to requiring them to come here and present their claims before the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is the great difficulty and the great expense that it will impose on those who reside without this city. Persons who are living 1,000 or 2,000 miles away from here will find it very difficult to produce their evidence satisfactorily. Of course, it may be that provision may be made, and doubtless it will be made, for taking depositions, filing affidavits, and that sort of thing; but it would be much better for the parties to go into court, and a court in the vicinity where they live. However, I hope this measure will be passed substantially as it is. It seems to be about the only thing we can do at the present time. I have no doubt myself, although I have the greatest consideration and respect for the Senator from Ohio, about the constitutionality of the measure.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, the adjournment of this Congress is likely to take place at any moment. This bill has passed the House unanimously. It has passed the Judiciary Committee of the House unanimously. The labor people of the United States, who are the ones interested and the ones to be benefited or otherwise by this bill, are exceedingly anxious that it shall be passed, and the opportunity should not be lost by amendment or unnecessary delay. I therefore move to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York moves to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. McLAURIN. I hope the Senator will not insist upon that motion. He is not going to expedite the measure by any such motion.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask that the amendment be again stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed on page 2, line 10, after the word "the," to strike out the words "Secretary of Commerce and Labor" and insert "circuit court of the United States for the district in which the injury is inflicted."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just one word in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio that there is a difference between this class of cases and the postal clerks and the Life-Saving Service, inasmuch as in the former statutes the question of negligence does not arise. The truth is that there is one other difference, and that is that postal clerks almost invariably are injured in railroad accidents and the Life-Saving Service men lose their lives in trying to save the lives of fellow-men. I think that that difference is quite as striking as the difference in the phraseology of the several statutes.

I want to suggest to the Senator from New York an amendment, and I am not going to insist upon any amendment I may offer if the Senator from New York thinks that I ought not to offer it. If the Senator will turn to the bill and read the first section he will find that it provides that "after the approval of this act any person . . . injured"—I will not read all the language—"shall be entitled to receive the same pay for one year thereafter;" that is, one year after the injury occurs the party injured shall be entitled to receive this benefit.

If the Senator will turn to section 9 he will find it reads:

That this act shall only take effect as to the right to receive compensation for any damages from accidents as to those occurring on and after August 1, 1908.

Mr. DEPEW. I will state that that amendment was made at the suggestion of the Department of Commerce and Labor, because they thought they could not get the necessary machinery prepared before that date.

Mr. GALLINGER. There seems to be a discrepancy there. In the first place it says after the approval of this act, and in the second place it says that he shall not be entitled to compensation for any damages from accidents occurring prior to August 1, 1908.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think there is a discrepancy, as the Senator from New Hampshire suggests. I myself have prepared an amendment, which I hope will be acceptable to the other body, perhaps; but undoubtedly the Senator himself has prepared an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not prepared an amendment. I thought of suggesting the striking out of section 9. That would make the act in proper form.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is administratively impossible for the Department to get the machinery in operation before that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, why not, in section 1, provide that the act shall not take effect until August 1, 1908?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The amendment I wish to propose is, in line 3, to strike out "after the approval of this act" and insert "on and after August 1, 1908."

Mr. GALLINGER. That makes it right; and then strike out section 9.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Leave in section 9.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should not think it necessary to duplicate the language.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I had prepared an amendment to take the place of section 9, so that section 9 might be intelligible. I do not think section 9 as it stands at present is intelligible.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it is somewhat unintelligible and somewhat unnecessary.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think it is somewhat unnecessary.

Mr. DEPEW. I think, if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming is adopted, and section 9 is stricken out, there will be no question.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In line 3, page 1, I move to strike out "after the approval of this act" and insert "on and after August 1, 1908."

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to inquire why the act is to be postponed in its operation until the 1st day of August? What is to become of the men who are hurt in July?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The bill does not become operative until the 1st day of August.

Mr. KNOX. Why?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The reason given is that it will be impossible to get the administrative machinery in operation before that time.

Mr. KNOX. That does not seem to me to be an adequate reason. The right may exist and the machinery may be applied when it is effective.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the words "after the approval of this act" and insert "on or after August 1, 1908."

Mr. GALLINGER. "On and after."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out section 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to make an inquiry with respect to the employees on the Isthmian Canal. I have never been there, and I do not know what classes of people are there employed. I recall the fact that in the early days of this project it was suggested that we would have laborers from Jamaica and other possessions of other countries. Is this provision for the employees of the Isthmian Canal Commission to apply to all classes, foreigners as well as citizens of the United States?

Mr. DEPEW. It is intended to reach every employee of the Government who belongs to one of these classes without regard to nationality.

Mr. GALLINGER. Whether he is an alien or a citizen?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not desire to interfere with the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it is on this point, I will yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is not.

Mr. DEPEW. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that there are probably in other services of the Government people who intend to become citizens, but have not perfected their naturalization.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume that is so. Yet it strikes me if a score or a hundred of those people from Jamaica should happen to be injured by a slide in the Canal Zone or by some other accident, it would be rather a singular circumstance that the Government of the United States should be responsible for their injury.

Mr. NELSON. The last reports I have read about the work of the Canal Commission indicate that they have come to the conclusion that those laborers from Jamaica are not the best class, and they are employing a different class of men in the main—

Mr. GALLINGER. I am glad to know that.

Mr. NELSON. From southern Europe and the Canary and Azore islands. They are white people of certain classes. They have ceased to employ the Jamaica negroes, whom they have found unsatisfactory.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am glad to know that, and hence I will not press the point.

The Senator from Washington a day or two ago called attention to lines 1 to 5, on page 3:

And if any child shall arrive at the age of 16 years during the said year, the portion of such child shall cease to be paid to such child from the date on which such age shall be attained, but shall be added to the amount to be paid to the remaining beneficiaries, if there be any.

This benefit runs for only one year. A child at the time of the accident may be 15 years and 6 months old; and if this provision remains in the bill, when that child reaches the age of 16 (or six months thereafter), the child will be cut off and the benefit will go to some other beneficiary, if there is any. A child, especially a girl, at the age of 16 years needs assistance just as much as at 15 years and 6 months, and the benefit can last one month or two or three months, at the utmost less than a year. It seems to me the Senator from New York should agree to have that language stricken out.

Mr. DEPEW. I accept it.

Mr. GALLINGER. After the word "any," where it first occurs in line 1, page 3, strike out the remainder of the section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, after the word "any," strike out the semicolon and the remainder of the section and insert a period.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In section 3 it is provided that if an accident occurs, the head of the bureau or independent office under which the person was employed shall make a report to the Department of Commerce and Labor, but this language occurs, commencing in line 13:

Such report shall state, first, the origin and nature of the accident and the probable duration of the injury resulting therefrom.

It seems to me, to ask the head of a Department or the head of an independent bureau to report to the Department what, in his opinion—he not being a medical man—will be the probable duration of the injury is absurd.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator allow a suggestion in that connection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The purpose of the bill is to have examinations made. I suggest to the Senator that the head of the Department might receive from the man who has received the injury information as to probably how long it would last.

Mr. GALLINGER. It would not be worth anything.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Except to call to the attention of the Secretary the fact that an examination ought to be made.

Mr. FORAKER. It is not the Secretary of Commerce and Labor who makes this report. It is the foreman under whom the party is working when he is injured who makes the report. That is passed on finally by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. But in the first instance it is the immediate superior officer of the party injured.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from New York thinks that language ought to remain in, although it strikes me as being not only unnecessary but worse than that, I shall not offer the amendment.

Mr. DEPEW. I think the language is necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will not offer the amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. It does not necessarily follow that it is simply the opinion of the party making the report. The superintendent will gather all the facts in regard to the accident. There may be a doctor there from whom he will obtain information.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course there may be a doctor, but the fact is that a layman is expected to report as to how long the party injured will be ill. Doctors can not tell that as a rule.

Mr. FORAKER. In the next section there is provision for a report from a physician.

Mr. GALLINGER. Where does the Senator find that?

Mr. FORAKER. The middle of page 4.

In the case of incapacity for work lasting more than fifteen days, the injured party or his legal representatives—

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but this antedates that by fifteen days. I have no objection to its remaining in, but it is an absurdity.

On page 4, line 7, when a man loses his life the bill provides—

This shall be accompanied by the certificate of the attending physician setting forth the fact and cause of death, or the nonproduction of the certificate satisfactorily accounted for.

I am sure the Senator from New York does not want to retain that language. If a man is killed a physician is called in all such cases. He has to give a certificate to the local officials designating the cause of death. It is required in every civilized community, and he ought to be required to make a certificate in a case of this kind and not have cases come to Washington without a medical certificate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from New Hampshire must be aware that there are many accidents resulting in death where there is no physician at or after the time of the accident. Very many have happened within my experience.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the country from which I come certificates are required. If, however, there are occasions on which physicians are not called—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is not at all uncommon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that remain in the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If that clause remains in, I think it ought to be amended, so as to read that "the nonproduction of the certificate shall be satisfactorily accounted for."

Mr. GALLINGER. That is better English. But if the Senator undertakes to perfect the English of this bill we will not vote on it to-day.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am aware of that.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is one of the most artistic bills ever framed. I feel sure every member of the Judiciary Committee will disclaim any part in its phraseology. I think that amendment ought to go in—that the nonproduction of the certificate shall be satisfactorily accounted for.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "certificate," in line 8 on page 4, it is proposed to insert "shall be" before "satisfactorily," so as to read

Or the nonproduction of the certificate shall be satisfactorily accounted for.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The same correction should be made in line 18.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 18, after the word "certificate," it is proposed to insert "shall be," so as to read:

Or the nonproduction of the certificate shall be satisfactorily accounted for.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have just a word to say. I am in favor of this bill. I am in favor of the spirit and purpose of it. I think, however, it is too limited in its scope. For instance, we have here in the District of Columbia a great Government Printing Office, where we have machinery and where men are injured. We have the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, where men are injured. Those establishments ought to be included, but I do not propose to offer an amendment, as it would probably delay the final vote, for which I am very anxious. If we should include everything that ought to go into the bill, we would make a much larger bill than it is desirable to consider at the present time. Mr. President, I have no further amendments to offer to the bill. There are a good many points to which I wanted to call attention, but I will desist and content myself by saying to my good friend, the Senator from Ohio, who informed me that if I meant a certain thing he would resent it, that if my human nature had asserted itself I should have responded by saying that it would not make very much difference to me whether he resented it or not. But I did not say that. I had no purpose of criticising the distinguished Senator from Ohio or the other lawyers of this body who have made constitutional arguments on this question, but I want to say that I am extremely anxious that the constitutional arguments should come to an end, so that we may pass this bill and give this modicum of relief to those who, employed by the Government, are injured. Later on we can take up a more comprehensive and better-phrased bill than this, and do something more than this does for the men who are injured in the service of this great and rich Government.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. On page 2, line 2, where it provides "he shall be entitled to receive for one year thereafter, unless sooner able to resume work, the same pay as if he continued to be employed," I move to insert, after the word "unless," the words "in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 2, after the word "unless," it is proposed to insert the words "in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor."

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator will want to add a few words there, so as to read "unless he is sooner able."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought of that. But I wanted to change the language as little as possible.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that amendment be reported.

The SECRETARY. After the word "unless," in line 2, on page 2, it is proposed to insert:

He is, in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that some other word be used, because I think under the phraseology of the bill a female, as well as a male, is accorded relief.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. "Unless such employee."

Mr. CARTER. "Unless such employee."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Let the amendment be reported as now suggested.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 2, after the word "unless," it is proposed to strike out the words "he is" in a former amendment and insert "such employee," so as to read:

Unless such employee, in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. GALLINGER. "Is."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana what language in the bill seems to him to imply that the bill provides for female as well as male employees?

Mr. CARTER. In reply to the question of the Senator, I will say that the language in lines 3 and 4, on page 1—

That when, after the approval of this act, any person employed by the United States.

I think that would include females.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Following the line of suggestion and the inquiry already made, I move, in lines 20 and 21, on page 2, to strike out the words "the husband or father or son;" and to insert the words "said artisan or laborer."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Before that amendment is voted upon I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Montana. The whole of section 2, in my opinion, looks simply to the question of compensation of male employees. I do not know what the fact may be as to whether or not there are any female employees who are laborers in the manufacturing establishments, arsenals, and navy-yards, but I think very likely there may be some, and if there are it seems to me they ought to be entitled to compensation for injuries as much as the men. Section 2 provides:

That if any artisan or laborer so employed shall die during the said year by reason of such injury received in the course of such employment, leaving a widow—

Of course that language excludes a female. If it is to be amended so as to include specifically injuries to women, the whole section must be revised.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is perfectly plain that no such amendment as that is necessary. What is the language of the bill?

That if any artisan or laborer—

Male or female—

so employed shall die during the said year by reason of such injury received in the course of such employment, leaving a widow, or a child or children under 18 years of age.

Mr. PILES. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Montana, referring to comments I made on this section the other day, that the words "artisan or laborer," on line 12 of section 2, should be stricken out, and the word "person" inserted in lieu thereof, for if that is not done then the right to receive compensation in case of the death or injury of an artisan or laborer—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is done by the bill itself.

Mr. PILES. But not in the way and manner the bill is amended. Section 2 now applies to persons employed on fortification work, or construction work, or in the reclamation of arid lands.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As an artisan or laborer. It applies to any person employed by the United States as an artisan or laborer.

Mr. PILES. That is, if you change the words "artisan or laborer" in line 12 of section 2 to the word "person," it applies to both male and female employees.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Both male and female persons can be artisans or laborers. We have many laborers upon the rolls who are females.

Mr. PILES. That is perfectly true, but it does not make clear the purpose.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The purpose is to confine the bill to artisans and laborers.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I suggest that section 1 can be perfected by substituting for the word "he," on line 1, page 2, the words "such employee." If the bill is to cover both sexes the words "such employee" should be substituted for the word "he." I move as an amendment that the words "such employee" be inserted in place of the word "he."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada proposes an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 2, line 1, after the word "employment," strike out the word "he" and insert the words "such employee."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to offer one more amendment and then I will yield.

I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill to look at section 3. In line 10 it seems to me that not only the accident but the injury resulting therefrom should be reported. I suggest, in line 10, after the words "such accident," to insert "and the injury resulting therefrom."

Mr. DEPEW. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In line 14, page 3, section 3 reads:

Such report shall state, first, the origin and nature of the accident.

I am a little doubtful about what the word "origin" means in a legal document, and I suggest to the Senator from New York that it would be much more specific if he would agree to strike out the word "origin" and insert the words "time, cause," so that it will read:

Such report shall state, first, the time, cause, and nature of the accident.

Mr. DEPEW. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In the same line, after the word "accident," I move to insert the words "and injury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it seems to me that I should call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the suggestion that on page 2, line 20, after the word "father," there should be inserted the word "mother." In many instances there is no father living, and the dependents derive their rights through the injury to the mother. There seems to be no provision made covering that.

Mr. DEPEW. I think that is a very good suggestion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I offered an amendment that would cover that, striking out the words "husband, father, or son" and inserting "said artisan or laborer."

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that would cover it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I offered that amendment some time ago.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming stated, so that I may apply it directly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, on page 2, line 20, after the word "that," strike out the words "the husband, or father, or son" and insert the words "said artisan or laborer."

Mr. HEYBURN. That covers it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would suggest that in line 21, after the word "he," there should be inserted the words "or she," so as to read:

Entitled to receive as pay if he or she were alive and continued to be employed.

Mr. DEPEW. All right.

Mr. HEYBURN. Or else adopt the language suggested by the Senator, and say, "if such employee were alive and continued to be employed."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have no objection, but my own belief is that the word as used is sufficient all through the bill. Of course if the Senator wants it to be made more explicit, it can be done.

Mr. HEYBURN. The word used is "he." It might be construed that the words used in section 1 were sufficiently comprehensive to include both sexes, yet I see no reason why the words "or she" should not be inserted in this section.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the words in section 1 are comprehensive enough.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had given consideration to the language of the first section, but it seems to me in drawing the bill the personal pronoun should have been made consistent with that language without resorting to construction at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the amendment which was suggested by the Senator from Wyoming been agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I will withdraw the amendment in line 20 and ask that the amendment be made in line 21, by inserting the words "or she" after the word "he."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That would necessitate similar changes in half a dozen parts of the bill, as I understand it. I think it is a rule of universal application that the personal pronoun "he" is construed to include the feminine.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had doubts as to whether this class of legislation would come under that rule, which is said to be universal. I think better than the amendment I have suggested would be to insert the words "such employee." I will change the amendment in this section and suggest that it be made general, and that instead of the personal pronoun "he" where it appears there be substituted the words "such employee."

Mr. CARTER. "Such person."

Mr. HEYBURN. "Such person" would do, but "such employee" is quite applicable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho proposes an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 21, strike out the word "he" where it occurs and insert in lieu the words "such employee."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, if it can be done by a general amendment, I would suggest that that change be made in a number of instances. For instance, on page 4 it occurs on line 10, line 16, and line 21. On page 5 it occurs in line 6, line 7, and in some other places. I would suggest that the bill be amended in each instance where the personal pronoun is used by substituting the words "such employee."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will simply make the suggestion to the Senator that I think all that can be arranged in conference. The bill will no doubt have to go to conference.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I hope that the bill will not go to conference.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is it the idea that the House will agree to the Senate amendments?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is the hope the committee have, and therefore I dislike to agree to amendments unless they are material. Is this amendment considered material by the Senator from Idaho? I, myself, have no question whatever as to the construction to be given to the word "he."

Mr. HEYBURN. I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the fact that on lines 9 and 10, page 3, in the bill as it came from the House the language "such employee" is used, and it is certainly a correct expression of the intention.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say, if the Senator from Wyoming will give me a moment, in line 4, on page 1, the language is used, "an artisan or laborer." Now, any one in that class being an artisan or laborer, whether a male or a female, would necessarily come under this law. The word "he," as it follows in the act, would be interpreted in the light of that provision and would include women as well as men, if such employee was an artisan or a laborer under this statute.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was in view of that language that I suggested, in the interest of uniformity and proper construction, the amendments that I have already proposed. There should be a uniform expression representing the same thing all through a bill. It is not correct and careful legislation to express the intention of the legislature at one time in one set of terms and at another time in an entirely different way.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I would suggest to the Senator that it is not usual either in laws or in anything else always to use a noun. Sometimes a pronoun is used in place of a noun. The pronoun "he" is used universally through the bill standing for the words "artisan or laborer." I do not care to object to the amendment if the Senator thinks it is essential to the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have just called attention to the fact that it was not universally used. That is the basis of the objection. My first amendment is to strike out "his" in line 10 and insert "the."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 10, before the words "legal representatives," strike out "his" and insert "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. After the word "representatives," in line 10, I move to insert "of such employee."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. On line 16, page 4, I move to strike out "his" and insert "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law.

Mr. DEFEW. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. Mr. HEYBURN. In line 21, on page 4, after the word "his," I move to insert the words "or her," so as to read "his or her legal representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. In line 6, page 5, after the word "if," I move to strike out "he" and to insert "such employee," so as to read, "and if such employee refuses."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. In line 7, page 5, I move to insert after the word "his" the words "or her."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Before we leave that clause, on page 5, line 5, the word "himself" should be stricken out.

Mr. HEYBURN. In line 5, on page 5, I move to strike out the word "himself."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. In section 2, page 2, line 13, the expression "said year" is used, which relates back to the designation of time in line 2, at the top of page 2.

Section 2 reads:

That if any artisan or laborer so employed shall die during the said year.

As that is stated it would not be during all the period of one year; it would be during the year above specified, and that year might have nearly transpired.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; not at all. If the Senator will go a little further back in the section in his grammatical construction, further back in the section, he will see—

Mr. HEYBURN. "Remainder of the said year." That, in line 20, is repeated.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That when he "is injured in the course of such employment, he shall be entitled to receive payment for one year thereafter." That is the year referred to in section 2. It is perfectly plain to my mind.

Mr. HEYBURN. But section 2 says at the beginning:

That if any artisan or laborer so employed shall die during the said year.

Now, that is an entirely new and distinct subject for compensation. That is for death. The first is for injuries.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; it is not.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; the first section says if he "is injured in the course of such employment." That relates to the conditions based upon injury. Then section 2 relates to conditions of death.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Resulting from the injuries.

Mr. HEYBURN. Resulting from the injuries, and necessarily presupposing that the death did not immediately follow the injury. It may have followed it ten months afterwards.

If the Senator will give a little careful attention to that he will see that, it being an entirely new subject of legislation and if it refers back to a limited period which has partly transpired, it would probably cause some confusion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not suppose the Senator and myself will get together on the grammatical construction.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not grammatical; it is the legal effect of the language.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is endeavored by the bill to give one year's compensation if the injury shall last for one year, and to give one year's compensation if the injury shall last for three months and then death ensues. It is all in reference to the same year, to wit, one year from the time of the occurrence of the accident. The same rate of compensation prevails, only in one case the man himself receives it and in the other case his heirs or personal representatives. So it is plain to me; but it seems we do not look at it in the same way.

Mr. HEYBURN. I shall content myself with calling attention to the fact. I did not propose to offer an amendment, but the language is ambiguous in that the two sections do not deal entirely with the same subject. It is a question of grammatical construction, but it is also one of the legal construction of the language of section 1. Under that section the amount paid goes to the party injured, and it goes to him for a period of one year. Under section 2 it does not go to the party injured, it goes to certain designated beneficiaries, and it goes to them according to this language for the remaining period and according to the intent of it for the whole period. If the employee died in eleven months, he would get one month's pay.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is exactly what he would get, he having received eleven months' pay prior to death.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Suppose he is instantly killed?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then he gets twelve months' pay.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Where in the bill is that stated?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. All through it.

Mr. HEYBURN. If language were inserted in line 13, on page 2, so as to read, "shall die during the said period of one year," it would remove all ambiguity.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The association of the Government with him by reason of the injury absolutely ceases at the end of a year.

Mr. HEYBURN. If he dies, it necessarily ceases with him before the end of the year.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But not with the subject-matter. However, if the Senator wants to offer the amendment he can do so.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I think the discussion as it will appear in the Record will sufficiently illuminate the point.

Mr. BRANDEGEE and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not know whether I am speaking in the time of some other Senator or not; but if I have the floor, there are a few suggestions that I desire to make, and they are not extensive.

I want to call attention to the penal clause contained in section 6 of the bill. I think it should go out. We have a general section in the laws of the United States covering that class of offense, and if we are to repeat it in every separate bill that we pass we might as well do away with the penal statutes. The commission of the offense as attempted to be defined there is completely covered now. It says "That to seek to obtain by fraudulent means." It should read "to seek by fraudulent means to obtain," because it is the adoption of fraudulent means that constitutes the offense, and not the seeking to obtain. But the whole section should go out, as I said, because there is already a law covering the subject, providing for the punishment of that offense.

Mr. GALLINGER. It would not do any harm to leave it in.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is suggested to me sotto voce that it would do no harm to leave it in. We met that condition of affairs in codifying the criminal law. There is a penal clause in a great many bills, and the question was, Shall we carry the provision into the criminal code or not? To have carried it into the criminal code would have necessitated the carrying in of legislative provisions to make it applicable or intelligible. For instance, the penal clauses in the meat act and the pure-food law are not carried into the criminal code because they would carry too much administrative law with them. It is not worth while every time we enact a law of this kind, especially where there is already a sufficient provision for the punishment of a violation of it or any wrongful application of it, that we should reenact the criminal statute where we already have one.

I only make this suggestion in the interest of avoiding confusion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. For information I ask the Senator what general law we have that would fit accurately the provisions of this bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. We have a general provision in the criminal statutes against any fraudulent pretense in support of a claim against the Government of the United States. I have not the law at my desk or I would refer the Senator from Wyoming directly to the provision, but it is explicit, and it covers not only this case, but it covers the whole class of cases to which this belongs.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Has not the Senator a lingering doubt in his mind that perhaps this might not be so construed as to bring it under that law?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I have no doubt at all.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In other words, is this such a claim as that there might not be some question about it? In any event, suppose we do make a special penalty for this act of fraud, is there any particular objection to it?

I will say to the Senator that I am honestly asking for information, and that the question grows also out of my desire to see the bill amended as little as possible in order that it may become a law at the present session of Congress without going into conference.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am as sincerely in sympathy with the enactment of a law upon the subject covered by this proposed legislation as any Senator can be. In the performance of the simplest duty here we must make suggestions where they appear pertinent or necessary to the perfection of the legislation proposed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understood that of course. Then I will ask the Senator this question: Does he consider that the striking out of section 6 is necessary to the enactment of the law properly?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not consider it necessary, but I consider it to this end. We should enact just as few distinct paragraphs of this kind as possible, because they all multiply the machinery for the enforcement of the law. Section 6 provides—

That to seek to obtain by fraudulent means or to accept benefits under this act to which the person is not entitled shall be deemed a misdemeanor.

And so forth.

It makes the seeking to obtain by fraudulent means a misdemeanor. That is already a misdemeanor under existing law. The seeking to obtain any money from the Government by fraudulent means or to accept benefits under it is already an offense under the law.

The phrase "to accept benefits" ought not to be in the section, because if a party is injured and consults with his attorney as to whether he is entitled to share in this beneficent provision of the Government and the attorney says, "Certainly you are; you were injured in the course of your employment," and he submits a claim and the Department acting as it does through its clerks says, "Why, certainly he is entitled to his pay for one year," and at the end of six years some one, who probably has some personal motive for doing so, says, "This man should not be drawing this money and he never should have been allowed to draw it; he is accepting the benefits of the act in violation of section 6," there is a storm as soon as that charge is made. What good purpose is to be served by it? He has been accepting something that has been adjudged his due by those designated by the law to pass upon that question. Now, why should the accepting of that be an offense under the law?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It would not be under the condition the Senator has mentioned, nor does the section so contemplate or state.

Mr. FILES. It means fraudulently.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know it was intended to say "if he fraudulently accepted it," but it does not say so. That is what I am calling attention to. The section does not provide against fraudulently accepting the benefits of the act, because the word fraudulently is not applied to that provision in line 11. I merely wish to call attention to these things, and I shall leave it to the committee having charge of the bill to deal with these suggestions.

Mr. President, in section 1 of this bill, on page 1, included in those who may receive the benefits of this bill should it become a law are all persons engaged in "construction work in the reclamation of arid lands or the management and control of the same." That is a pretty big subject, and it is a pretty fine question in my mind—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that that is an amendment put on in the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know; but I am addressing my remarks to the question of the wisdom of its being retained.

I think I might safely say that a very large proportion of the Senate does not know the facts in regard to the methods of the reclamation of arid lands. This provision will include the men who are working behind plows, the men who are digging ditches, the men who are digging canals, and probably all that class of employees who are scattered over a very large territory. There are probably engaged in the service of the United States persons who come under that provision of the bill to the extent of 12,000. I would say that would be a fair estimate. On the Minedoka project and on the Boise Payette project in our State vast numbers of men are working.

I speak of our own State because I am acquainted with it, but I have no doubt at all that there are several other Senators here who could add vastly to those figures. To make the bill apply to that class of persons strikes me as a pretty radical measure. It was an amendment suggested in the Senate, but it covers a class of persons engaged in what would ordinarily be farm work or the work of ditching. A man's foot may slip off of a shovel, or a plow may hit a rock and he may be knocked breathless, or his team of horses may get tangled up and he may have an arm broken, or he may be otherwise injured severely; but is that the class of work for which the Government should extend this kind of assistance? I do not believe that it was within the scope of those who originally started to secure the enactment of this kind of legislation. I think it enlarges it immensely to extend it to a class of work that the original framers of this legislation did not have in view at all. It might just as well be extended indefinitely to all classes of out-of-door labor by men who are paid by the United States, numbering a great many thousands. I think that provision should not have been inserted in the bill.

I think it is perfectly right for the Government to place upon the pension roll—and that is all that this bill proposes to do—those who are injured in the machine shops and in connection with the class of work which the original framers of this bill had in mind. That is perfectly proper, and I am in entire sympathy with it. I regard it simply as a pension roll. There is no constitutional question in it. If these people possessed, in the first instance, the right of action against the Government, then it would involve a constitutional question; but inasmuch as they do not possess that right, that is the line of distinction. Have they a right of action under any law against the Government? No. Then we may extend them such relief in the nature of a pension as we may see fit, and there is no constitutional question in it. It is perfectly right and proper, in my judgment, that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, or some one connected with his Department, may pass upon this question. It would be perfectly competent for Congress to say that the chief of police should pass upon it. There is no constitutional prohibition against Congress designating the person who shall say whether this man was hurt at a certain time in a certain manner while in the performance of his duties for the Government. That is a question of fact. It involves no intricate question of law at all. I shall vote on this bill as I would vote on a pension measure. It is merely a new kind of pension bill. With these suggestions, I am content to leave the matter to the wisdom of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rose to ask a question concerning the amendment which went in on page 1, in reference to the reclamation of arid lands. I have forgotten what Senator suggested that amendment.

Mr. DEPEW. It was the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It was the Senator from Oregon. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to say, as the bill as it came from the House limits the work on the Isthmian Canal to hazardous employment, that if, in place of "construction" it should read "or any hazardous work in the Reclamation Service"—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] suggests "or any hazardous employment on construction work."

Mr. GALLINGER. That is better, I think. I think the language as it stands ought to be changed.

Mr. DEPEW. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move to amend the amendment on page 1, line 7, by inserting, after the last word "or," the words "in hazardous employment on," so that it will read:

Or in hazardous employment on construction work in the reclamation of arid lands.

Mr. President, I will call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will first state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. The committee amendment will be regarded as still open to amendment, in the absence of objection.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, in the committee amendment, after the word "or" and before the word "construction," it is proposed to insert the words "in hazardous employment on," so that, if amended, the amendment will read:

Or in hazardous employment on construction work in the reclamation of arid lands.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut rise to this amendment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I rise to this amendment, Mr. President.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator in charge of the bill to the first section. As the first section originally stood, before it was amended at all, it provided for compensation to all employees in—manufacturing establishments, arsenals, or navy-yards, or in the construction of river and harbor work or the management and control of the same—

It seems to me that by the italics which represent the Senate amendments, to wit "or fortification" and also the words "or construction work in the reclamation of arid lands," the meaning may not be clear. The bill will be printed in the statute book with no italics and the words "or the management and control of the same" would be construed to limit simply the arid lands proposition, and would not refer back to the management and control of the work on rivers and harbors, arsenals, navy-yards, and so forth. What the intention of the Senate is I do not know, but I simply make the suggestion to draw attention to the matter so that there may be no doubt about it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] is quite right. This is not intended to be limited to construction work in the reclamation of arid lands.

Mr. GALLINGER. How would it do to say "and management and control of said work?"

Mr. BRANDEGEE. "Of all of said work?"

Mr. GALLINGER. "Of all of said work."

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the Senator to transpose the amendment and insert after the word "employed," in line 4, page 1, the words "in hazardous employment;" thus making it apply to all.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, that matter was thoroughly gone over once before. The Senator can propose the amendment; but I do not care to do so.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I do not offer the amendment nor will I offer any amendment to the bill. I realize, as I think does every member of the Judiciary Committee, of which I am not a member, and every Senator who desires the passage of the bill to-day, that the bill is not skillfully drafted, that it does not respond to the just demands of Senators or those who will be the beneficiaries of the bill. There should be some radical amendments to this measure. I think, for instance, an amendment should be added which would give to the individual's family, when death occurs as the result of an accident, one year's pay following that event, whereas now the remnant of the year's pay is to be available for the use of the family in case of dire distress.

But, Mr. President, I have refrained from offering an amendment in that behalf, much as I think it is needed to perfect the bill and to make it what it should be, because of the understanding which, I think, extends throughout the Chamber, that any radical amendment placed on this bill will result in its defeat at this session of Congress, and that we should put the bill on the statute books as nearly as it came to this body as we can, and perfect it later by extending its provisions. I think many of these amendments might as well have been disagreed to, because all Senators will agree that, notwithstanding amendments made or to be made, the bill will pass from our hands far from what it should be—a vastly imperfect piece of legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. You have improved it a good deal.

Mr. CARTER. I think it has been improved some, but I think an attempt to improve it much more would imperil its passage. I think the better plan probably is to let the Committee on the Judiciary propose such amendments as they deem necessary to make the bill workable, as they are doing by offering amendments on the floor, and pass to a vote upon the bill at the earliest moment possible.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that an amendment was made a day or two ago, I think, at the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, on page 4, line 19.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was transposed to page 5, line 4, after the word "labor," where it properly belongs.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It has already been transposed?

Mr. GALLINGER. It has already been transposed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I will call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment on line 6, page 1. I think it was put in at his suggestion. It relates to postal clerks on railway trains.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was printed erroneously. I withdrew the amendment before the bill was ordered printed. It is not now in the bill, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I desire to offer another amendment and to address some remarks to the Senate on the amendment after it shall have been read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the words "Secretary of Commerce and Labor" and insert:

Judge of the circuit court of the United States for the district in which the injury shall have been inflicted, from whose decision an appeal may be taken by the injured person to the circuit court of appeals, to which appeals may be taken in said district.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, is not that practically the amendment that was laid upon the table by the Senate?

Mr. McLAURIN. No, sir; it is very different.

Mr. HOPKINS. The basis of it is the same. Some words may have been added, but I think it is substantially the same amendment.

Mr. McLAURIN. It is a very different amendment.

Mr. President, to-day is the first time I have seen a Senator shut off, by a motion to lay on the table, from discussing an amendment which he himself offered and which he had not previously had an opportunity to discuss. The amendment I offered would not perfect the bill, in my judgment, but it would go far toward improving it, and would improve it very much. If anything is to be done for the employees of the Government—I mean the laborers and the artisans, those who are mentioned in the bill—it ought not to be encumbered with so many difficulties that the man who is injured, or his family, will be deterred from any effort to secure the benefits of the act after it shall have been put upon the statute books.

I take no part in the discussion of the constitutional phase of the bill as it was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. I have my opinion about whether it is constitutional or not; but the views I take of this measure are not concerned with the question of its constitutionality or its unconstitutionality. If it is unconstitutional in the form in which it came from the Judiciary Committee, my amendment will remove all such questions from consideration. If it is constitutional to permit such questions as are left to him to be decided by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor—and I may say in passing that my opinion is that it is constitutional—the amendment will, in my opinion, improve the bill, so far as the laborers and artisans who are to be benefited by it are concerned. The bill ought not to be set about with pitfalls which will make it difficult and dangerous for the recipient of the bounty or generosity of the Government to take it when the Government hands it out. That, however, I will discuss later, when I come to discuss the sixth section of the bill.

As I read the bill—and it has been amended so much that it is difficult without a reprint of the bill to say what its provisions at this time are—but as I understand it now, it provides, to illustrate, that if a man in the capital of Mississippi, more than a thousand miles from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall, without any negligence or misconduct on his part, be injured while he is in the employ of the Government, there must be a report made to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. The report is made first by the injured workman's immediate superior. It is then referred to the officer above the first superior officer, and thus it goes on through the channels—"official channels" is the language, I believe, that is used in the bill—until it shall have reached the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

If you will consider that a moment, every Senator must come to the conclusion, knowing the workings of the Departments, that whatever that report by the superior of the injured laborer or artisan contains—it does not make any difference what it is—when the Secretary of Commerce and Labor comes to consider the man's case the statements in the report will be taken as facts. The injured party, or the representatives of the injured party, may make affidavit, and that may accompany the report or it may not. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is required to take the report, the affidavit, and such other evidence as may be submitted to him by the injured employee, and upon that make up his judgment; but whenever he comes to make up his judgment he is going to say: "Here is the official action; here is the official report; here is the official evidence upon which I can act." The affidavit of the injured party, being an ex parte affidavit, and such other evidence as he may be able to get, is to be disregarded; it is to be ignored as being interested ex parte testimony, and the man can not go before the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and present his case. He may be a man receiving as a laborer a dollar a day. The wages to which he would be entitled for a year would be $300. He must not only live out of that for a long time, until he can get an adjudication of his case by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, but he must expend probably a half or two-thirds of his salary in getting this decision from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Why take him a thousand miles to an officer whom he does not know, who does not know him, and who can not understand anything about the work that this laborer is performing? Why require him to go before that officer to try his case, when he may be practically shut out by the official report of his superior, instead of giving him an opportunity to be heard in the neighborhood in which he lives and by a judge who probably knows him and his surroundings and the work in which he has been engaged? Take the case not only of a man in Mississippi, but go over farther on the Western slope; go into the State of Washington, or Oregon, or Kansas, or Montana, or Idaho, or any of those States—

Mr. GALLINGER. Or Panama.

Mr. McLAURIN. Or Panama, as is suggested by my genial friend, the Senator from New Hampshire, and the result is still more disastrous to the injured employee.

This bill does another thing. It puts the laborer largely at the mercy of his superior. Human nature is human nature the world over. The man who has charge of men who are under him working and the man who works for him know that if an injury occurred, the superior, who is frequently denominated the "boss," will have the making up of the report, and if the employee has ingratiated himself into the favor of the boss, his superior officer—probably many times by truckling—he will get a favorable report; but if he has been a manly man and stood up for his rights, willing to work when he is called upon by his duty and by his employment to work, willing to perform all the labor for which he has contracted with the Government, but who demands of his superior officer that he be treated as a man and not as a menial or a slave, he will probably have incurred the enmity of his superior officer; and that superior will make a report that will cut him out of his pay. The superior will report that the man has been negligent or been guilty of misconduct.

I say that this ought not to be. If you will give the employee an opportunity right there at his home where the work is done, right there where the witnesses all know about him, to let him go before some officer—I am not a stickler for the judge of the circuit court; the amendment that I formerly wrote and presented to the Senate was an amendment that was hurriedly presented, and this amendment is hurriedly presented, written at my desk here—but I want the employee to have an opportunity to be heard before somebody, at a place where he can get his witnesses before whoever is to be the judge, where he can be heard orally if he desires to be heard orally, and where he will not be put to the expense and trouble and annoyance of sending his case 1,000 or 2,000 or 3,000 miles to an officer who is to hear the case.

Again, on the hearing of the case, when it is taken up on what we will call an official report, that report will dominate any affidavit or any evidence that is presented by the injured employee, and when the officer shall have rendered a decision, it is absolute; it is final; there is no appeal given to the laborer; no opportunity to go to any higher authority for the purpose of determining his case. I do not believe that the Senate, upon deliberation, will put such a measure as that upon the statute books of the United States Government.

But it is said this bill is imperfect now, but let us get some kind of a patchwork, that is hardly worth the paper upon which it is written, for the benefit of the employees of the Government, and after a while it will be perfected. Mr. President, there is no great hurry for this legislation. We have had the whole session of Congress for the perfection and consideration of this legislation. Why has it not been considered and perfected? It were better a thousand times to have this bill re-committed to the Judiciary Committee or to some other committee of this body and have it put in shape so that it will do justice to the laborers and artisans who are to be its beneficiaries.

Now, let us run over this, because we have been rushed into this matter with very little opportunity for the consideration of it, and, as I have said, there has been no reprint of the bill since the 21st of May. The copy of the bill which I have does not show the day upon which it was reprinted, but I believe there has been no reprint of the bill since a number of amendments have been submitted to the Senate and put upon the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was reprinted on the 21st of the month, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. McLAURIN. That is the day it was reprinted. The bill came to the Senate, it seems, on the 18th of May, when it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and on the 21st of May it was reported to the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It was reported to the Senate on the same day on which it was referred to the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. And reprinted on the 21st.

Mr. McLAURIN. It was reported on the same day it was referred. So much the worse for the bill and for opportunity for its consideration.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I was not in the Chamber at the beginning of the statement as to the length of time the Judiciary Committee had had this bill under consideration. I will say that the committee has had similar bills, dealing with the same subject-matter, under consideration nearly all the winter, and has been having hearings on those bills. While it is true that, as to this particular bill, the copy as passed by the House probably came to the committee on the same morning on which it was reported, yet a typewritten copy, preceding the official copy, was in the hands of the committee prior to that time. I will say to the Senator in all candor that this particular bill only came to the committee a short time before it was reported; but the date upon the bill as reported does not indicate the time that this particular measure was before the committee.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, probably my criticism, then, was not well founded, if the Committee on the Judiciary has had this under consideration all winter, but this is the best argument that can be furnished—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, that is very pleasant to read in the RECORD, but I do not want the Senator to put those words in my mouth. I said that this particular bill had not been considered, but that the subject-matter in other bills had been considered during a large part of the winter.

Mr. McLAURIN. I suppose the object of the Senator in calling my attention to the fact that other bills had been considered and that this question had been considered was that they had evolved some kind of plan by which they could do justice to these employees, and that this is the plan.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator usually arrives at a conclusion by such clear reasoning that I am surprised to hear him at this moment.

Mr. McLAURIN. To proceed with the analysis of this bill, it provides:

An artisan or laborer in any of its manufacturing establishments, arsenals, or navy-yards, or as postal clerks on railway trains—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McLAURIN. With pleasure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am called out of the Chamber, and I desire to submit an amendment before leaving. I move, on page 2, line 8, to change the first word in the line from "or" to "nor," and in the same line to strike out the word "it" and substitute the words "the said injury," so that it will read:

Nor unless the said injury shall continue for more than fifteen days.

I do not ask a vote on the amendment now.

Mr. McLAURIN. That is the amendment the Senator will offer after the one I have offered shall have been disposed of.

Now let us see if I have it right as to the ones who are entitled to the benefits of this act:

An artisan or laborer in any of its manufacturing establishments, arsenals, or navy-yards, or as postal clerks on railway trains, or in the construction of river and harbor or fortification work, or construction work in the reclamation of arid lands or the management and control of the same, or in hazardous employment under the Isthmian Canal Commission—

In whatever work they are engaged they must be artisans or laborers employed by the United States—shall be entitled to receive for one year thereafter, unless sooner able to resume work, the same pay as if he continued to be employed, such payment to be made under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe: Provided, That no compensation shall be paid under this act where the injury is due to the negligence or misconduct of the employee injured, or unless it shall continue for more than fifteen days.

If he is guilty of negligence or misconduct and that negligence or misconduct produces the injury, then he is not entitled to any compensation.

Or unless it shall continue for more than fifteen days.

If the injury, however produced, continues for less than fifteen days, or not a greater time than fifteen days, he is shut out.

All questions of negligence or misconduct shall be determined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor—

As this bill is. Now how?

SEC. 3. That whenever an accident occurs to any employee embraced within the terms of the first section of this act, and which results in death or a probable incapacity for work, it shall be the duty of the official superior of such employee to at once report such accident to the head of his Bureau or independent office.

Whatever the Bureau or independent office may be. He may be a man who is supervising a lot of laborers who are engaged in the construction of a Government building, a court-house or post-office or any other public structure. If, in carrying a girder, or, if he is a hod carrier, in carrying the material he is required by his work to carry, he falls or is hurt or in any way is injured while in that employment, then the man who is supervising his work, the man who controls him, the man who is overseeing those engaged in the same kind of work, reports to the head of his Bureau or independent office. Then the head of that Bureau reports to somebody above him, and that somebody above him reports to somebody above him, and so on until it gets to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. When I say "reports to him" I mean transmits this report through this official channel up to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

And his report shall be immediately communicated through regular official channels to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

That kind of red tape must be followed until it gets to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. And then what?

Such report shall state, first, the origin and nature of the accident and the probable duration of the injury resulting therefrom.

That is a mere guess as to the time when the results of the injury will cease. As was suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the man not being a doctor will probably not be able to give anything like an accurate guess. He will not be able to give a guess within miles of the fact, not because of his indisposition to do so, but because of his inability to understand the case. Then what?

Second, whether the accident arose out of or in the course of the injured person's employment; third, whether the accident was due to negligence or misconduct on the part of the employee injured.

These facts are reported to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. They go up in the regular official channel by red tape until they get to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Fourth, any other matters required by such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe.

That is, the report must contain such other matters—that is what the language means; that is what a lawyer would say it means—as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor by his regulations shall require.

The head of each Department or independent office shall have power, however, to charge a special official with the duty of making such reports.

That is to say, the head of the Department of State or the head of the Treasury Department or of the Interior Department may detail special agents for the purpose of making these official reports, and in order to do so promptly they ought to be on the ground, and there ought to be one of these agents for every Department on the ground in every place where there is any work being done by the Government—in the postal service, in the construction of buildings for which we provided by bill the other day many millions of dollars. There ought to be one of these special agents on the ground, and there may be under this proposed act at every place where public work is being done.

This is a bunglesome job, it seems to me. It occurs to me it is the least considered, and I would not be very far from the merits of the case if I should say worst considered, case I have seen presented by any report to this body. No wonder the Senator from New York wanted to make a motion to lay on the table any amendment to it that called attention to its defects.

SEC. 4. That in the case of any accident which shall result in death, the persons entitled to compensation under this act or their legal representatives shall, within ninety days after such death, file with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor an affidavit setting forth their relationship to the deceased and the ground of their claim for compensation under the provisions of this act.

That is to say, this official report that has gone up through regular official channels until it has reached the Secretary of Commerce and Labor must be followed within ninety days by the affidavit of the injured party or his legal representatives. Now what?

This shall be accompanied by the certificate of the attending physician setting forth the fact and cause of death, or the nonproduction of the certificate satisfactorily accounted for.

There was some objection made, I believe, that they ought to require in all instances that the certificate of the physician should be presented with the affidavit.

In the case of incapacity for work lasting more than fifteen days, the injured party or his legal representatives desiring to take the benefit of this act shall, within a reasonable period after the expiration of such time, file with his official superior, to be forwarded through regular official channels to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, an affidavit setting forth the grounds of his claim for compensation, to be accompanied by a certificate of his attending physician as to the cause and nature of the injury and probable duration of the incapacity, or the nonproduction of the certificate satisfactorily accounted for.

If he is incapacitated for work, the incapacity lasting more than fifteen days, the injured party or his legal representatives desiring to take the benefit of this act—what business has the legal representative with the matter unless the party has been killed? Now, it gets up through official channels and is filed with his superior and reaches the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish the Senator would read that language again.

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

In the case of incapacity for work lasting more than fifteen days, the injured party or his legal representatives desiring to take the benefit of this act shall—

And so forth.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know, but I suppose that that is probably unnoticed surplusage. Perhaps the committee did not notice the words "or his legal representatives."

Mr. McLAURIN. Probably not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill about it. I had not myself noticed the words "or his legal representatives," where a man has not been killed.

Mr. McLAURIN. The Senator from New York has no explanation to make, I suppose, of putting in "or his legal representatives," in response to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the point of that?

Mr. McLAURIN. While the Senator from New York is examining that I will proceed.

Mr. DEPEW. May I ask at what point that language is found?

Mr. McLAURIN. With pleasure. I am reading, beginning in line 8, on page 4.

Mr. DEPEW. While I am on my feet I want to disclaim having intended any discourtesy to the Senator from Mississippi. The amendment which he proposed has been up on several occasions, and no motion having been made with respect to it I supposed that the Senator was going to allow it to go upon its merits. If I had supposed that he was going to make a speech, I am always so glad to listen to him that I certainly should have been the last person to have interposed any objection whatever.

Mr. McLAURIN. I am sure the Senator from New York did not intend any discourtesy to me. It was the exigencies of the bill that called for the motion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What about the words "or his legal representatives?" That is a curiously awkward phrase. It will not take any time to strike it out. I do not understand it myself—legal representatives when a man is not dead—

Mr. DEPEW. Where is that?

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 10, on page 4.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Or is not non compos mentis. I am anxious to have the bill passed—extremely so.

Mr. DEPEW. I think those words ought to come out—"or his legal representatives."

Mr. McLAURIN. I do not hear the Senator.

Mr. DEPEW. I think those words ought to be stricken out.

Mr. McLAURIN. "Or his legal representatives?"

Mr. DEPEW. Yes.

Mr. McLAURIN. I will suspend long enough for the Senate to agree to strike out those words, if it is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, page 4, as previously amended, it is proposed to strike out the words "or the legal representatives of such employee."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAURIN. I have accomplished some good by calling attention to this bill. I am glad of that. I will proceed:

If the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, at least once in six months, shall find from the report and affidavit or other evidence produced by the claimant or his legal representatives, or from such additional investigation as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may direct, that a claim for compensation is established under this act.

The point to which I wish to direct the attention of the Senate is this, that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor will be supposed under this bill to be sitting once in six months.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That has gone out. It was a misprint.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was a misprint. The words should appear after "Labor" in line 4, on page 5. That has been transposed by the clerks.

Mr. McLAURIN. It is to be hoped that a good deal of it is a misprint.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was corrected yesterday.

Mr. McLAURIN. As I stated a while ago, it is difficult to tell what has been stricken out and what has not, and what has been inserted and what has not been inserted, because there has been no reprint of the bill since so many amendments have been made.

SEC. 5. That the employee shall, whenever and as often as required by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, submit himself to medical examination.

I do not think there can be any objection to section 5, but section 6 provides:

SEC. 6. That to seek to obtain by fraudulent means or to accept benefits under this act to which the person is not entitled shall be deemed a misdemeanor on his part and punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

After this shall have been disposed of, I propose to move to strike out section 6. I do not think there ought to be set around the man who is to get the benefit of this proposed act any pitfall, so that if hereafter somebody shall say that he fraudulently received this money, that he did not do exactly as he ought to have done in framing his claim for the money, he shall be liable to a fine of $1,000 and two years' imprisonment.

I think that is a very bad provision. Surely there ought to be provision made somewhere for an authority to decide these questions, and when he shall have reached a correct conclusion, and there is no reasonable ground to believe that fraud has been practiced upon the Government, there should be no aftermath about it. No man who has received the benefit of the act should be in danger of prosecution thereafter when the witnesses may have died and he is no longer able to establish the sincerity and integrity of his claim. There ought to be no danger to him of that kind. When he presents his claim it ought to be like any other claim presented to any official or any judicial officer. It ought to be so that when it shall be passed upon that will be the end of it, so far as concerns any danger that he may incur thereafter. I do not think the Senate, upon mature consideration, will be willing to leave a section of that kind in the bill. I shall move to strike it out when the pending amendment shall have been disposed of.

The seventh section, I think, is a good one. I believe I have said all I intend to say on this measure, and we will have plenty of time to pass this bill to-day. I do not think there is any danger of defeating the bill by delay. I do not remember just now anything else with which I charged my memory that I desire to say in reference to the amendment that I have offered. I made no notes in writing of the line of argument I should pursue.

But I do desire to call attention to a matter that was here yesterday. I saw the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] in the Chamber not long ago, and I desired that he should be present when I presented the authorities to which I shall refer.

You will remember, Mr. President, that yesterday when a matter that had no reference to the omnibus bill was presented, the Senator from Illinois took occasion to arraign that bill because he said there were a good many claims in it which were stale, that had been in existence ever since the war, and that the bill, therefore, was not one that ought to receive the favorable consideration of this body. That was the substance of his argument. And in that discussion he expressed surprise when I stated a proposition of law, and the Senator from Illinois stated a proposition of law which I denied.

But before I proceed to that I want to say that the omnibus claims bill is not devoted exclusively to what are denominated Southern war claims. About one-half of the claims grow out of the appropriation of property of loyal citizens to the use of the Army during the war. There is nothing in the bill that proposes to pay anybody who is not shown to have been loyal to the United States Government during the war. About half of the bill, as I have stated, is devoted to a proposition to repay the parties who owned this property. In many instances the property was worth a great deal more than it is valued at by the Committee on Claims. About half of that property is composed of church edifices and probably other institutions, some of them eleemosynary institutions that were destroyed or used by the Federal armies for the purposes of war. So only about one-fourth of the amount carried in the bill is for the payment of claims of loyal citizens of the United States for property that has been shown to have been used by the armies of the United States during the war. A great deal of this, something like half or very nearly half of it, goes above the Mason and Dixon line. I call attention to this because the Senator seemed to proceed upon the assumption that all the money carried by this omnibus bill would go for the payment of Southern war claims.

The Senator a few days ago, in speaking of these claims, said there were a great many claims for churches, and that there must have been a great many churches in West Virginia. I have heard the Southern section of the country arraigned upon many charges, but I have never heard that one of the charges was that we had too many churches in the South until it came from the Senator from Illinois.

When I was making the statement yesterday that the cotton that was taken under the captured and abandoned property act and that had been sold and converted into money and the money placed in the Treasury was just as much the property of the citizens from whom it was taken as the horse of the Senator from Illinois is his property, and that it was the property of the Government of the United States just as much as the Senator's horse was the property of the Government of the United States, the Senator said:

I am surprised that a man of the legal learning that I know the Senator from Mississippi possesses should ever make a statement of that kind.

He then went on to state that the Supreme Court of the United States had decided that this property was the property of the United States Government and that it was not the property of the individual citizen.

I have before me the case of the United States v. Klein, reported in 13 Wallace, which I believe reaffirms the case of Padelford, theretofore decided. I have also the report of the Committee on Claims presented to the Fifty-sixth Congress. It is a long report, and I will ask permission to put it in the Record without reading it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The report referred to is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 11, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 602) entitled "A bill to revise and amend an act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and acts amendatory thereof," having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report:

This identical bill was before this committee in the Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, and was then fully considered and favorably reported.

Your committee adopt the report then made and attach a copy hereto and ask that it be printed as a part of this report, and recommend that the bill as amended by your committee do pass as amended.

[Senate Report No. 1634, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5020) entitled "A bill to revise and amend an act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and acts amendatory thereof," having had the same under consideration, beg leave to submit the following report and recommend that said bill do pass:

Similar bills, some of a private and some of a general nature, have frequently been before Congress, and, as your committee believe, such bills have always been favorably reported, and those of a private nature have passed, but those general in their nature have never been put upon their passage; in fact, after being favorably reported they seem to have received no further attention.

The subject-matter covered by this bill was considered in the Fifty-first, the Fifty-second, the Fifty-third, and the Fifty-fourth Congresses, and by each favorably reported, and your committee adopt the report thereon made by the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-third Congress, and your committee also adopt the report of the House Committee on War Claims of the Fifty-fourth Congress (except that part at the end relative to amending the bill then before that committee) and ask that these reports, which are attached hereto, be printed as a part of this report.

"And your committee would submit that the facts and the law bearing upon the subject-matter of this bill are such as to make the earnest language used in these reports recommending the passage of such an act none too strong or imperative, and that in all reason and justice this bill ought to receive early attention."

[House Report No. 181, Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

The Committee on the Judiciary, having the above bill and others on the same subject under consideration, report a substitute therefor, entitled "An act to revise and amend an act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States," and acts amendatory thereof, and recommend the passage of the same and that the original bill lie on the table.

The subject-matter covered by the bills and substitute was considered in the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses, and your committee adopt the report thereon made by Mr. Culberson, of the Judiciary Committee of the last Congress, and ask that the same be printed as a part of this report.

[House Report No. 1377, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The Committee on the Judiciary have considered the bill (H. R. 455) in relation to claims arising under the captured and abandoned property act and for the extension of time in which to bring suit, and recommend its passage for the following reason:

A large amount of property in the States in rebellion or insurrection was seized during the war and immediately after the cessation of hostilities, without regard to the ownership of such property, or the political status of its owners, or the possession of the property at the time of the seizure, by the military and other Federal authorities. The seizure and sale of this property were made under the acts of March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864, known as the captured and abandoned property acts, and other measures amendatory and supplementary thereof.

The law required the property to be sold and the proceeds placed in the Treasury to the credit of the property.

The third section of the act of March 12, 1863, under which the bulk of the property was seized, provided as follows:

"Any person claiming to have been the owner of any such abandoned or captured property may, at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, prefer his claim to the proceeds thereof in the Court of Claims, and on proof to the satisfaction of said court of his ownership of said property, of his right to the proceeds thereof, and that he has never given any aid or comfort to the present rebellion, to receive the residue of such proceeds, after the deduction of any purchase money which may have been paid, together with the expense of transportation and sale of said property, and any other lawful expenses attending the disposition thereof."

Under this provision of the statute many suits were instituted in the Court of Claims by persons claiming to be the owners of property seized under the acts referred to, and when the proof required by the statute was made judgment was rendered in their favor and the money paid.

Over $30,000,000 were placed in the Treasury on account of sales of property under the act of March 12, 1863, and other kindred acts.

The amount now on hand of this fund is $10,512,007.96.

The following statement is believed to be substantially correct and will show the whole amount of money received into the Treasury on account of captured and abandoned property and the amounts paid out from time to time:

Whole amount of abandoned and captured property sales	$31,722,466.20
Cost of collecting, sale, and other expenses	$6,551,000.00
Transferred to Freedman's Bureau	243,000.00
Internal-revenue taxes and commercial-intercourse fees	1,406,000.00
Released to claimants by Secretaries Chase, Fessenden, and McCulloch	2,550,675.24
	10,750,675.24

Balance covered into Treasury under resolution of March 30, 1872	20,971,790.96
Paid on special acts of relief	$290,906.32
Paid on judgments against Treasury agents	64,557.27
Paid on judgments under act of March 12, 1863	9,833,423.16
Paid by Secretary of the Treasury under act of May 18, 1872	195,896.25
Disbursed for expenses under joint resolution of March 30, 1868	75,000.00
	10,459,783.00

Balance in Treasury----- 10,512,007.96

It is understood that the application of the ruling of the Supreme Court, in an opinion delivered since this statement was made, to this fund will materially reduce the amount of this balance, but to what extent can not, with the information at hand, be stated with certainty.

The Government has had the use of this money for more than twenty years, and if it is ever to be distributed to its owners some additional legislation is required. Congress at every session is asked to permit individual claimants to bring suit in the Court of Claims to establish their rights in this fund. This privilege has been accorded to some and denied to others.

Further legislation is necessary in order to distribute this fund, because the limitation of two years from and after the close of the war in which claimants of this property were required to prefer their claims has long since expired, and there is now no means provided by law by which the claimants of the fund can enforce their rights.

Formerly there was much contention upon the status of this fund in the Treasury, especially that portion of it derived from the sale of property belonging to those who adhered to the rebellion. It is evident from the terms of the act of 1863 that it was not the intention of Congress that the title to the property seized under it should be divested from the loyal owners. They were allowed two years from and after the close of the war in which to prefer their claims to the property, and because no provision was made by which persons who had been disloyal could prefer their claims in the property and enforce their rights it was contended that the seizure and sale of so much of this property as belonged to disloyal persons worked a divestiture of title and absolutely transferred the proceeds to the Government. On the other hand, it was contended that such seizure and sale of property of disloyal persons did not divest the title of the original owners and that the fund derived from such sales was placed in the Treasury to be kept there to await the determination of the Government whether it should be returned to the owners of the property or not.

Your committee believe that this contention has been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Klein v. The United States, reported in 13 Wallace, page 138, and the following quotations are made from the report of the case:

"1. That it was not the intention of Congress, by the enactment of that statute, that the title to property seized under it should be divested from the loyal owners.

"2. That the proceeds of the property should go into the Treasury without change of ownership.

"3. That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, though then hostile, might subsequently become loyal.

"4. That it was for the Government itself to determine whether those proceeds should be restored to the owner or not.

"5. That the President's proclamation of pardon and amnesty, with restoration of rights of property, and particularly that of July 4, 1868, was a decision on the part of the Government which decided affirmatively the right of all the owners of such property to the proceeds thereof in the Treasury; and the restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned.

"6. And that the Government constituted itself the trustee for those who by that act were declared entitled to the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, and for those whom it should thereafter recognize as entitled."

And in its opinion the court uses this language:

"That it was not the intention of Congress that the title to these proceeds should be divested absolutely out of the original owners of the property seems clear upon a comparison of different parts of the act.

"We have already seen that those articles which became by the simple fact of capture the property of the captor, as ordnance, munitions of war, and the like, or in which third parties acquired rights which might be made absolute by decree, as ships and other vessels captured as prize, were expressly excepted from the operation of the act; and it is reasonable to infer that it was the purpose of Congress that the proceeds of the property for which the special provision of the act was made should go into the Treasury without change of ownership. Certainly such was the intention in respect to the property of loyal men. That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, though then hostile, might subsequently become loyal, appears probable from the circumstances that no provision is anywhere made for confiscation of it, while there is no trace in the statute book of intention to divest ownership of private property not excepted from the effect of this act otherwise than by proceedings for confiscation.

"It is thus seen that, except as to property used in actual hostilities, as mentioned in the first section of the act of March 12, 1863, no titles were divested in the insurgent States, unless in pursuance of a judgment rendered after due legal proceedings. The Government recognized to the fullest extent the humane maxims of the modern law of nations, which exempt private property of noncombatant enemies from capture as booty of war; even the law of confiscation was sparingly applied. The cases were few, indeed, in which the property of any not engaged in actual hostilities was subjected to seizure and sale.

"We conclude, therefore, that the title to the proceeds of the property which came to the possession of the Government by capture or abandonment, with the exceptions already noticed, was in no case divested from the original owner. It was for the Government itself to determine whether these proceeds should be restored to the owner or not. The promise of the restoration of all rights of property decided that question affirmatively as to all persons who availed themselves of the proffered pardon. * * * The restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned, on application within two years from the close of the war. It was, in fact, promised an equivalent. 'Pardon and restoration of political rights' were 'in return' for the oath and its fulfillment."

And then the court adds this strong language:
"To refuse it would be a breach of faith not less cruel and astounding than to abandon the freed people whom the Executive had promised to maintain in their freedom."

It will be observed that the court decides that the title to the proceeds of the property which came to the possession of the Government by capture or abandonment, with the exception of property used in actual hostilities, was in no case divested from the original owner.

The question therefore arises whether the Government ever determined that the proceeds of the sales of property under the captured and abandoned property acts which belonged to disloyal persons should be restored to them.

Whatever of occasion for dispute there may have been upon this question at one time, there seems to be none now.

Under the act of July, 1862, known as the "confiscation act," the President was authorized at any time thereafter, by proclamation, to extend to persons who may have participated in rebellion in any State or part thereof pardon and amnesty, with such exceptions and at such time and on such conditions as he should deem expedient for the public welfare.

On the 8th day of December, 1863, the President issued his proclamation, in which he referred to the act of 1863, relating to captured and abandoned property, and offered pardon and amnesty, with restoration of all rights of property, except as to slaves and property to which third persons had acquired rights, to all persons who had participated in the rebellion who would take an oath to support the Constitution and the laws. Certain classes were excepted from the benefits of pardon and amnesty under that proclamation.

On the 20th of May, 1865, another proclamation was issued, extending pardon and amnesty, with a full restoration of all property rights, except as to slaves, etc., to all persons who had participated in the rebellion. A similar oath was required, and fourteen classes of persons were excepted from the benefits of the proclamation.

On the 7th of September, 1867, another similar proclamation of pardon and amnesty was issued, which reduced the excepted classes from fourteen to seven. Finally, on the 4th day of July, 1868, a proclamation was issued by the President extending pardon and amnesty to all, with some exceptions, who had participated in the rebellion, with restoration to all rights of property, except in slaves, and on the 25th of December, 1868, without exception, unconditionally, and without reservation. No oath was required.

The legal effect of the proclamations to which reference has been made was to wipe out all disability by reason of disloyalty and to present the offender before the law as a new man, as innocent as if he had never been charged with treason. These proclamations also serve to show that the President of the United States, authorized by the Constitution and by statute, determined to restore the proceeds of the sales of captured and abandoned property belonging to disloyal owners to them upon condition that they would comply with the requirements of the proclamations. Those who complied with the conditions of those proclamations were instantly rehabilitated as citizens, restored to equality before the law, and to all rights of property. In the language of the Supreme Court before quoted:

"The promise of the restoration of all rights of property decided that question affirmatively as to all persons who availed themselves of the proffered pardon. * * * The restoration of the proceeds of captured and abandoned property became the absolute right of the persons pardoned, on application within two years from the close of the war."

Those who had failed to avail themselves of the proffered pardon extended by the proclamations containing conditions (if there were any such) were covered and embraced by the proclamation of July 4, 1868, which extended pardon and amnesty to all, without condition, with full restoration to property rights.

Your committee submit the following, taken from the decision of the Supreme Court in Padelford's case, reported in 9 Wallace:

"In the case of Garland this court held the effect of a pardon to be such 'that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense;' and in the case of Armstrong's foundry he held that the general pardon granted to him relieved him from a penalty which he had incurred to the United States. It follows that at the time of the seizure of the petitioner's property he was purged of whatever offense against the laws of the United States he had committed by the acts mentioned in the findings and relieved from any penalty which he might have incurred. It follows, further, that if the property had been seized before the oath was taken the faith of the Government was pledged to its restoration upon the taking of the oath in good faith. We can not doubt that the petitioner's right to the property in question at the time of the seizure was perfect and that it remains perfect, notwithstanding the seizure."

"But it has been suggested that the property was captured in fact, if not lawfully, and that the proceeds having been paid into the Treasury of the United States, the petitioner is without remedy in the Court of Claims, unless proof is made that he gave no aid or comfort to the rebellion. The suggestion is ingenious, but we do not think it sound. The sufficient answer to it is that after the pardon no offense connected with the rebellion can be imputed to him. If, in other respects, the petitioner made the proof which, under the act, entitled him to a decree for the proceeds of his property, the law makes the proof of pardon a complete substitute for proof that he gave no aid or comfort to the rebellion. A different construction would, as it seems to us, defeat the manifest intent of the proclamation and of the act of Congress which authorized it. Under the proclamation and the act the Government is a trustee, holding the proceeds of the petitioner's property for his benefit, and having been fully reimbursed for all expenses incurred in that character loses nothing by the judgment, which simply awards to the petitioner what is his own."

But for the bar made by the statute of limitations of two years it seems that all persons, loyal and those who had been disloyal, might prefer their claims to this property, and upon proof of their right to the property, obtain the proceeds.

Pardon and amnesty relieved claimants of captured and abandoned property from proving their adhesion to the Government of the United States during the late war.

The following is the whole of the opinion of the court in Pargoud's case (13 Wallace):

"We have recently decided, in the case of Armstrong v. The United States, that the President's proclamation of December 25, 1868, granting pardon and amnesty unconditionally and without reservation to all who participated directly or indirectly in the late rebellion relieves claimants of captured and abandoned property from proof of adhesion to the United States during the late civil war. It was therefore unnecessary to prove such adhesion or personal pardon for taking part in the rebellion against the United States. The judgment of the Court of Claims dismissing the petition is reversed."

It follows, from what has been said, that this fund in the Treasury does not belong to the Government, but is the property of citizens of the United States, and held in trust for them by the Government. Ought the Government longer refuse to distribute this fund among the owners of it?

Your committee believe it is true, as alleged, that the bulk of this fund yet remaining in the Treasury belongs to persons who participated in the late rebellion, but in view of the fact that under the Constitution and laws of the United States, as declared by the Supreme Court, the restoration of the proceeds of this property became the absolute right of the persons pardoned, the former political status of the owner can afford no just reason for withholding the money.

No laches can be imputed to this class of claimants.

The statute authorized claims to the proceeds of sales of captured and abandoned property to be preferred in the Court of Claims at any time within two years from the suppression of the rebellion. When was the rebellion suppressed? That became a question for the courts in order to apply the statute of limitation. In December, 1869, the Supreme Court decided, in Anderson v. United States (9 Wallace, page 56), that the rebellion was suppressed on the 20th of August, 1866, the date of the President's proclamation declaring the final and complete suppression of the rebellion. The limitation of the right to commence suit, therefore, expired on the 20th day of August, 1868.

Some claimants who had participated in the rebellion filed suits in the Court of Claims before the bar of limitation was complete, but a large majority of that class of claimants did not commence suit because it was generally understood that, notwithstanding the proclamations of pardon and amnesty, the claimant would be required to prove his loyalty before he could have a standing in the court.

It was a matter of doubt among the members of the legal fraternity as to what effect would be given by the Supreme Court to the proclamations of pardon and amnesty. In 1869 the Supreme Court decided that the necessity of proving loyalty in order to recover the proceeds of captured and abandoned property had been removed by the proclamations of pardon and amnesty.

This decision came too late to benefit that class of claimants. The limitation had already expired and the bar was complete.

In view of the law and the facts as above stated, your committee deem it unwise for the Government and unjust to the claimants of this fund for Congress to decline longer to make some provision by which they may establish and enforce their rights.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 2658, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7618) entitled "A bill authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate certain claims arising under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1863, entitled 'An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property, etc.," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass, with an amendment.

Under the acts of March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864, known as the "captured and abandoned property acts," and other kindred measures, a large amount of property in the States in insurrection was seized by the military and other Federal authorities, without regard to its ownership or the political status of its owners, and subsequently sold and the proceeds paid into the National Treasury. The sum realized from this source at the close of the war, as shown by a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, amounted to something over $30,000,000.

The third section of the act of March 12, 1863, under which the greater portion of the property was seized, provided as follows:

"Any person claiming to have been the owner of any such abandoned or captured property, may, at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, prefer his claim to the proceeds thereof in the Court of Claims, and on proof to the satisfaction of said court of his ownership of said property, of his right to the proceeds thereof, and that he has never given any aid or comfort to the present rebellion, to receive the residue of such proceeds, after the deduction of any purchase money which may have been paid, together with the expense of transportation and sale of said property, and any other lawful expenses attending the disposition thereof."

Under this provision of the statute a large number of suits were commenced in the Court of Claims by persons claiming to be the owners of property seized under this and similar statutes, and in cases in which the claimants could make the proof required by the act judgments were rendered in their favor for the net proceeds of their property paid into the Treasury; and by this and other means the fund in the Treasury has been reduced, so that the sum now on hand amounts to something over $10,500,000.

Many questions arose under the act of March 12, 1863, such as, What constituted proof of loyalty? When was the rebellion suppressed, and when did the two years expire within which suit could be commenced? All of which were vigorously contested, and in which the court ruled strictly and rigidly against the claimants, rendering appeals to the Supreme Court necessary, and by which the owners of the property were delayed or deterred from preferring their claims under the act.

In December, 1869, the Supreme Court of the United States decided, in Anderson v. The United States (9 Wall., 56), that the rebellion was suppressed on the 20th of August, 1866, the date of President Johnson's proclamation of pardon and amnesty, with restoration of civil and political rights, and the limitation of the right to commence suit took effect or expired on the 20th of August, 1868. And it thus appears that the period in which the claimants could bring suits to recover the net proceeds of their property had expired more than one year prior to the decision fixing the date of the close of the war was announced, and when it was too late for the claimants to derive any benefit from the decision.

It was not till 1871 that the Supreme Court gave full consideration to this act of March 12, 1863. In December of that year, in the case of Klein v. The United States (13 Wall., 138), the court decided—

(1) That it was not the intention of Congress, by the enactment of that statute, that the title to property seized under it should be divested from the loyal owners.

(2) That the proceeds of the property should go into the Treasury without change of ownership.

(3) That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, though then hostile, might subsequently become loyal.

(4) That it was for the Government itself to determine whether those proceeds should be restored to the owner or not.

(5) That the President's proclamation of pardon and amnesty, with restoration of rights of property, and particularly that of July 4, 1863, was a decision on the part of the Government which decided affirmatively the right of all the owners of such property to the proceeds thereof in the Treasury; and the restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned.

(6) And that "the Government constituted itself the trustee for those who by that act were declared entitled to the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, and for those whom it should thereafter recognize as entitled."

And in its opinion the court uses this language:

"That it was not the intention of Congress that the title to these proceeds should be divested absolutely out of the original owners of the property seems clear upon a comparison of different parts of the act."

"We have already seen that those articles which became by the simple fact of capture the property of the captor, as ordnance, munitions of war, and the like, or in which third parties acquired rights which might be made absolute by decree, as ships and other vessels captured as prize, were expressly excepted from the operation of the act; and it is reasonable to infer that it was the purpose of Congress that the proceeds of the property for which the special provision of the act was made should go into the Treasury without change of ownership. Certainly such was the intention in respect to the property of loyal men. That the same intention prevailed in regard to the property of owners who, though then hostile, might subsequently become loyal, appears probable from the circumstances that no provision is anywhere made for confiscation of it, while there is no trace in the statute book of intention to divest ownership of private property not excepted from the effect of this act otherwise than by proceedings for confiscation."

"It is thus seen that, except as to property used in actual hostilities, as mentioned in the first section of the act of March 12, 1863, no titles were divested in the insurgent States, unless in pursuance of a judgment rendered after due legal proceedings. The Government recognized to the fullest extent the humane maxims of the modern law of nations, which exempt private property of noncombatant enemies from capture as booty of war; even the law of confiscation was sparingly applied. The cases were few indeed in which the property of any not engaged in actual hostilities was subjected to seizure and sale."

"We conclude, therefore, that the title to the proceeds of the property which came to the possession of the Government by capture or abandonment, with the exceptions already noticed, was in no case divested from the original owner. It was for the Government itself to determine whether these proceeds should be restored to the owner or not. The promise of the restoration of all rights of property decided that question affirmatively as to all persons who availed themselves of the proffered pardon. The restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned, on application within two years from the close of the war. It was, in fact, promised for an equivalent. 'Pardon and restoration of political rights' were 'in return' for the oath and its fulfillment."

And then the court adds this strong language:

"To refuse it would be a breach of faith not less cruel and astounding than to abandon the freed people whom the Executive had promised to maintain in their freedom."

And in the prior case of The United States v. Padelford (9 Wall., 531) the court held that under the proclamation of pardon issued by President Lincoln, dated December 8, 1863, and the act of March 12, 1863, the Government is a trustee, holding the proceeds of the petitioner's property for his benefit, and having been fully reimbursed for all expenses incurred in that character, loses nothing by the judgment, which simply awards to the petitioner what is his own.

This decision in the Klein case settled the important questions in relation to the owners of captured and abandoned property and their rights under the act of March 12, 1863, and subsequent statutes relating to that subject, and it left nothing for Congress to do but provide a tribunal to which claimants might resort to establish their absolute right, in the language of the Supreme Court, to their share of the fund derived from the sale of such property.

In June, 1873, the case of Haycraft v. The United States was commenced in the Court of Claims to recover the net proceeds of certain property of the claimant. The suit was brought more than two years after the suppression of the rebellion upon the theory that, as the Government held those proceeds in trust, as decided in the Klein case, it was liable outside of the act of March 12, 1863, upon an implied promise to pay to the claimant his portion of the fund; but the Court of Claims decided that the provision in that act limiting the right of the claimant to two years in which to prefer his claim was a limitation upon its jurisdiction, and thereupon it dismissed the petition. In January, 1875, this decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court, which held that the question was one of jurisdiction and not of limitation, and that Congress having legislated upon the subject, the Court of Claims did not possess jurisdiction to entertain suits of this character under an implied contract to refund to claimants the net proceeds of their property in the Treasury. (Haycraft v. The United States, 22 Wall., 81.)

While the Haycraft case was pending in the Court of Claims, and before its decision by the Supreme Court, a large number of suits were commenced in the former court upon the theory on which the Haycraft case was based, viz, that the Government was liable to the claimants for the net proceeds of their property, under an implied contract; and these cases were all continued upon the dockets of the court till the decision of the Supreme Court to which we have referred, when they were all dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Here, then, was the difficulty which existed—parties having rights which they were unable to enforce, for the reason that there was no tribunal to which to resort for their enforcement. It requires no argument to prove that a right may exist where there is no remedy for its enforcement; and this was, and is to-day, the precise predicament of all persons claiming an interest in the captured and abandoned property fund. While the power of the Court of Claims in the premises had ceased to exist, the rights of the claimants had survived, and neither the court nor the claimants, in order to enable each to act, required anything more than this: The one the privilege to sue, and the other the right to entertain and determine such suits.

To remedy the wrong which existed in this respect, and in order to make effective the decisions of the Supreme Court to which reference has been made, Congress enacted the fourth clause of section 1059 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

"Fourth. Of all claims for the proceeds of captured or abandoned property, as provided by the act of March 12, 1863, chapter 120, entitled 'An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States, or by the act of July 2, 1864, chapter 225, being an act in addition thereto: Provided, That the remedy given in cases of seizure under the said acts, by preferring claim in the Court of Claims, shall be exclusive, precluding the owner of any property taken by agents of the Treasury Department as abandoned or captured property, in virtue of or under color of said acts, from suit at common law, or any other mode of redress whatever, before any court other than the Court of Claims.'"

And Congress provided for the payment of any judgment the court might render in favor of claimants under said fourth clause by section 3689 of the Revised Statutes, which, under the head of "Permanent annual appropriations," among other things, provides as follows:

"For the return of proceeds from sale of captured and abandoned property in insurrectionary districts to the owners thereof, who may, to the satisfaction of the Court of Claims, prove their right to and ownership of said property."

These provisions of the Revised Statutes, construed together, provided a complete and adequate remedy for the claimants under the act of March 12, 1863, and subsequent statutes relating to the subject. The statutes declare this was the law on the 1st of December, 1873, though they were not approved by the President till June 22, 1874, and were not published till in 1875. These provisions of the statutes were in force, though not published, when the Haycraft case, above cited, was decided by the Supreme Court, and it can hardly be doubted that the decision in that case would have been different if the court had been aware of the existence of the two clauses in sections 1059 and 3689 of the Revised Statutes.

To every unprejudiced mind the language of the fourth clause of section 1059 is clear and unambiguous, and requires no construction to arrive at the intention of the National Legislature. It could have had but one object, and that was to confer upon the Court of Claims a jurisdiction which had once existed, and which Congress well knew had expired by limitation. While the provision confers no new rights upon those claiming the fund derived from the sale of their property, but, on the contrary, restricts those rights by making the jurisdiction exclusive, it provides a tribunal before which they can go to enforce existing rights, and that tribunal one specially provided for adjudicating claims against the Government. Acting upon the assumption that the Government can not be sued without its consent, the legal effect of the clause is to give that consent, with the proviso that the claimants shall be confined in the prosecution of their claims to the provisions of the acts of March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864; that is to say, that they should only recover the net proceeds of the sale of their property after deducting all costs and charges. And this conclusion is strengthened when section 3689 is construed in connection with section 1059.

The act of March 12, 1863, provided for the payment of all judgments rendered under its provisions; and if by the fourth clause of section 1059 it was only intended to continue the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims as to suits then pending before it, then no additional legislation was necessary to provide for the payment of any judgments rendered by the court in favor of the claimants. Besides, the limitation of two years in the act of March 12, 1863, operated upon the claimants rather than upon the court. It gave them the two years in which to prefer their claims to the proceeds of their property, and the act nowhere provided that the jurisdiction of the court should terminate in two years, whether the cases then pending were disposed of or not. But when Congress came to confer a new jurisdiction upon the court, without limitation as to time in which suits might be commenced, in order to make the remedy effective it was necessary to make provision for the payment of any judgments obtained by the claimants, and this Congress did by the enactment of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes.

The Court of Claims, however, adhering to its habit of ruling rigidly against claimants in that court, has recently taken a different view of sections 1059 and 3689, and in the cases of Mary A. Wade, administratrix, and B. M. Martel, syndic, has held that Congress did not intend by the above sections to repeal the two years' limitation in the act of March 12, 1863, and that these sections will not admit of such a construction, thus placing Congress in the ridiculous attitude of conferring jurisdiction upon the court and in the same clause limiting that jurisdiction to a period of time which had expired five years previously. This decision is based upon the ground "that the object of the revision of the statutes was not to change existing law, but to revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate all statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, which shall be in force at the time the commissioners should make the final report of their doings;" and that the commissioners, "instead of reenacting the full language, for conciseness and condensation merely referred to the act, and provided that the court should have jurisdiction of all claims for the proceeds of captured or abandoned property, as provided in the act of March 12, 1863."

Without stopping to criticize further this decision of the Court of Claims, it is sufficient to say that it completely nullifies the fourth clause of section 1059 of the Revised Statutes and defeats the will of the lawmaking power as expressed by that provision of the law. So long as that decision stands, even were there no other obstacles in the way, no suits can be maintained in the Court of Claims for the recovery of any portion of the captured and abandoned property fund, and the doors of that court, as well as all other legal tribunals, are closed against the claimants.

This is the condition and state of the law bearing upon this subject at this time as construed and defined by the courts, and it seems apparent that if this captured and abandoned property fund is ever to be distributed to its owners some additional legislation is necessary to that end. If the title of the owners of the property seized and sold under the captured and abandoned property acts has never been divested; if the Government holds the net proceeds of the property thus sold without any legal title thereto and as trustee for the owners, and if the President's proclamations of pardon and amnesty, including restoration to civil and political rights, was a decision on the part of the Government which decided affirmatively the right of all the owners of the property to the proceeds thereof in the Treasury, as the highest judicial tribunal of the nation has decided, then in equity and good conscience it ought not to retain the money, and the honor and dignity of the nation demand that some provision should be made by which the claimants of the fund may be enabled to enforce their rights thereto. For more than twenty years the Government has had the use of this money.

For more than twenty years the claimants have been appealing to Congress for relief; and if Congress, in the discharge of more pressing duties, has neglected this appeal, or if the remedy it provided has proved inefficacious, the stronger the reason for some action in this direction at the present time. The claimants are fast passing away, leaving as an inheritance to their children the prospect of litigation with their Government, and the witnesses upon whom the claimants must depend to establish their rights are being scattered and lost sight of, and to delay further is simply to rob and deprive these parties of their rights, some of whom are widows and orphans, while others are colored or men of small means.

That Congress has from time to time felt the necessity for making some provision for the disposition of this fund is evident from the fact that at nearly every session special acts have been enacted for the benefit of claimants of this fund, thus doing justice to some at the expense of others, and it seems to your committee that common justice demands that a general law should be enacted by which all claimants to the fund may be relegated to some tribunal where they can establish their rights according to legal methods and each receive that portion of the fund to which he shows himself entitled.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. McLAURIN. With that I believe I have said all I desire to say. I would, if I had not already detained the Senate longer than I had intended when I took the floor, read from the case of The United States v. Klein, the opinion of the court having been delivered by Chief Justice Chase. It can be found in 13 Wallace, commencing at page 136 and running to page 150, inclusive. Now, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like the attention of the Senator from New York. I wish to ask whether the amendment appearing on page 2, lines 10 and 11, providing that all questions of negligence shall be determined by the court of the United States for the district in which the injury was inflicted, has been adopted?

Mr. DEPEW. That is the amendment to which the Senator from Mississippi has just been addressing his remarks. It is his amendment and has not yet been adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was laid on the table.

Mr. DEPEW. It has been reintroduced.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have to say on that subject that I regard any amendment to this bill which will turn over the liability of this Government to an employee for injuries received to the determination of a court of justice really inflicts a cruelty upon such employee. I can imagine an ideal administration of justice without delay, without expense to the litigant, but unfortunately we have not such ideal conditions for the administration of justice; and to give an employee a mere right to bring a lawsuit is no substantial relief. We all know how such lawsuits are conducted; that the injured employee is usually without funds to pay an attorney; that he is oftentimes compelled to make a contingent arrangement with an attorney, and is oftentimes obliged to divide with him the amount of a possible judgment. Oftentimes at the end of the litigation the injured employee will receive little or nothing, the entire judgment being absorbed in counsel fees and the expenses of litigation.

In addition to that is the hardship of delay, more demoralizing to an employee than anything that can be conceived of, for, relying upon a possible realization of a judgment, he is likely to neglect his business, and thus he becomes a mere expectant of fortune, abandoning his occupation for the chance of a future realization.

I say, therefore, that I can imagine nothing more cruel than to give an injured employee the mere right of a lawsuit. It sounds well, of course, to say that you give the employee the right that every other man has against his employer in a court of justice; that the United States waives its sovereignty, goes into court as any ordinary individual would do, and submits itself to the judgment of the court. But, as a matter of fact, if we resort to this method of lawsuits it will be incumbent upon the officials of the United States having the matter in charge to make every defense up to the court of last resort. It will be their absolute duty to defend and contest all suits until the judgment of the court of last resort is obtained.

So it seems to me much better to substitute some form of accident or life insurance that will give an employee, as soon as the injury is received, a fixed sum, to be determined by some rule to be provided by the bill, than to turn him over to the chances of the law; and I have no doubt that that is the opinion of the vast army of employees in the country.

I think this principle of accident and life insurance as a substitute for mere employers' liability in the courts should be established throughout the land in every form of occupation. This has been done substantially by advanced legislation in France, Germany, and England, the Government itself sometimes contributing its proportion to the insurance fund. It has been entered upon by some enlightened and humane corporations in this country, but as yet by few. For a long time I have been urging with reference to the great railroad corporations of the country that a fund of this kind and a method of compensation of this kind should be established.

We have in the employ of the railroads of the country 1,300,000 men, all of them engaged in hazardous occupations. The entire income of these corporations, aggregating over $2,000,000,000 annually, comes from the masses of the people in return for the carriage of freight and of passengers. The right of the public to regulate these corporations, the right of the State to regulate them so far as State commerce is concerned, and the right of the United States to regulate them so far as interstate commerce is concerned is now well determined. In this regulation it seems to me that the Congress of the United States, in the exercise of its jurisdiction over interstate commerce, might well impose upon the great public a certain charge, which will go into the insurance and accident fund of these corporations and which shall be administered by the corporations under the direction and control of United States officials in such a way as to insure the employees engaged in these hazardous occupations in case of accident and death.

It appears to me that the public can not complain of this action. These corporations are engaged as common carriers in a public occupation. The occupation is a hazardous one. The service is paid for by the public, and there is no reason why the public should not pay a charge in proportion to the hazard of the occupation, that charge to go into an insurance fund for the compensation of the employees.

It is true that the railroad corporations might object to it because it might diminish in a degree their dividends, but, rightly applied, it would not diminish just dividends. The law recognizes the fact that these corporations are entitled, and entitled only, to a fair return upon a fair valuation of their property, and they are entitled to that over and above the operating expenses of the corporation. This charge would be a part of the operating expenses of the corporation and would be paid by the corporation before the amount provided for dividends would be ascertained.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. Just as I was leaving the Chamber, having been necessarily called out, I understood the Senator to say that this amendment would refer the matter to a court. The first amendment I offered proposed to do that, but the amendment which is now under consideration proposes to have it decided by the judge in the district in which the injury is inflicted—not by the court, but by the judge. If Senators are correct in holding that Congress has the power to have this matter decided by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor or by any other official, then Congress has the power to provide for the decision of the matter by the judge, so that the injured employee will not have to go into court to have his case decided, but will go before the judge in his district at his home, instead of going a thousand or two thousand or three thousand miles to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. This is the difference as to this amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the Senator propose to make the decision of the judge final and conclusive?

Mr. McLAURIN. Not at all. I would not make it final. I do not think that any one man should have such authority as that. But if it be so, then it is better that a man in this district, that district, the other district, and all the districts where Federal judges are appointed should have this authority than one man centered here at Washington. It is too much power and authority to put in the hands of one man, waiving the question of his impartiality.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Would the Senator have such a proceeding before a judge conducted according to the usual methods of judicial procedure—by the filing of a complaint, the filing of an answer, the employment of counsel, the trial before a jury, the ascertainment of a verdict and judgment, and then an appeal?

Mr. McLAURIN. Whatever proceeding should be applied to the trial of the matter before the Secretary of Commerce and Labor I would have applied to the trial of the matter before the judge.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I understand the Senator would have the decision of the judge a conclusive one, and he would have a summary proceeding, so that the matter could be quickly disposed of?

Mr. McLAURIN. I would have a summary proceeding, so that the matter could be quickly disposed of, but I would provide, as the amendment provides, that the injured employee may appeal to the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Government also have an appeal if it chooses to appeal?

Mr. McLAURIN. My amendment does not provide for any appeal by the Government, because I would not have it in the power of the Government to harrass the employee by the delay consequent upon an appeal; but I would have the right given to the employee to appeal from the decision of the judge. It would give every right to the employee that can possibly be given in a trial before the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and it would give the employee the additional right to have the matter tried more speedily at his home, where he could get his evidence and where he could be heard, probably orally, before the judge.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Would the Senator have the intervention of a jury in such a case?

Mr. McLAURIN. My amendment does not provide for a jury. I think the selection of a jury would be calculated to delay the matter and would incur costs probably upon the employee that he ought not to be required to sustain. There is no provision in the bill for a jury before the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. There can be no objection to the amendment on the ground that there is no jury provided for, because there is no jury provided for before the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; so that no privilege or right that is included in the bill would be impinged by permitting the trial of this matter before the judge at the home of the injured employee.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator please be kind enough to yield to me that I may submit a conference report?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 6) directing the selection of a site for the erection of a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of John Witherspoon.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21410) granting condemned ordinance to certain institutions.

RESURVEY OF LANDS IN WYOMING, ETC.

Mr. NELSON. I submit a conference report and ask for its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The report was read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6190) authorizing a resurvey of certain townships in the State of Wyoming, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the amendment of the House numbered two.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House numbered one; and agree to the same.

KNUTE NELSON,

C. D. CLARK,

A. J. McLAURIN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

F. W. MONDELL,

A. J. VOLSTEAD,

JOS. T. ROBINSON,

Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to address the Senate on the report but I understood the Senator from Minnesota had the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. NELSON. I want to make a brief explanation of the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A conference report is a matter of privilege.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to state briefly to the Senate that when the bill was returned to the Senate it was one of those omnibus bills which they have sent to us from the House. It related to several propositions in land matters. They were carefully examined by me and they were all concurred in with two amendments that were adopted here. One was the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], relating to the resurvey of certain lands in that State, and the other was an amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], relating to the opening of the Fort Keogh Military Reservation. The bill went back to the House with those two amendments. The House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House, and the bill went into conference.

The report of the conferees is to this effect: They have agreed to the first amendment, the amendment relating to the resurvey of lands in Colorado, but report against the amendment opening the Fort Keogh Military Reservation. The Senate conferees tried their best to get the House conferees to agree to it, but it was impossible, and I am satisfied that under present conditions unless the conference report is agreed to the bill will fail. It contains many important matters of legislation that ought to pass at the present session. I regret as much as anybody else that the bill comes to us in the condition it does, but it comes as a good many other bills have come this session.

I am unwilling to take the time of the Senate any further. I can simply say that for myself and for my colleagues we should have been very glad to have had the Fort Keogh Military Reservation provision inserted in the bill, but we were unable to get the conferees of the House to agree to it.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether, in his opinion, the bill ought not to have been referred to a committee before it was reported to the Senate, especially as it contains amendments that were not considered by the Committee on Public Lands in any way.

Mr. NELSON. Most of the provisions in the bill have been duly considered and passed as independent bills, after having been reported upon by the Department. I have examined the reports on every bill, both in the House and in the Senate. Most of the bills, or a large share of them, were bills that we had passed in the Senate.

Mr. FLINT. I call the attention of the Senator to one section of the bill which provides for the granting of certain lands to the State of Kansas for an agricultural college. That is a proposition that I have opposed, as well as other members of the Committee on Public Lands. We are opposed to any further grants of public lands to any of the States for any purpose.

Mr. NELSON. I think that amendment was agreed to by the Senate and was not really a matter of conference; but when I explain the matter to the Senator I do not think he can see any objection to it.

Many years ago Congress passed a law, commonly called "the agricultural college grant," giving a certain amount of public land to each State and Territory for agricultural colleges, based upon the number of Representatives in Congress. Kansas got her quota, but when her quota was adjusted a part of the lands were within what they called "double minimum" lands. They were the even sections within a railroad grant, and being double minimum they refused to give them the same amount they would have given if they had been single minimum lands. It turned out afterwards that the railroad under which the grant was given was abandoned, and this is simply to make up the deficiency as though the lands had been a dollar and a quarter an acre.

Mr. FLINT. It is not an original grant? It is not a new grant?

Mr. NELSON. No; it is not an original grant at all. It is simply to cure that matter.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I am somewhat embarrassed in discussing the conference report, because I offered an amendment which the report excludes.

My attention was first called to this measure by a leading Member of the other branch of Congress, who announced his belief that the method of legislation, particularly with reference to land titles and matters of enduring importance in the public records, was a most pernicious departure from regular procedure. I called on the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate to ascertain the status of the bill before this body. It was a Senate bill with House amendments. It was understood that that bill could not be the subject of further amendment in the Senate, but on the following morning the bill was taken up, considered in the Chamber, and it was about to pass when I entered upon the floor.

I offered an amendment in the form of a bill which had passed the Senate with the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Lands supporting it, supported by the favorable report of the War Department and the Interior Department, a bill like unto many bills that pass Congress during the experience of every Senator here. Upon consideration of the amendments in the other body the amendment that I offered was objected to because the bill had not been favorably reported in the House of Representatives by a committee, and certain members of the Military Committee of the House objected to the proposed legislation.

To that I could, of course, with perfect grace accede as conclusive were it not for the fact that it appeared that this bill as amended in the other body not only contained provisions never reported in the Senate, but contained a certain bill which had been adversely reported by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate.

This led me to inquire as to the wisdom of pursuing legislation along these omnibus lines. There is no doubt whatever that if the bill adversely reported in this body by the Committee on Public Lands could be separated from the body of this act it would be defeated in the Senate on the recommendation of that honorable committee. But a separate vote is quite impossible.

The ridiculous conclusion to which this class of legislation leads may readily be discerned when I say to the Senate that this omnibus bill contains a bill which passed the Senate yesterday and is before the President now for his signature. It contains another bill adversely reported from the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. Do we not under these conditions find the Senate utterly incapable of exercising its judgment on independent measures?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I merely want to ask a question, not to consume time. Did I understand the Senator to say that the reported bill embraces a bill which passed both Houses and is before the President for his signature?

Mr. CARTER. Undoubtedly; a bill which passed the House of Representatives some time ago, passed the Senate, and is now pending before the President for his consideration.

I have not a word of criticism to offer to the Committee on Public Lands nor to the conferees. The chairman of the Committee on Public Lands is, as every Senator knows, one of the most painstaking Senators in this Chamber. That is a committee which has always justly held the confidence of the Senate and the country. The Senate Committee on Public Lands is in no sense whatever responsible for the peculiar legislative predicament in which this class of legislation places the Senate. Does anyone doubt that if we could exercise independent judgment to-day we would strike from this conference report the bill which has been signed by the Presiding Officers of the two Houses and is awaiting only the signature of the President to become a law?

Mr. CLAY. Do I understand the Senator to say that the conferees have inserted in this bill a survey which was not really in conference?

Mr. CARTER. I do not make that statement, Mr. President. The conferees did not insert anything in the bill as far as I am advised.

Mr. NELSON. What is the question of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Georgia inquires if the conferees inserted any new matter in the bill. I understand that they did not.

Mr. NELSON. None at all; not a word.

Mr. CLAY. Do I understand the Senator then to state that this omnibus bill includes a certain measure which was reported adversely by a committee of the Senate?

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] made that statement and he has on his desk the documents which support the statement. He is unhappily absent from the Chamber at the moment, but I assume he will be here to make good the statement made to me.

Mr. President, I do not wish to be understood as objecting to any meritorious feature of this bill. For aught I know, everything in the bill has merit; but I do know this: That whether a Senator's disposition to support or oppose a given proposition in the bill exists or not, the Senator is powerless to do aught except to defeat the entire conference report or else accept every part of the bill without any question whatever. It does seem to me, Mr. President, that upon matters of pension, the transient things that disappear in time and do not become public records of enduring importance, we may possibly combine legislation in this fashion, but when dealing with the titles to the country's lands, when dealing with the basic title of the individual and the State, we certainly should proceed with a regularity which is quite impossible in such a bill as this. Each proposition should stand upon its own merits, and a Senator desiring to defeat one proposition ought not to be constrained to overlook his duty because forsooth he fears that he might thereby defeat some proposition possessing commendable merit.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CARTER. I do.

Mr. DEPEW. As this matter evidently requires not only debate, but, in a certain sense, an investigation, and as the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], who desires to address himself to some matter of which the Senator from Montana complains in this measure as very serious, is not present, I would suggest that while the report of a committee of conference is privileged, its consideration under such circumstances should go over until the next day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from New York?

Mr. NELSON. I do not know, unless the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] desires to debate the report further. I desire to say that I think the statement which he has made is incorrect. I think every provision in this bill has been acted upon and reported upon in one House or the other. My recollection is that upward of half of the bills embraced in the measure are Senate bills.

Mr. President, I can certainly not help it that the House sent over to us an omnibus bill. They have sent over several bills of that character. Owing to the conditions that prevail it is a question of acting upon these omnibus bills or having no legislation at all. I took pains, when the bill came over here, to go over every item in it, and I read and examined every report. If time warranted, I could explain every provision of the bill and show that there is nothing in it that is not just and proper under the circumstances; that there is nothing in the bill but that, if there were a separate vote on any of its provisions, the Senate would approve of. If, however, the purpose of the Senator from Montana is to talk out or defeat this conference report I, of course, at this stage of the session, am at his mercy.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I disclaim any purpose to talk out the conference report; but I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], who has his data all prepared and on his desk, expecting this conference report would not be taken up until after the disposition of the bill in charge of the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], who has been temporarily absent from the Chamber, believing that that consideration was still in progress, and who has just now returned, should have an opportunity to be heard on this question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his question of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand the rule, the presentation of a conference report is privileged, but its consideration is not privileged except by unanimous consent; and I ask if unanimous consent has been given for the consideration of this conference report?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule is that—

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is, if a motion shall be made, I suppose that means, or unanimous consent be given?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota in presenting the conference report asked for its present consideration.

Mr. NELSON. I asked for the present consideration of the proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And no objection was made to the request.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did the Chair put the request for unanimous consent?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair stated the proposition of the Senator from Minnesota; but unanimous consent has not been given.

Mr. GALLINGER. No, I rise, Mr. President to object, if it is in order, so that we may go on with the bill that we had under consideration when this report was presented.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, then, under the rule, Will the Senate proceed with the consideration of the report? The Chair does not understand that an objection will carry it over; but that it is a matter for the Senate to determine. Under the rule, the question must be immediately put.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, is that the rule—without a motion? Because, Mr. President, if it is the rule, I must object. I have always understood—and I have had the management of a good many conference reports—that I had a right to present them as a privileged matter, but that the consideration of them depended upon whether the Senate gave unanimous consent at the time; otherwise the report went over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair entirely agrees with the Senator from New Hampshire. If the Senator from Minnesota does not follow his request for unanimous consent by a motion, then the report must go over. The Senator did not make a motion. He merely asked unanimous consent.

Mr. NELSON. We were proceeding with the consideration of the report, Mr. President, and I think it is properly before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think it is properly before the Senate, Mr. President, and I object to its further consideration at the present time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made—

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the conference report. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it. The "ayes" have it, and the report is before the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] took occasion to state that my observation to the effect that one of these bills had been adversely reported by a committee of the Senate, to wit, the Committee on Public Lands, was incorrect. That may be disposed of by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who is possessed of the facts and the record.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, section 3 of Senate bill 6190 reads as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to certify to the State of Kansas, for the benefit of the Kansas State Agricultural College, 7,682 acres of public land in said State, the same to be in full satisfaction of the claim of said State under an act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] introduced in the Senate on January 7, 1908, Senate joint resolution No. 20, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The Committee on Public Lands referred it to a subcommittee, consisting of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and myself. After considering the resolution, the subcommittee made a report to the Committee on Public Lands adverse to the resolution. That adverse report was based upon a communication from the Secretary of the Interior. In a letter dated February 21, 1908, the Secretary of the Interior said:

Selections were made by the State of Kansas, under the provisions of the act of 1862, of lands aggregating 82,313.53 acres in area. The selections were approved by the then Secretary of the Interior, September 16, 1865, and the lands selected were certified to the State October 3, 1865. Of the lands so selected, however, 7,682.92 acres were found to be double the minimum in price, and, as provided in the statute making the grant, the acreage certified to the State was "proportionally diminished." It thus appears that the State of Kansas has received the equivalent of 89,996.45 acres of land under the grant to her for colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

It has been claimed on behalf of the State that the lands certified to her as double minimum in price were not legally double minimum, but opinions adverse to the claim of the State were rendered by this Department May 13, 1881; October 25, 1886 (5 L. D., 243), and May 13, 1899, and by the United States Attorney-General June 17, 1881 (17 Op. A. G., 129).

The grant to the State of Kansas has been satisfied by selection, approval, and certification, in conformity with the provisions of the act by which the grant was made, and I see no reason why the relief proposed by the resolution should be extended to that State, while no provision is made for other States which are possibly in the same condition.

Then the Secretary goes on to say that—

According to the last annual report there were 315,674 acres of unappropriated public lands in Kansas on June 30, 1907.

Mr. President, it was upon that communication that the subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands reported adversely upon the resolution, and it was not reported favorably to the Senate.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. FLINT. I understand from the letter which the Senator from Utah has read from the Secretary of the Interior, that if we pass this bill it will be the basis for like bills on behalf of various other States in the Union.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a correct inference from the letter of Secretary Garfield dated February 21, 1908.

I think, Mr. President, it is a very dangerous proposition to bring into the Senate an omnibus lands bill of this character, without due consideration by the committees of the Senate especially charged with the consideration of the subject. I feel that it was very improper to include this matter in an omnibus bill coming from the House to the Senate after the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate had reported adversely on it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands reported on the bill to the full committee, but the full committee has never acted on it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I remember, as chairman of that subcommittee, reporting it to the full Committee on Public Lands of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. The matter was never taken up by the full committee and disposed of. I want to say to the Senator that in reference to this matter the situation is this: An agricultural college grant was made a great many years ago—I do not remember how many years ago—to each State and Territory, based upon the number of representatives they had in Congress. They were to get so many acres. Some States that had no public lands got land scrip and sold it. Those States that had public lands selected the lands. At the time this selection was made it applied only to what we call single minimum land, or a dollar and a quarter an acre land. It is true that at the time the lands were selected they were double minimum lands, for the reason that they were within the limits of a railroad grant; and under the conditions of that grant, as was the case in most of the other railroad grants that were made in those days, the even sections within the limits of a grant that were not covered by the grant were termed "double-minimum lands," and for a while homesteaders were only allowed to take 80 acres of those lands, instead of 160. Afterwards Congress changed that legislation and allowed homesteaders to take 160 acres of double-minimum lands.

The land the State of Kansas selected was at the time the selection was made double-minimum land, because it was within the limits of a railroad grant, but the company afterwards abandoned the work, the road never was built, and the grant lapsed. Hence these very lands became single-minimum lands.

The equity of the State of Kansas is this: The lands were double-minimum lands because a railroad was to be constructed there, but the railroad never having been constructed, the grant lapsed and the lands became afterwards single-minimum lands, or a dollar and a quarter an acre lands. Therefore the State ought to have them. That is all there is in that case. It involves a matter of 7,000 acres of land. It is not a new grant. It is simply to make up the difference that arose from the facts I have stated.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is true that the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company did not build the road, but the Senator will remember, if he has read the case at all, that the Kansas Pacific Railroad was the same as the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company and the successor to it; and of the Kansas Pacific Railroad the Union Pacific, eastern division, was the successor. The latter company built the road. This question has been determined four times, and everything the Senator has said was presented to the Secretary of the Interior at the time of the hearing, and it was also presented to the United States Attorney-General, and by him decided on June 17, 1891, that the State of Kansas had no claim whatever and that the lands were double-minimum lands. It has been decided four times that such was the case.

Mr. NELSON. At the time the selection was made, that is true. The decision was based upon the facts as they then existed, but afterwards, the company having failed to build the road, the grant lapsed. Another company built the road, but they did not get the land grant.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the last decision in this case was on May 13, 1899.

Mr. NELSON. Well, but it was based upon the facts existing when the selection was made.

Mr. SMOOT. It has been confirmed, every decision that has been rendered having been adverse to the State of Kansas in this particular. I can not for the life of me see why this 7,000 acres of public land should be given to the State of Kansas, or to an agricultural college in the State of Kansas, at this time. If it is given, there are other States that will come here with claims similar to this, and they will ask for the public lands in their States where a double minimum price has been charged them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee on conference.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, can we have the yeas and nays on that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. KEAN. Do I understand that this report includes laws already passed by Congress?

Mr. NELSON. All these amendments have been agreed to. There are only two matters in conference. One is in relation to the resurvey of lands in Colorado and the other relates to the Fort Keogh Reservation. The conferees agreed to the resurvey provision for Colorado, but would not agree to the provision in respect to the Fort Keogh Reservation. Those are the only matters in conference.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to express my disapprobation of this system of legislation. I think it is the most vicious thing possible to put a great number of items together in this shape. While I am interested to some extent in having this report adopted, I believe, if I find I can do so, that I shall vote against it in order to aid in preventing a recurrence of this kind of legislation.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] suggests that only the two amendments last made in the Senate are subject to the jurisdiction of the conferees. I think that assertion is subject to some qualification. The parliamentary status seems to be this: The Senate bill was amended in the House of Representatives, and as thus amended comes to the Senate, whereupon the Senate attaches other amendments and returns the bill to the House of Representatives. That is tantamount to a conditional passage of the House amendments. That is, the House amendments are passed with amendments; and therefore if the conferees called upon to deal with the Senate amendments are restricted only to the Senate amendments and deprived of the privilege of making any modification whatever of the House amendments, the Senate will be deprived of the privilege of expressing its full and free judgment upon those House amendments, because presumably the House amendments were passed subject to conditions imposed by the Senate amendments. Therefore it was a conditional passage, and when the House declines to accept the conditions the whole subject-matter is restored to the conferees. I think that is so beyond question.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to ask the Senator if that rule applies where the Senate amendment relates to a separate and distinct subject?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, presumably the Senate would not have passed the House amendments except with the amendments attached. Whether they are attached in the form of matter interpolated in the bill as new sections, or added to the sections in the way of extension or qualification, it does not vary in any sense the principle involved.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if that rule were followed, every conference report might be defeated. In a case where a bill has passed the House, has come to the Senate, and the items in the House bill are not disturbed by the Senate, the amendments of the Senate being separate and distinct items, the practice for years has been to treat the items that have passed the House and have also passed the Senate without amendment as not subject to discussion in the Senate when the conference report is submitted.

Mr. CARTER. The case cited by the Senator is not under consideration here at all, and would only be applicable as to the original text of the Senate bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have not been able to read the report, but I am advised by the chairman of the committee that the amendments of the Senate are separate and distinct items.

Mr. NELSON. They are separate and distinct items. None of the other items in the bill were worthy of controversy, and in conference we could not do anything with them because they have been agreed to by the Senate. We could only take up the new matters put in. I conceive that no conference committee would have a right to go back and modify provisions distinct and separate that the Senate had agreed to. That would be a most vicious and dangerous practice.

Mr. CARTER. But, Mr. President, the case the Senator cites is not here presented at all. This is a Senate bill. The Senate bill went to the House of Representatives and was there amended by the addition of numerous provisions. The text of the Senate bill was approved in the House to some extent and amended to some extent. The Senate bill as thus amended in the House was returned to the Senate, and the ordinary parliamentary procedure at that point would have been to have either concurred or to have disagreed and called for a conference. But that was not done. The Senate, avoiding the conference, accepted the House amendments with certain other amendments, and sent the bill back to the House of Representatives, and at that point the conference was called for. I insist that that is not a case parallel to the case of an appropriation bill originating in the House and passed by the Senate with certain amendments, because we amend the text or approve the text in the first instance, but the Senate amendments in this case were made to a Senate bill that had been previously amended in the House, and it does seem to me that the amendments of the House were accepted conditionally only by the Senate. That condition involved the acceptance of the Senate amendments embraced in the vote whereby the bill passed the Senate. The House disagreed to the Senate amendments. Can it be that, having voted only conditionally upon the House amendments, the inquiry of the conferees is confined exclusively and solely to what the Senate added, the Senate never having voted squarely on the House amendments at all?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator how a House bill, after having been referred to a Senate committee, reported back to the Senate, and passed through the Senate, could get through without a vote of the Senate on the House provisions?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it was a Senate bill, and therefore different from an appropriation bill—an analogy which the Senator draws. The bill originated in the Senate. It provided for the resurvey of certain lands in the State of Wyoming. It was sent to the House of Representatives, and there became the basis of this omnibus bill. The Senate was willing to accept the omnibus bill with certain additions. The additions were made, but they were not accepted by the House of Representatives and a conference was called for. Mr. President, in that situation the House of Representatives accepted one Senate amendment, disagreed to another, and called for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] insists that the only subject-matter for the two Houses to determine or agree upon are the two amendments last placed upon the bill by the Senate without any reference whatever to their relation to the great volume of legislation which the Senate passed on the condition that these additions be made to it. Thus it is claimed that we are deprived of the privilege of conference and have no power, even under the command of the Senate—

Mr. NELSON. Let me ask—

Mr. CARTER. Permit me to finish the sentence—to permit the withdrawal from this conference report of an item embracing a bill which has passed both Houses of Congress and is now pending before the President, awaiting his signature.

Mr. NELSON. How could we—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. How could we in conference take up these other items in the bill on independent and distinct subjects? The first provision of the bill relating to the resurvey of certain lands in the State of Wyoming, what relevancy has the Senator's amendment in regard to the opening of the Fort Keogh Military Reservation to any provision of this bill in conference? We could only act on the two amendments that have been incorporated here, for the reason that, while they were termed "amendments," they in no wise amended or affected any of the provisions in the bill. The other provisions of the bill were on independent and distinct subjects, and neither the provision incorporated in the bill on motion of the Senator from Colorado, relative to a resurvey of towns in Colorado, nor the provision incorporated on motion of the Senator from Montana, relating to the opening of the Fort Keogh Military Reservation and giving the public lands to the State of Montana, relate to any provision of the bill.

We should be violating our duties in the extreme if we went to work and tampered with the other provisions of the bill, because they were not in dispute and not in conference. If these amendments which were offered here for a resurvey and for opening the reservation had any relevancy or bearing on these other amendments, then this would have been a matter of conference; otherwise not. Any Senator will realize that.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator and I can manifestly not agree upon the scope or jurisdiction of a conference committee. I believe that when the Senate approves an amendment of the House, with a certain amendment, the approval is only a qualified approval and does not carry with it a clear and distinct approval without condition, and when the condition is attached to the approval of any amendment the whole subject-matter to which the condition applies must be taken within the jurisdiction of the committee of conference.

But, aside from that, I do think that the Senate owes it to itself, first, not to pass a bill in omnibus or other form which a standing committee of this body has reported adversely on the merits. Second—

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator allow me? I was not in the Chamber when the conference report was read. I have just heard the statement of the Senator from Minnesota, who stated that the Senate amendments had no relation to the subject-matter of the bill as it came over from the House, and if adopted it would be a separate and independent provision or section in the bill. Is that correct?

Mr. CARTER. This bill is made up from start to finish of a combination of independent bills in separate sections or a combination of sections.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then the House or the Senate could act independently on the Senate amendments without touching upon the provisions of the bill as it came from the House?

Mr. CARTER. I suppose they would need the enacting clause in order to assist them through the ordeal.

Mr. HOPKINS. How does the Senate amendment, if it is separate and distinct, qualify or modify the House bill as it came here and was passed by the Senate?

Mr. CARTER. Upon this theory: I say to the Senator that the Senate may, from considerations of public policy, approve a proposition or a series of propositions on certain conditions, which the Senate would not approve independently.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will agree with the Senator upon that, but must not the face of the bill show those terms and conditions in order to govern and control the action of the conferees? If they are simply put in as a separate and distinct proposition, what right would the conferees have to interfere with a separate and distinct proposition that has passed both the Senate and the House?

Mr. CARTER. Passed one body on its own motion after full and free deliberation; passed the other body subject to conditions that other amendments be added, not modifying this, but modifying the entire legislative measure to an extent.

Mr. President, in the first place, I do not intend to obstruct the consideration or to delay a vote on the conference report, but I want at this time to enter, in as emphatic language as I can, my solemn protest against bunching bills relating to subjects thousands of miles apart, as wide apart as the ends of the continent itself—matters affecting titles that to the remotest ages will be considered for good or ill in the proportion that our legislation is wise or unwise—and through this method of bunching bills deprive the Senate of the privilege it ought always to reserve, of considering each measure upon its own merits.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Montana whether that argument should not have been made when the House bill came here, and whether the Senator then should not have presented his reasons against the Senate either attempting to amend or taking any action whatever other than to send it back, refusing to legislate in that way.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator offered an amendment when I called up the bill.

Mr. CARTER. That was all explained.

Mr. HOPKINS. Wait a moment.

The Senate having adopted the House provisions and then asked the House by way of amendment to adopt the other amendments in which it was interested, in what position is the Senate now to reject the conference report? I think the doctrine suggested by the Senator from Montana is a dangerous one—that the provisions that have passed both bodies can be considered by the conferees of the House and Senate and new legislation engrafted upon any of those provisions.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator is adding something.

Mr. HOPKINS. This report may be correct. I am not objecting to it. But if we should adopt his suggestion to-day, we might establish a precedent here that would come home to plague us at some other time.

Mr. CARTER. Then, according to the Senator's theory, the Senate can never fix a condition upon a bill of the House which will make the whole bill the subject-matter of consideration.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes; it can at any time it chooses. But the Senate must do that when the bill is before the Senate. It must do it before the bill goes to conference. The conferees can only act upon differences between the two bodies.

Mr. CARTER. And the difference between the two bodies in this case is that the House made certain amendments to which the Senate conditionally agreed, and the conditions were fixed. The House disagreed to the Senate amendments, and that put the whole matter, according to my judgment, in conference.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is not this the proposition, that the House sent certain measures here and the Senate agreed to them, and then asked the House to agree to certain other measures that the Senate was interested in, and the House refused to concur in the suggestions of the Senate, and that led to the conference?

Mr. CARTER. The Senator overlooks the fact that this is a Senate bill, which went to the House and was accepted there and certain amendments added to it. It puts it in a different status altogether, as he will perceive upon close examination, from an appropriation bill which originates in the House and is amended here.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me? I want to say to the Senate that when this bill came over I moved to concur in the amendment, and the Senator from Montana had no objection. Everything was all right. He got up and offered his amendment about the Fort Keogh Reservation. He had no fault to find with our concurrence in the other provisions of the bill at the time. He was simply anxious to get the Fort Keogh Military Reservation provision on the bill, and because the conferees, that provision having been put on the bill, are unable to agree upon its retention, he now attacks the whole bill which he then offered to amend.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President—

Mr. HOPKINS. Before the Senator from Montana proceeds—

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Illinois will kindly allow me the floor for a moment.

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly. I will not interfere with the Senator.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Minnesota has made the mistake, which is quite common, of stating part of the truth. The Senator from Minnesota will recall that I challenged his attention to this bill in the room of the Committee on Public Lands, and advised him that my attention had been called to it—I do not know that I named the Member of the House, but by a prominent Member of the House. The Senator from Minnesota reached the conclusion that nothing could be done with the bill except to put it on the Calendar.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? When the Senator called on me to see about this bill, he called on me to see if there was any possibility to get this Fort Keogh matter in it.

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I told him I thought not. That was the trouble. He was not concerned about anything else in that bill except to get the Fort Keogh Reservation in.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Minnesota said that it could not be done, and upon my appearance in the Chamber the next morning I found the Senator from Minnesota passing the bill with some other amendments, and mine went in with the bunch. [Laughter.] This personal aspect of this matter is wholly unnecessary.

The Senate is in a peculiar condition with reference to this measure. I stated in the beginning that I was in a position of much embarrassment in expressing my views with reference to this class of legislation, because I had offered an amendment which had been cut out. Therefore the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota might readily occur to every Senator, that my opposition was based upon some sentiment of pique or disappointment. My attention was drawn to the legislation—to the peculiar manner of perfecting it—by virtue of the fact that I became interested in it in the manner suggested. But the fact that an amendment was rejected or accepted does not lend virtue to this pernicious system of legislating. Here the Senate is in the peculiar position this afternoon of impotently enacting into law in an omnibus bill a measure which has passed the Senate and the House and is now before the President awaiting his signature. That will be found upon page 15 of the bill. Section 20 passed the House; it passed the Senate yesterday, was transmitted by the Secretary of the Senate to the President of the United States to-day in the shape of a fully enrolled bill, and we are probably reenacting it this afternoon because, forsooth, our hands are tied by conventionalities, and we are unable to extricate ourselves from the difficulty.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator whether, in the event the Senate rejects this conference report, it may not go back to the conferees and that bill be stricken from the report?

Mr. CARTER. I think both Houses would agree to strike it from the report. I think they should. I think it is a reflection on the Senate to pass, in the midst of a jumble of affairs like this, a bill which is or will become the law.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to ask the Senator another question. When the first omnibus bill came in it occurred to me that it was extremely bad legislation, and if action had been taken by Senators who were interested in those questions, in which I am not directly interested, I should have been glad to have recorded my vote in opposition to the bill.

I want to ask the Senator if we may not in the near future be confronted with a different class of omnibus bills? Instead of having four or five or six or seven land bills in one, may we not have all kinds of bills included in one omnibus bill?

We may have bills relating not only to different land subjects, but to absolutely different subjects affecting the various parts of the country. There is no reason why that may not happen.

Mr. CARTER. As the Senator suggests, we may appropriate money for rivers and harbors, we may make grants of public lands, we may provide for the extension of the Post-Office Department, we may grant pensions to soldiers or citizens, we may create an army or add to it, or do anything we please on omnibus bills, and we probably will fall into the habit ere long of putting Senators in the embarrassing position in which the whole Senate is placed this afternoon, of being unable to strike out a section from the bill because it is in conference.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator let me call his attention to the fact that we are now making very rapid progress in that direction? I believe in the last week we have had before us an omnibus Territorial bill dealing with four or five Territories, and after debating it some fifteen or twenty minutes we struck out two-thirds of it, and I think the balance is sleeping here now. If I remember correctly, we had an omnibus bill here dealing with the question of shipping. Different interests were concerned in it. The spirit to include different subjects in the same bill has grown so rapidly that I have been informed we are soon to have an omnibus finance bill dealing with the money affairs to come before the Senate, including House and Senate bills. It shows that in a very short time we will include almost our entire legislation in a few bills.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the omnibus Territories bill has been referred to. How that came to the Senate has been explained several times. It came from the House. All but two of those bills had passed the Senate. They went to the House, and the House sent them back in the form of an omnibus bill. It is quite true a portion of that bill was stricken out. It will, however, on further consideration by the Senate, be reinserted.

But it does illustrate two important things. One is the evil and danger of legislation by omnibus bills and the other a far greater one. Why are we having omnibus bills now and not earlier in the session?

It is because a sort of atmosphere of adjournment has been created that produces, first, this vicious method of legislating, when we legislate at all, and, second, the prevention of any legislation upon subjects of great importance which the people demand.

I think that this latter is a more serious thing than the incorrect method of legislating by omnibus bills. Why should Congress run for five or six months and then, with critically important matters before it, suddenly determine to adjourn, and adjourn in haste, with legislation undone and demanding attention? Had not that been done no omnibus Territories bill would have come from the House. No omnibus bill, such as we are now considering, would have come from the House.

No omnibus bill of any kind would have come from the House. We are doing this, too, before any official declaration of an adjournment has been made, before any adjournment resolution has been presented in or passed by either House. We find ourselves railroaded into a dangerous method of legislating, if we legislate at all, or else into the neglect of important legislation which is before us calling for action. Who is responsible for this? Who is "getting it into the air" that we must adjourn before our work is done? Whose is the fault of not legislating or legislating imperfectly?

The Senator from Georgia, whose wide experience and stern devotion to duty have won him the respect of every one of his colleagues on both sides, remarked to me to-day in discussing this very matter that in a Government so great as this, involving the welfare of 90,000,000 people, Congress did not stay in session long enough at any time, first, to enact legislation which is required by so great a nation, and which some time we must pass, or second, to carefully and studiously consider such legislation as we do pass.

So the root of the evil, the fault of the omnibus bill, does not lie upon the shoulders of the Senator from Minnesota, nor upon the shoulders of the Committee on Territories. It does lie upon a condition, a wretched condition, that after having spent months doing little or nothing it is decided for us by somebody that Congress must come to a close without considering bills separately, and, generally speaking, without considering a great many bills at all.

That is the situation that concerns and alarms me. The Inland Waterways Commission bill, the compensation to injured Government employees bill, and many other matters either can not be considered here at all, or, if considered, not until the last moment, and then with a sort of a rush which precludes any sort of careful attention.

Mr. FLINT rose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In just a moment. The suggestion has been made here that amendments ought not to be considered—and I agree to that—to the bill before us because it might endanger the life of it in the House, although why it is that it would endanger it in the House no person has explained or can explain—at least not within the theory of our Government. It has been said that if we do anything we think ought to be done, it will prevent legislation altogether. Why? Oh, because, it is answered, the House will not consider it—we are to adjourn too soon, and so imperfect laws are to be passed or else no law is to be passed just because some person is unwilling to keep at work on them.

So a larger question than any defect in an omnibus bill or than the vicious method of legislation which is involved in omnibus bills is the condition which prevents legislation at all, or else rushes through defective legislation when we are permitted to do anything. For myself, I have never seen any reason for quitting our duties here until those duties are performed—carefully, thoroughly, critically performed in workmanlike manner.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California.

Mr. FLINT. The Senator from Indiana answered the question during his remarks.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the yeas and nays were called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the Chair kindly state the question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. CARTER. Before the roll call starts—

Mr. BACON. I should like very much to be able to vote on the question with some degree of intelligence. I understand the conference report covers a number of items. We are absolutely in the dark about it.

Mr. LONG. I think the conference report covers only two items. Am I right about it?

Mr. NELSON. There were only two items in dispute, one about the resurvey of lands in Colorado, to which we agreed, and the other about the Fort Keogh Reservation, as to which we disagreed.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I stated in the beginning to the Senator from Minnesota that it is not my purpose, nor has it been, to interpose any factious opposition to a vote on the conference report. I readily understand how instructive it would be to have the voluminous report of the House committee read for the information of the Senate. I understand how it would be in order to move to postpone the consideration of this report until next December. I understand fully that it is not necessary to allow the conference report to go to a vote on approval or rejection at this time at all. I have made what statement I made here with a view to setting forth with what emphasis I could my opposition to this method of legislating on serious matters of enduring importance affecting public records destined to last as long as our country endures. I do hope that this is the last omnibus public lands bill that will ever obtrude its features into this Chamber. Should one come hereafter, I care not what its provisions will be, I will join with other Senators to oppose its passage at every stage of the proceeding. We have in this bill an important provision relating to the State of Montana. My colleague, who is especially interested in it, has generously suggested that if it was thought proper to defeat the bill on general principles, that might go with the rest.

But I know there are Senators here interested in many parts of this bill. I shall not interpose dilatory tactics or call for that lengthy consideration which the various portions of the bill would ordinarily require, but I shall content myself with voting against the conference report. And hereafter I trust that no committee will favorably report to the Senate an omnibus bill relating to titles to the public domain or any public record of equal importance.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to say only a word. This bill is one, as far as the title is concerned, that I had the honor of introducing, and I should be glad to see it passed, but I join the Senator from Montana in condemnation of these omnibus bills, which are made up by adding to an original measure a score or more of other bills having no relation to each other. Of course I hope the present measure will carry, but I will join with him hereafter at any time and in any way, after this term or session, in declining to submit to that kind of legislation.

Mr. HEYBURN obtained the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think a word is due the other body on this subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HOPKINS. I beg pardon.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, being a member of the Committee on Public Lands, I feel it proper to make the statement I shall make. I do not like this kind of legislation. I do not believe an omnibus bill is the proper bill for bringing this class of legislation before Congress for final action. Then, again, this omnibus bill contains within it a complete separate independent bill that has passed both Houses of Congress and has gone to the President for his signature. That is an objection. It will be an embarrassing situation. If the President disapproves of that bill, he may find it necessary to disapprove of this entire bill, or if he approves of that bill he may demur to again approving of it within the limits of this bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I take it for granted that should this bill pass, the President will be notified, and the other will meet a pocket veto or be laid aside.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would not be at all surprised to learn that it is too late for that condition to arise. I think that is more than probable.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. May I interrupt the Senator from Idaho for just a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think it is also proper on the part of the conferees to call attention to the fact that that bill did not pass this body until after the conference report had been made up and both bodies had acted on the omnibus bill, if I understand the situation.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was merely calling attention to what might become an embarrassing situation. The measures reported from the Committee on Public Lands in the Senate met my concurrence. Some of those that have not been considered by that committee might not meet with my concurrence. It is altogether a bad practice to attempt to bring in indirectly that which might not come in through the regular manner of proceeding. I do not like it. If I should vote against the conference report it would be, first, because I do not like the method of legislating, and, second, because it contains in it a bill that has already passed and gone to the President and in all probability has received his signature, because it has been out of Congress long enough; and, third, because I agree with the Senator from Utah that the Kansas land bill has not sufficient merit to command my support.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] with whom I am paired is absent. If he were present I would vote "yea;" and if my pair can be transferred I will vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If he were present I would vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. If he were present I would vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Owing to my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRAZIER (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE]. He is absent, and I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FULTON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. I will transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. BOURNE] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLAPP. I will transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM], who, if present, would vote "yea." I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I will announce that my colleague [Mr. BURNHAM] is unavoidably absent from the city.

Mr. BACON. The senior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALLIAFERRO] is necessarily absent, and before leaving asked me to announce his pair in case of a vote. He asked me to announce that he is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. I have been requested to transfer my pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM]. I vote "nay."

The Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the names of the absentees be called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

Mr. CLAY. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], so that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will stand paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas, and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let the absentees be called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The absentees were ordered to be called on the request of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The Secretary proceeded to call the names of absent Senators.

Mr. FRAZIER (when his name was called). I did not vote, because I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE].

Mr. NELSON. I am authorized to speak for the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE]. I will release the Senator from Tennessee from his pair.

Mr. FRAZIER. I vote "nay."

The Secretary resumed and concluded the calling of the names of absent Senators.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 19, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21871) to amend the national banking laws.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

H. R. 21410. An act granting condemned ordnance to certain institutions;

H. R. 21735. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to purchasers of Indian lands under any law now existing or hereafter enacted, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 186. Joint resolution relating to the assignment of space in the House Office Building.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21871) to amend the national banking laws, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out all of the matter inserted by said Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That national banking associations, each having an unimpaired capital and a surplus of not less than 20 per cent, not less than ten in number, having an aggregate capital and surplus of at least $5,000,000, may form voluntary associations to be designated as national currency associations. The banks uniting to form such association shall, by their presidents or vice-presidents, acting under authority from the board of directors, make and file with the Secretary of the Treasury a certificate setting forth the names of the banks composing the association, the principal place of business of the association, and the name of the association, which name shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon the filing of such certificate the associated banks therein named shall become a body corporate, and by the name so designated and approved may sue and be sued and exercise the powers of a body corporate for the purposes hereinafter mentioned: Provided, That not more than one such national currency association shall be formed in any city: Provided further, That the several members of such national currency association shall be taken, as nearly as conveniently may be, from a territory composed of a State or part of a State, or contiguous parts of one or more States: And provided further, That any national bank in such city or territory, having the qualifications herein prescribed for membership in such national currency association, shall, upon its application to and upon the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be admitted to membership in a national currency association for that city or territory, and upon such admission shall be deemed and held a part of the body corporate, and as such entitled to all the rights and privileges and subject to all the liabilities of an original member: And provided further, That each national currency association shall be composed exclusively of banks not members of any other national currency association.

"The dissolution, voluntary or otherwise, of any bank in such association shall not affect the corporate existence of the association unless there shall then remain less than the minimum number of ten banks: Provided, however, That the reduction of the number of said banks below the minimum of ten shall not affect the existence of the corporation with respect to the assertion of all rights in favor of or against such association. The affairs of the association shall be managed by a board consisting of one representative from each bank. By-laws for the government of the association shall be made by the board, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. A president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and an executive committee of not less than five members shall be elected by the board. The powers of such board, except in the election of officers and making of by-laws, may be exercised through its executive committee.

"The national currency association herein provided for shall have and exercise any and all powers necessary to carry out the purposes of this section, namely, to render available, under the direction and control of the Secretary of the Treasury, as a basis for additional circulation, any securities, including commercial paper, held by a national banking association. For the purpose of obtaining such additional circulation, any bank belonging to any national currency association, having circulating notes outstanding secured by the deposit of bonds of the United States to an amount not less than 40 per cent of its capital stock and which has its capital unimpaired and a surplus of not less than 20 per cent, may deposit with and transfer to the association, in trust for the United States, for the purpose hereinafter provided, such of the securities above mentioned as may be satisfactory to the board of the association. The officers of the association may thereupon, in behalf of such bank, make application to the Comptroller of the Currency for an issue of additional circulating notes to an amount not exceeding 75 per cent of the cash value of the securities or commercial paper so deposited. The Comptroller of the Currency shall immediately transmit such application to the Secretary of the Treasury with such recommendation as he thinks proper, and if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, business conditions in the locality demand additional circulation, and if he be satisfied with the character and value of the securities proposed and that a lien in favor of the United States on the securities so deposited and on the assets of the banks composing the association will be amply sufficient for the protection of the United States, he may direct an issue of additional circulating notes to the association, on behalf of such bank, to an amount in his discretion, not, however, exceeding 75 per cent of the cash value of the securities so deposited: Provided, That upon the deposit of any of the State, city, town, county, or other municipal bonds, of a character described in section 3 of this act, circulating notes may be issued to the extent of not exceeding 90 per cent of the market value of such bonds so deposited: And provided further, That no national banking association shall be authorized in any event to issue circulating notes based on commercial paper in excess of 30 per cent of its unimpaired capital and surplus. The term "commercial paper" shall be held to include only notes representing actual commercial transactions, which, when accepted by the association, shall bear the names of at least two responsible parties and have not exceeding four months to run.

"The banks and the assets of all banks belonging to the association shall be jointly and severally liable to the United States for the redemption of such additional circulation; and to secure such liability the lien created by section 5230 of the Revised Statutes shall extend to and cover the assets of all banks belonging to the association, and to the securities deposited by the banks with the association pursuant to the provisions of this act; but as between the several banks composing such association each bank shall be liable only in the proportion that its capital and surplus bears to the aggregate capital and surplus of all such banks. The association may at any time require of any of its constituent banks a deposit of additional securities or commercial paper, or an exchange of the securities already on deposit, to secure such additional circulation; and in case of the failure of such bank to make such deposit or exchange the association may, after ten days' notice to the bank, sell the securities and paper already in its hands at public sale, and deposit the proceeds with the Treasurer of the United States as a fund for the redemption of such additional circulation. If such fund be insufficient for that purpose, the association may recover from the bank the amount of the deficiency by suit in the circuit court of the United States, and shall have the benefit of the lien hereinbefore provided for in favor of the United States upon the assets of such bank. The association or the Secretary of the Treasury may permit or require the withdrawal of any such securities or commercial paper and the substitution of other securities or commercial paper of equal value therefor.

"Sec. 2. That whenever any bank belonging to a national currency association shall fail to preserve or make good its redemption fund in the Treasury of the United States, required by section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, chapter 343, and the provisions of this act, the Treasurer of the United States shall notify such national currency association to make good such redemption fund, and upon the failure of such national currency association to make good such fund, the Treasurer of the United States may, in his discretion, apply so much of the redemption fund belonging to the other banks composing such national currency association as may be necessary for that purpose; and such national currency association may, after five days' notice to such bank, proceed to sell at public sale the securities deposited by such bank with the association pursuant to the provisions of section 1 of this act, and deposit the proceeds with the Treasurer of the United States as a fund for the redemption of the additional circulation taken out by such bank under this act.

"Sec. 3. That any national banking association which has circulating notes outstanding, secured by the deposit of United States bonds to an amount of not less than forty per centum of its capital stock, and which has a surplus of not less than twenty per centum, may make application to the Comptroller of the Currency for authority to issue additional circulating notes to be secured by the deposit of bonds other than bonds of the United States. The Comptroller of the Currency shall transmit immediately the application, with his recommendation, to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall, if in his judgment business conditions in the locality demand additional circulation, approve the same, and shall determine the time of issue and fix the amount, within the limitations herein imposed, of the additional circulating notes to be issued. Whenever after receiving notice of such approval any such association shall deposit with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States such of the bonds described in this section as shall be approved in character and amount by the Treasurer of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury, it shall be entitled to receive, upon the order of the Comptroller of the Currency, circulating notes in blank, registered and countersigned as provided by law, not exceeding in amount ninety per centum of the market value, but not in excess of the par value of any bonds so deposited, such market value to be ascertained and determined under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"The Treasurer of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall accept as security for the additional circulating notes provided for in this section, bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of any State of the United States, or any legally authorized bonds issued by any city, town, county, or other legally constituted municipality or district in the United States which has been in existence for a period of ten years, and which for a period of ten years previous to such deposit has not defaulted in the payment of any part of either principal or interest of any funded debt authorized to be contracted by it, and whose net funded indebtedness does not exceed ten per centum of the valuation of its taxable property, to be ascertained by the last preceding valuation of property for the assessment of taxes. The Treasurer of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall accept, for the purposes of this section, securities herein enumerated in such proportions as he may from time to time determine, and he may with such approval at any time require the deposit of additional securities, or require any association to change the character of the securities already on deposit.

"SEC. 4. That the legal title of all bonds, whether coupon or registered, deposited to secure circulating notes issued in accordance with the terms of section 3 of this act shall be transferred to the Treasurer of the United States in trust for the association depositing them, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. A receipt shall be given to the association by the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, stating that such bond is held in trust for the association on whose behalf the transfer is made, and as security for the redemption and payment of any circulating notes that have been or may be delivered to such association. No assignment or transfer of any such bond by the Treasurer shall be deemed valid unless countersigned by the Comptroller of the Currency. The provisions of sections 5163, 5164, 5165, 5166, and 5167, and sections 5224 to 5234, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes respecting United States bonds deposited to secure circulating notes shall, except as herein modified, be applicable to all bonds deposited under the terms of section 3 of this act.

"SEC. 5. That the additional circulating notes issued under this act shall be used, held, and treated in the same way as circulating notes of national banking associations heretofore issued and secured by a deposit of United States bonds, and shall be subject to all the provisions of law affecting such notes except as herein expressly modified: Provided, That the total amount of circulating notes outstanding of any national banking association, including notes secured by United States bonds as now provided by law, and notes secured otherwise than by deposit of such bonds, shall not at any time exceed the amount of its unimpaired capital and surplus: And provided further, That there shall not be outstanding at any time circulating notes issued under the provisions of this act to an amount of more than $500,000,000.

"SEC. 6. That whenever and so long as any national banking association has outstanding any of the additional circulating notes authorized to be issued by the provisions of this act it shall keep on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, in addition to the redemption fund required by section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, an additional sum equal to 5 per cent of such additional circulation at any time outstanding, such additional 5 per cent to be treated, held, and used in all respects in the same manner as the original redemption fund provided for by said section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874.

"SEC. 7. In order that the distribution of notes to be issued under the provisions of this act shall be made as equitable as practicable between the various sections of the country, the Secretary of the Treasury shall not approve applications from associations in any State in excess of the amount to which such State would be entitled of the additional notes herein authorized on the basis of the proportion which the unimpaired capital and surplus of the national banking associations in such State bears to the total amount of unimpaired capital and surplus of the national banking associations of the United States: Provided, however, That in case the applications from associations in any State shall not be equal to the amount which the associations of such State would be entitled to under this method of distribution, the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, to meet an emergency, assign the amount not thus applied for to any applying association or associations in States in the same section of the country.

"SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain information with reference to the value and character of the securities authorized to be accepted under the provisions of this act, and he shall from time to time furnish information to national banking associations as to such securities as would be acceptable under the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 9. That section 5214 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5214. National banking associations having on deposit bonds of the United States bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, including the bonds issued for the construction of the Panama Canal, under the provisions of section 8 of "An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans," approved June 28, 1902, to secure its circulating notes, shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in the months of January and July, a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent each half year upon the average amount of such of its notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such bonds; and such associations having on deposit bonds of the United States bearing interest at a rate higher than 2 per cent per annum shall pay a tax of one-half of 1 per cent each half year upon the average amount of such of its notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such bonds. National banking associations having circulating notes secured otherwise than by bonds of the United States shall pay for the first month a tax at the rate of 5 per cent per annum upon the average amount of such of their notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such securities, and afterwards an additional tax of 1 per cent per annum for each month until a tax of 10 per cent per annum is reached, and thereafter such tax of 10 per cent per annum, upon the average amount of such notes. Every national banking association having outstanding circulating notes secured by a deposit of other securities than United States bonds shall make monthly returns, under oath of its president or cashier, to the Treasurer of the United States, in such form as the Treasurer may prescribe, of the average monthly amount of its notes so secured in circulation; and it shall be the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency to cause such reports of notes in circulation to be verified by examination of the banks' records. The taxes received on circulating notes secured otherwise than by bonds of the United States shall be paid into the division of redemption of the Treasury and credited and added to the reserve fund held for the redemption of United States and other notes."

"SEC. 10. That section 9 of the act approved July 12, 1882, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1907, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That any national banking association desiring to withdraw its circulating notes, secured by deposit of United States bonds in the manner provided in section 4 of the act approved June 20, 1874, is hereby authorized for that purpose to deposit lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States and, with the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency and the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to withdraw a proportionate amount of bonds held as security for its circulating notes in the order of such deposits: Provided, That not more than nine millions of dollars of lawful money shall be so deposited during any calendar month for this purpose.

"Any national banking association desiring to withdraw any of its circulating notes, secured by the deposit of securities other than bonds of the United States, may make such withdrawal at any time in like manner and effect by the deposit of lawful money or national bank notes with the Treasurer of the United States, and upon such deposit a proportionate share of the securities so deposited may be withdrawn: Provided, That the deposits under this section to retire notes secured by the deposits of securities other than bonds of the United States shall not be covered into the Treasury, as required by section 6 of an act entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes," approved July 14, 1890, but shall be retained in the Treasury for the purpose of redeeming the notes of the bank making such deposit."

"SEC. 11. That section 5172 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5172. In order to furnish suitable notes for circulation, the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved, in the best manner to guard against counterfeiting and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom, and numbered, such quantity of circulating notes, in blank, of the denominations of $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, $1,000, and $10,000, as may be required to supply the associations entitled to receive the same. Such notes shall state upon their face that they are secured by United States bonds or other securities, certified by the written or engraved signatures of the Treasurer and Register and by the imprint of the seal of the Treasury. They shall also express upon their face the promise of the association receiving the same to pay on demand, attested by the signature of the president or vice-president and cashier. The Comptroller of the Currency, acting under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall as soon as practicable cause to be prepared circulating notes in blank, registered and countersigned, as provided by law, to an amount equal to fifty per cent of the capital stock of each national banking association; such notes to be deposited in the Treasury or in the sub-treasury of the United States nearest the place of business of each association, and to be held for such association, subject to the order of the Comptroller of the Currency, for their delivery as provided by law: Provided, That the Comptroller of the Currency may issue national-bank notes of the present form until plates can be prepared and circulating notes issued as above provided: Provided, however, That in no event shall bank notes of the present form be issued to any bank as additional circulation provided for by this act.

"Sec. 12. That circulating notes of national banking associations, when presented to the Treasury for redemption, as provided in section 3 of the act approved June 20, 1874, shall be redeemed in lawful money of the United States.

"Sec. 13. That all acts and orders of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Treasurer of the United States authorized by this act shall have the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall have power, also, to make any such rules and regulations and exercise such control over the organization and management of national currency associations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

"Sec. 14. That the provisions of section 5191 of the Revised Statutes, with reference to the reserves of national banking associations, shall not apply to deposits of public moneys by the United States in designated depositaries.

"Sec. 15. That all national banking associations designated as regular depositaries of public money shall pay upon all special and additional deposits made by the Secretary of the Treasury in such depositaries and all such associations designated as temporary depositaries of public money shall pay upon all sums of public money deposited in such associations interest at such rate as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, not less, however, than one per cent per annum upon the average monthly amount of such deposits: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to change or modify the obligation of any association or any of its officers for the safe-keeping of public money: Provided further, That the rate of interest charged upon such deposits shall be equal and uniform throughout the United States.

"Sec. 16. That a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of the preceding sections of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"Sec. 17. That a Commission is hereby created, to be called the 'National Monetary Commission,' to be composed of nine members of the Senate, to be appointed by the Presiding Officer thereof, and nine Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker thereof; and any vacancy on the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

"Sec. 18. That it shall be the duty of this Commission to inquire into and report to Congress at the earliest date practicable, what changes are necessary or desirable in the monetary system of the United States or in the laws relating to banking and currency, and for this purpose they are authorized to sit during the sessions or recess of Congress, at such times and places as they may deem desirable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summons and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ a disbursing officer and such secretaries, experts, stenographers, messengers, and other assistants as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes for which said Commission was created. The Commission shall have the power, through subcommittee or otherwise, to examine witnesses and to make such investigations and examinations, in this or other countries, of the subjects committed to their charge as they shall deem necessary.

"Sec. 19. That a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of sections 17 and 18 of this act, and to pay the necessary expenses of the Commission and its members, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Said appropriation shall be immediately available and shall be paid out on the audit and order of the chairman or acting chairman of said Commission, which audit and order shall be conclusive and binding upon all Departments as to the correctness of the accounts of such Commission.

"Sec. 20. That this act shall expire by limitation on the 30th day of June, 1914."

And the Senate agree to the same.

NELSON W. ALDRICH,
W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,

EDWARD B. VREELAND,
THEODORE E. BURTON,
JOHN W. WEEKS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I ask that the conference report be printed for the use of the Senate. I give notice that to-morrow morning after the routine business I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this report, and I shall ask the Senate to proceed continuously with its consideration and discussion until it shall have been disposed of.

Mr. CULBERSON. I notice, so far as the conference report was read, that it is signed by only three conferees on the part of the House and three on the part of the Senate. I desire to inquire whether there were any conferees on the part of the House and on the part of the Senate who did not sign the report?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Democratic members of the conference on the part of both the House and the Senate declined to sign the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report of the committee of conference will be printed and lie on the table.

INJURIES TO GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 21844) granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to add—

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to add but a few words. I had it in mind to answer the question of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLaurin], but this bill has been pending so long, it has been so thoroughly considered by the Senate, and doubtless has the favorable view of the majority of the Senate, that I now ask—and I call the attention of the Senator from New York to my request—unanimous consent that the Senate before adjournment, and without further debate, pass on the amendments and the bill.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, this bill, or the substance of it, has been before both Houses all winter. There are 2,000,000 voters in the United States who are intensely interested in the passage of the bill and in securing this legislation during the current session. It has been considered all day and is nearly perfected. I think twenty or thirty minutes would complete the further consideration of the bill and enable us to pass it. Then it could be concurred in by the other House and become a law before Congress adjourns.

I know of no measure, except perhaps the one which the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] has just presented, in which the voters of the United States are more deeply interested than they are in securing this reform, giving them, as it does, a right which is granted to all employees engaged in every branch of private employment in the country, but denied to the employees of the Government. The bill is as limited as it could be, its application being confined only to those who are engaged in hazardous and dangerous employment. I therefore trust that the Senate will proceed to and conclude the consideration of the bill to-night, and I ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken before the adjournment.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I object to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. DEPEW. I desire to give notice that at the earliest practicable moment to-morrow morning I shall endeavor to bring up the bill to compensate employees of the Government injured in the course of their employment.

UNCLE SAM OIL COMPANY.

Mr. OWEN. I present a letter which I ask to have printed in the RECORD. The letter explains the attitude of the Kansas City Star with regard to a certain matter that was supposed to have been inserted in that paper against the Uncle Sam Oil Company, and in the interest of the Standard Oil Company, without having been marked as an advertisement. In point of fact, it appears that it was marked as advertising matter, and the Kansas City Star being one of the great newspapers in the West and the one standing highest in that section of the country, I thought the correction ought to be made on the face of the RECORD for their benefit. I therefore ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and permission is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

HON. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate.

WASHINGTON, May 25, 1908.

DEAR SIR: In the memorial of the Uncle Sam Oil Company, printed as a public document at your request, a most misleading statement is made with reference to the Kansas City Star. In the memorial referred to it is said: "That the next month after said advertisements were first published the Standard Oil Company sent one P. C. Boyle, editor of the Oil City Derrick, of Oil City, Pa., to Kansas City, Mo., and through him paid the Kansas City Star, a newspaper published at Kansas City, Mo., the sum of $2,471 for publishing reading matter in said paper favorable to the Standard Oil Company."

The inference to be drawn from this statement is that the Kansas City Star published reading matter of the nature of an ordinary news article for which it had received money. It is shown in the depositions of the business manager and the managing editor of the Kansas City Star, taken while litigation was pending, in which the Uncle Sam Oil Company was involved, that Mr. P. C. Boyle did offer the "reading matter" referred to to the Star as advertising matter and that publication of it was refused. Mr. Boyle was informed that the Star would not print the matter offered unless it was marked so as to clearly show it was advertising matter. With this understanding the advertising was accepted, and the articles appeared in the paper each marked "adv."

Under these circumstances no one of the Star's readers could have failed to understand that the Star had disclaimed all responsibility for the appearance of the articles or that the space had been taken at advertising rates.

Very respectfully,

R. H. LINDSAY,
Correspondent.

LOCOMOTIVE ASH PANS.

The bill (H. R. 17995) concerning locomotive ash pans was read twice by its title.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, a similar bill to that was introduced in the Senate and is now under consideration by the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I was hoping to have a report from that committee by the time this bill was received, so that I might move to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill; but that is impossible under the circumstances, and I ask that this bill may be referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee. I hope I may be able to get a report on it in time to pass it at this session of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION OF EXPLOSIVES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 17228) to promote the safe transportation in interstate commerce of explosives and other dangerous articles, and to provide penalties for its violation, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. KEAN subsequently said: I am authorized by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17228) to promote the safe transportation in interstate commerce of explosives and other dangerous articles, and to provide penalties for its violation, to report it favorably, and I ask for its present consideration. If the bill creates any discussion, I shall not press it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful to transport, carry, or convey any dynamite, gunpowder, or other explosive between a place in any foreign country and place within the United States, or a place in any State, Territory, or District of the United States, and a place in any other State, Territory, or District thereof, on any vessel or vehicle of any description operated by a common carrier, which vessel or vehicle is carrying passengers for hire: Provided, That it shall be lawful to transport on any such vessel or vehicle small arms ammunition in any quantity, and such fuses, torpedoes, rockets, or other signal devices as may be essential to promote safety in operation, and properly packed and marked samples of explosives for laboratory examination, not exceeding a net weight of 1 pound each, and not exceeding 20 samples at one time in a single vessel or vehicle; but such samples shall not be carried in that part of a vessel or vehicle which is intended for the transportation of passengers for hire: And provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the transportation of military or naval forces with their accompanying munitions of war on passenger equipment vessels or vehicles.

SEC. 2. That within ninety days from the passage of this act the Interstate Commerce Commission shall formulate regulations for the safe transportation of explosives and said regulations shall be binding upon all common carriers engaged in interstate commerce which transport explosives by land, and violations of them shall be subject to the penalties hereinafter provided. The Interstate Commerce Commission, on its own motion or upon application made by any interested party, may make changes or modifications of the regulations for the safe transportation of explosives, made desirable by new information or altered conditions, and such changed regulations shall have all the force of the original regulations. The regulations for the safe transportation of explosives referred to in this section shall be in accord with the best known practicable means for securing safety in transit, covering the packing, marking, loading, handling while in transit, and the precautions necessary to determine whether the material when offered is in proper condition to transport. The regulations for the safe transportation of explosives shall take effect three months after their formulation and publication by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and shall be in effect until reversed, set aside, or modified.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful to transport, carry, or convey liquid nitroglycerine, fulminate in bulk in dry condition, or other like explosive between a place in a foreign country and a place within the United States, or a place in one State, Territory, or District of the United States and a place in any other State, Territory, or District thereof, on any vessel or vehicle of any description operated by a common carrier in the transportation of passengers or articles of commerce by land or water.

SEC. 4. Every package containing explosives or other dangerous articles when presented to a common carrier for shipment shall have plainly marked on the outside thereof the contents thereof, and it shall be unlawful for any person to deliver, for interstate or foreign transportation, to any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by land or water, or to cause to be delivered, or to carry, any explosive, or other dangerous article, under any false or deceptive marking, description, invoice, shipping order, or other declaration, or without informing the agent of such carrier of the true character thereof, at or before the time such delivery or carriage is made.

SEC. 5. That every person who knowingly violates, or causes to be violated, any of the foregoing provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished for each offense by a fine not exceeding $2,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding eighteen months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect immediately, and all acts or parts of acts in conflict therewith are hereby repealed, except section 4422 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which shall remain in full force and effect.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, if I am in order, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

Mr. KEAN. I have no objection to that; but I want to say that this bill is rather an important one, and I shall call it up at an early day.

Mr. GORE subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to withdraw my objection to the passage of the bill relative to the interstate transportation of explosives. I am willing that it shall go through the Senate, if it is properly safeguarded.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that the bill be again laid before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the bill printed and have it go over until to-morrow. It is a very important bill, and I should like to know something about it.

Mr. KEAN. That is perfectly satisfactory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be printed and lie over.

FORT DOUGLAS MILITARY RESERVATION EASEMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6200) granting a perpetual easement and right of way to Salt Lake City, Utah, for the construction, operation, maintenance, repair, and the renewal of a conduit and pipe line and valve houses upon and across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation; which were on page 2, after line 12, to insert:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, upon the release to the United States by the Delaware and Hudson Company, or its subsidiary companies, of all rights of way and other easements of said company and of its subsidiary companies within the limits of the military reservation of Plattsburg Barracks, at Plattsburg, in the county of Clinton and State of New York, as said reservation existed prior to January 1, 1890, to convey to said Delaware and Hudson Company, its successors and assigns, for the operation and maintenance of its railway, a right of way 100 feet wide through said military reservation, together with a right of way 66 feet wide along the north end of the reservation, and the right to occupy and use about 2 acres in the northeast corner of the same, within limits described in and shown upon a blueprint attached to a memorandum of agreement made between said company and the United States, represented by Maj. J. G. Galbraith, Inspector-General United States Army, in October, 1906: Provided, That except as to the said 2-acre tract in the northeast corner of the reservation, which may be used for the storage of cars, engines, etc., the right of way herein authorized to be granted shall be used for main and passing track purposes only, and not for the storage of cars, engines, etc., thereon; and that the occupation and use of any land within the reservation shall be subject to such restrictions as the Secretary of War may prescribe to protect the interests of the United States and for the maintenance of good order and discipline on said military reservation.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act granting certain rights of way and providing for certain exchanges of the same."

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask if this is another one of the omnibus bills? I understand that it relates to reservations in Utah and New York, at least. I ask if any other States are affected?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Both bills have passed the Senate. One was introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. DEFEW] and the other by myself. They were simply combined in the other House to save time. They are both bills that have passed the Senate in precisely the terms in which they have passed the House.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator from Texas that both of them provide for rights of way across military reservations to accommodate the United States and the railroads jointly.

Mr. CULBERSON. But they are two bills on entirely different subjects in two different States.

Mr. WARREN. They are on the same subject, but affect reservations in two different States, as the Senator says.

Mr. CULBERSON. I feel somewhat, as stated by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], that we ought to call a halt on the passage of these general bills in omnibus form, but, under the circumstances, I will not do so in this particular case.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask if these are House bills that have come to the Senate?

Mr. CULBERSON. They are Senate bills.

Mr. CLAY. I thought they were House bills that had passed the House, which had come to the Senate, and had not been referred to any committee. My understanding is that we are simply taking up House bills with a view of passing them without referring them to a committee at all. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. WARREN. That is not the case. They are Senate bills that passed here separately, were joined together in the House, and came back here.

Mr. CLAY. Nevertheless the measure that we are now considering is a House measure. It may be true that separate and distinct bills passed the Senate and went to the House and were joined in one general bill, but when that general bill comes back to the Senate and is placed before the Senate it is a House measure for our consideration and ought to be referred to a committee for its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DISPOSAL OF SOLDIERS' CLOTHING, ETC.

Mr. WARREN. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 19462) to amend section 5438 of the Revised Statutes, to report it favorably without amendment. It is a short bill, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5438 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5438. Every person who makes or causes to be made, or presents or causes to be presented, for payment or approval, to or by any person or officer in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, any claim upon or against the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof, knowing such claim to be false, fictitious, or fraudulent, or who, for the purpose of obtaining or aiding to obtain the payment or approval of such claim, makes, uses, or causes to be made or used, any false bill, receipt, voucher, roll, account, claim, certificate, affidavit, or deposition, knowing the same to contain any fraudulent or fictitious statement or entry, or who enters into any agreement, combination, or conspiracy to defraud the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof, by obtaining or aiding to obtain the payment or allowance of any false or fraudulent claim, or who, having charge, possession, custody, or control of any money or other public property used or to be used in the military or naval service, who with intent to defraud the United States or willfully to conceal such money or other property, delivers or causes to be delivered, to any person having authority to receive the same, any amount of such money or other property less than that for which he received a certificate or took a receipt, and every person authorized to make or deliver any certificate, voucher, receipt, or other paper certifying the receipt of arms, ammunition, provisions, clothing, or other property so used or to be used, who makes or delivers the same to any other person without a full knowledge of the truth of the facts stated therein, and with intent to defraud the United States, shall be imprisoned at hard labor for not more than five years, or fined not more than $5,000; and every person who knowingly purchases or receives in pledge for any obligation or indebtedness from any soldier, officer, sailor, or other person called into or employed in the military or naval service any arms, equipments, ammunition, clothes, military stores, or other public property, whether furnished to the soldier under a clothing allowance or otherwise, such soldier, sailor, officer, or other person not having the lawful right to pledge or sell the same, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than two years and by a fine not exceeding $500."

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, from what committee does the bill come?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. From the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is an amendment of what section of the law?

Mr. WARREN. The bill changes the Revised Statutes regarding the selling by soldiers of clothing and other supplies. The changes are for two purposes. As the law stands, it is rather severe.

If a soldier sells any part of his clothing, he goes to jail for a year or pays a fine of a thousand dollars. There is no discretion. The consequence is that with smaller matters the jury is liable to find a verdict of not guilty because of the excessive punishment. The proposed measure leaves it to the discretion of the court to fix punishments and fines less than the maximum, the maximum being fixed by law.

Again, it has been decided by a court in one instance lately that clothing, blankets, and so forth, even when marked with the name or brand of the United States, are a part of the allowance of the soldier, and therefore he has a right to sell them. The clothing to soldiers is issued upon the old price schedule, notwithstanding it now often costs the United States 50 or 75 or 100 per cent more than the price at which it is issued. Thus the clothing, and so forth, is more really the property of the United States.

This bill seeks to make—

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand the Senator to say that the court has decided that the clothing belongs to the soldier, and that it is not a crime for him to sell it. Is it the purpose of this bill to make it a crime for the soldier to sell his own goods?

Mr. WARREN. Not exactly as the Senator puts it. A soldier is allowed certain blankets and certain clothing allowances, which must last him a certain time. If he sells it to a junk shop or some other place for illicit purposes, he might not be amenable to the law under the late construction. This simply makes the old law applicable as it was applied up to the late decision of the court, except that it gives a discretion to the court as to the amount of the penalty or the time he shall be imprisoned up to the legal maximum.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think this offense is most too refined, and I am rather inclined to object.

Mr. WARREN. I have no object in pushing this matter. The bill can go to the Calendar.

Mr. CULBERSON. I repeat—

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that a colleague of his in the House of Representatives from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], of the Committee on Military Affairs, was very anxious to have the bill reported to-day and passed. It is a matter of general interest.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire before the Senator from Wyoming resumes his seat to suggest that the penal code, which we have already passed in this body and which is under consideration elsewhere, covers this question, and it abolishes minimum fines and punishments. So it is always left to the discretion of the court.

Mr. WARREN. Would that apply to these specific cases? The bill the Senator mentions has not yet passed the House.

Mr. HEYBURN. It would apply in these specific cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The bill will go to the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that a letter with reference to the bill from the Acting Secretary of War may be spread in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 1, 1908.

HON. J. A. T. HULL,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith House bill No. 19462, entitled "A bill to amend section 5438 of the Revised Statutes." The bill is a reenactment of section 5438, Revised Statutes, which itself embodies the substantial requirements of sections 1 and 3 of the act of March 2, 1863 (12 Stat. L., 696, 698).

The modification above referred to has been suggested with a view to facilitate the prosecution of persons who unlawfully engage in the purchase of soldiers' uniform clothing by removing a doubt as to the ownership of the clothing so purchased. This purpose has been accomplished by the addition, in lines 6 and 7, page 3, of the words "whether furnished to the soldier under a clothing allowance or otherwise."

In recent years the value of the several articles of clothing which are issued to enlisted men has been increased, both in respect to the cost and quality of the material which enters into their manufacture, and a considerable annual loss has resulted to the Quartermaster's Department in the money value of the articles thus illicitly disposed of. The original penalty, which was enacted during the period of the civil war, was unusually severe, and it has been found difficult to secure a conviction in cases in which the fact of an illicit purchase has been reasonably established. For that reason the amended section vests a very considerable discretion in the court in imposing the penalty for a violation of the section.

As modified in committee, I commend the bill to the favorable consideration of Congress.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Acting Secretary of War.

CLAIMS OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. DICK. I ask that we may dispose of the resolution which was pending when the Senate adjourned last night.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. TELLER May 26, 1908, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to have stated and audited in the office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department the salary accounts of former postmasters who served at post-offices in the various States and Territories of the United States in terms between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK] offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the resolution of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. To that the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] proposed an amendment. The Senator from Ohio accepted the amendment of the Senator from Montana, and the Senator from Colorado accepted the amendment thus modified. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

WEDNESDAY, May 27, 1908.

[Continuation of legislative day of Tuesday, May 12, 1908.]

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 11 o'clock a. m.

MARK OF RESPECT TO EX-VICE-PRESIDENT CLINTON.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a request for unanimous consent. I understand the procession has just left the cemetery with the remains of George Clinton, former Vice-President of the United States, and first governor of New York under the constitution of that State. It will in a very few moments pass the Capitol on its way to the depot with his remains, which are to be taken to Kingston for reinterment there. I ask unanimous consent that for the fifteen minutes, say, that the procession is passing the Capitol that the House be in recess.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

OMNIBUS INDIAN BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 21735.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up the conference report on the bill, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21735) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to purchasers of Indian lands under any law now existing or hereafter enacted, and for other purposes.

The conference report was read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. #### STATEMENT.

From amendments Nos. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 32, 38, 39, 40, and 41 the Senate recedes, leaving the bill in these various particulars in the form in which it passed the House.

The House recedes from amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 3, and from amendment No. 4 with amendments. All these amendments are to section 1 of the House bill. The section relates to the disposal of the interest in inherited lands of Indians, and the amendments which are covered by the conference report extend its exceptions from the territory within the State of Oklahoma, which was formerly Indian Territory, to the entire State of Oklahoma, and also extend exceptions to the States of Minnesota and South Dakota. The amendments further strike from the section the provision that the determination of the Secretary of the Interior as to who are the legal heirs of deceased Indians shall be conclusive, and also strikes from the section the provision that the issuance of a patent by the Secretary direct to a purchaser shall not of itself operate as a cancellation of any prior patent issued therefor.

Section 2 as passed by the House permits certain claimants to prosecute their claims for supplies alleged to have been purchased by the Menominee Indians against said tribe, and amendment No. 5 adds the name of one claimant.

Amendments 6 and 7 are purely phraseological.

Amendment No. 13 relates to section 8 of the House bill; the provision in reference to the Daniel Red Bird suit, and provides that the Cherokee Nation shall have the right to contest in the court the claim of any person for payment under the Red Bird decision.

Amendment No. 18 is a new section to the omnibus bill and provides for the disposal of a quarter section originally allotted to one Julia Lewis, and provides in what manner the proceeds arising from the sale of the lands shall be disposed of. The amendment agreed to in conference is phraseological and did not change the intent of the section.

Amendment No. 19 is a new section inserted by the Senate and provides for a reappraisal of the town of Hartshorne, Okla. This section is identical with a House bill which has been unanimously reported by the Indian Committee of the House.

Amendment No. 21 amends the act opening the Flathead Indian Reservation in the State of Montana. This amendment is identical with Senate bill 3640 as reported by the House Committee on Indian Affairs. The House committee gave very careful consideration to this provision and amended the Senate bill in some particulars, and this amendment 21 presents the matter in precisely the form in which it was reported by the Indian Committee.

Amendment No. 22 authorizes the prosecution of a suit in the Court of Claims on the part of Robert B. Belt and another against certain Choctaw and Chickasaw freedmen for services claimed to have been rendered to said freedmen under a contract made in 1894. As agreed to in conference this section provides for a judgment, if any, for the value of the services rendered without regard to the fee fixed in the contract.

Amendment No. 23 provides for the allotment to any living Sioux tribe children on the Rosebud Reservation who have not heretofore been allotted, provided there are sufficient unallotted lands on said reservation, outside of Tripp County, S. Dak., for the purpose.

Amendment No. 24 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the allotment made to a Yankton Indian named Jondron, and if he finds said allotment to have been erroneously made to reallot the lands covered by such allotment to a member or members of the Yankton tribe.

Amendment No. 25 authorizes the Secretary to allot to minors of the Sioux on the Great Sioux Reservation who have not heretofore been allotted, provided there is sufficient unallotted land belonging to the tribe from which these allotments can be made.

Amendment No. 26 authorizes the issuance of patents to religious societies for the lands now occupied by them upon various reservations in Minnesota, provided such lands are now used for religious and educational purposes. To this provision, as it passed the Senate, the conferees have agreed to an amendment which provides further for the issuance of patents to other religious societies not covered by the section as it passed the Senate.

Amendment No. 27 authorizes the Secretary to convey to the State of Minnesota, upon the payment by said State of $1.25 an acre therefor, certain lands in said State from which the timber has been cut and which is fully described in said amendment.

Amendment No. 28 authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer the sum of $19,694.48, the proceeds of the litigation against the Commonwealth Lumber Company, from the fund "Miscellaneous revenues," upon which it was erroneously entered, to the fund "Depredations upon public lands."

Amendment No. 29 authorizes the extension for one year from the approval of this act of the time within which certain religious societies were to pay for the lands ceded to them upon the Siletz Indian Reservation in Oregon.

Amendment No. 30 provides for the sale of all the unsold lands in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservation under the terms of the act of June 6, 1900.

Amendment No. 31 provides that so soon as all the allotments have been made to the Navajo Indians upon the lands reserved by Executive order for that purpose so much of such reserve lands as have not been needed for such allotments shall be restored to the public domain.

Amendment No. 33 authorizes the Court of Claims to hear and render judgment upon the claim of one Turner for alleged destruction of personal property of his by the Creek Nation. The conferees changed the wording of the section, but did not alter the meaning or intent thereof.

Amendment No. 34 authorizes William Vernon and others to prosecute in the Court of Claims their claim against the Mississippi Choctaws for services alleged to have been rendered and disbursements made in behalf of said Mississippi Choctaws.

Amendment No. 35 authorizes an allotment to an enrolled member of the Comanche tribe of Indians who, by error, was omitted from allotment when their allotments were made.

Amendment No. 36 authorizes the payment of moneys deposited by persons who were bidders for lands in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Reservation where such bid was made as the result of a clerical error or was due to a mistake on the part of the bidder. This is simply refunding to individuals, who received nothing therefor, the money which they deposited with their bids.

Amendment No. 37 authorizes the expenditure of 20 per cent of the proceeds of the sale of certain lands in Oklahoma for the construction of a public building at the city of Lawton, in Oklahoma, and also authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to transfer to the treasurers of the cities of Lawton, Hobart, and Anadarko the unexpended balance of the proceeds of the sale of town lots which it has not been necessary to use in making certain public improvements, as heretofore directed by Congress.

JAMES S. SHERMAN,
CHARLES L. KNAPP,
JOHN H. STEPHENS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, my motion is to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On that I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a second; under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] is entitled to twenty minutes; and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, the conference report which is called up covers what is known as the "omnibus Indian bill." As it passed the House it contained twelve sections, each of which, save one, was either a House or a Senate bill which had been unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and no one of which made any charge upon the Treasury. The Senate added twenty-odd sections to the bill. Some of these were originally bills either of the Senate or House which made a charge upon the Treasury. From all provisions which make a charge upon the Treasury the Senate has receded, and as the report is herein presented it makes no charge whatever upon the Treasury of the United States. As I said before, all the bills, save one, which went to make up the original bill, have been favorably reported unanimously by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Of the sections added by the Senate about one-fourth, whether the bills were Senate or House bills, have been favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs as separate propositions. As the bill is now presented it makes no charge whatever upon the Treasury of the United States, and the statement, which has been in the Record for two or three days, I think, makes a comprehensive explanation of the various sections which are contained in the bill.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the House that there are thirty-two sections in this bill, and it is the omnibus Indian bill and is composed of many independent bills now on the House Calendar. The Committee on Indian Affairs had a great many bills before it, and out of that number possibly half or more carried appropriations in various forms. It was thought best by the political party now in charge of this House that no bills carrying appropriations and relating to Indian affairs should pass; hence the duty devolved upon the committee to ascertain what bills carried no appropriation, and we have presented these thirty-two sections, which are known as the "omnibus Indian bill." Some of these bills provided that parties having different kinds of Indian claims could go to the Court of Claims for adjudication. Some of the bills provide for the disposition of small remnants of tracts of lands in different reservations by removing the restrictions from their sale by the Indians. Other sections of the bill provide that parties who have erected churches, mission schools, and colleges on Indian reservations in different parts of the country may have the right to secure from the Government titles to the land upon which their improvements, churches, schools, and so forth, have been situated.

Some of these schools have been running for many years upon the common land of the Indians. The founders or promoters of these enterprises desire now to have the United States Government recognize their rights to the houses, improvements, and land on which the improvements are located. This is made necessary by reason of the fact that these Indian reservation lands have been allotted among the Indians and the Indians have the right to take certain parts of these reservations, and this school property is common property; hence the schools in the reservations must be segregated and the title given to the individuals who have built up the schools, missions, and churches. All of these bills have received the earnest consideration of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and we have unanimously agreed upon the omnibus bill. The bill has been investigated by the Department of the Interior and has been carefully gone over by that Department, and there is no objection to any of its provisions that I know of. I will now be glad to yield time to any other gentleman on the Committee on Indian Affairs who desires time to discuss the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for a vote, then, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I fear there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The point is sustained. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members. As many as are in favor of agreeing to the conference report will, when their names are called, answer "yea;" as many as are opposed will answer "nay;" those present and not voting will answer "present;" and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 253, nays 4, answered "present" 16, not voting 114, as follows:

RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House agree to the following resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 408.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House how many preliminary surveys and definite locations of railroads have been made in Alaska under the act of May 14, 1898, since the date of the approval of said act; by what individuals or corporations such preliminary surveys and definite locations have been filed, and the dates of filing; in the case of corporations, the State or Territory under the laws of which they are organized; the names of officers, directors, and stockholders in such corporations, so far as they are known or can be learned; the routes along which such individuals or corporations propose to build railroads, indicating such routes by outline maps when possible; the progress made by such individuals and corporations in actual construction and operation, and the amount or amounts so far expended in surveys, preliminary work, and actual construction and operation, including wharves and docks; whether or not the officers, directors, or stockholders of such corporations appear, from the records of the Department, to be patentees or locators of mineral or coal lands in Alaska, and if so, to what extent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will withhold the objection for a moment.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Possibly some explanation of the resolution may induce the gentleman to withdraw his objection. Mr. Speaker, it simply asks the Secretary of the Interior to give the House information in relation to the progress of the construction of railroads in Alaska. There is nothing more important to Alaska than the construction of railroads. Some time ago the President advised governmental aid in the construction of railroads in Alaska. "So far, however, the Committee on Territories, after hearings covering something like six years, have not been willing to agree to governmental aid, and this resolution proposes that the House shall be informed as to what railroads have been projected and constructed, who the stockholders are, and what the various interests are there. That is all there is to it—so that the House may be informed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I object, but I shall withdraw my objection if the gentleman on that side will permit me to take up that agricultural bill and pass it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second, to see if we can not patch up a truce. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, a second is ordered. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Missouri to twenty minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] for a minute. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] has a little resolution here that he wants to go through. Now, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] objects to unanimous consent because the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] objected to a very small thing here yesterday which the gentleman from Alabama wanted. If the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection, the gentleman from Alabama will withdraw his objection, and both things will go through.

Mr. PAYNE. But I have not made any objection at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But the gentleman did on yesterday.

Mr. PAYNE. I object to any bargains of that kind.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Very well, let it go on then.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Missouri to twenty minutes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to this resolution passing. Whenever a Republican wants any information on any legitimate subject under the heavens I am in favor of giving it to him. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. But this is for Democrats also.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; we already have it, and you need it yourselves. Therefore I do not want to consume any time.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to give me five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will give the gentleman five minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I want again to call the attention of this House and of the country to a bill that is unanimously reported by the Committee on Agriculture, which seeks to safeguard the matter of agricultural statistics—

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I shall be obliged to request that the gentleman confine himself to the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will proceed in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, what I was about to say was that the bill is unanimously reported, and that it is now on the Calendar. I can not get any action on it because the Republican side objects to its consideration.

Mr. Speaker, it is simply an outrage that this Republican House will not allow this bill to become a law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Here is an opportunity to show the farmers of the country that you believe in securing the truth regarding crop reports and in protecting those reports from those who gamble in food products and staple commodities. Now, the gambling exchanges can go to an employee of the Government and if they can find one willing to sell the statistical information desired they are at liberty to do it, and there is no law to punish anyone for the offense. Why are you not willing to pass the legislation that will forever prevent the repetition of the Holmes scandal? Why are you not willing to grant to the producers of America the protection that they ask for in my bill? They simply request you to make it a penalty for a Government officer to issue false statistics or to otherwise dispose of statistics other than the way the law now prescribes in the way of publication at stated times. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered that a few years ago a man by the name of Holmes, in the Crop Statistical Department, sold statistical information to one Theodore Price, a cotton gambler of New York. Holmes was tried in the court here and acquitted, because there was no law covering his offense. We are still without a law on the subject, and I want to ask you if it is your fixed purpose to leave these crop statistics always at the mercy of the speculators? [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, my bill is in the interest of honest service. It is for the express purpose of securing honest service and to punish any officer of the Government who, like Holmes, dares to sell crop statistics to the enemies of crop producers. I want to serve notice on you Republicans, now, that you are going to be called on to explain your unjust attitude toward this measure. You must tell the farmer why you refuse to place safeguards around agricultural statistics. You must tell him why you wanted it left as it was when Holmes not only sold statistical information to Price in New York, but when he changed the report about to be published and made it conform to the suggestions of Price—made the report speak a lie. For this piece of rascality Price paid $40,000. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, there is now a man in Europe who was made rich by the speculation that followed the false report that Price paid Holmes to make. His name is Hyde.

Mr. Speaker, it is true that the objection to the passage of my bill was made by the gentleman from New York, the Republican floor leader [Mr. PAYNE]. But, sir, I was pained to see that not a single Member on that side would rise in his place and ask him to withdraw his objection and allow the bill to pass. There are some clever Republicans here, but, sir, you have lost your courage in miserable submission to your floor leader's will. When the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] takes a position, you dare not oppose him. No deliberative body on earth was ever afflicted with such an utter disregard of the people's will as that side of the House displays here day after day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will suspend. The point of order is made that the gentleman is not addressing his remarks to the matter pending before the House, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, since the Chair sustains the point of order of the gentleman from New York, I think the country will understand the Republican party's attitude on this question. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not need over three minutes, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that whenever a Republican House finds it necessary or advisable, in its opinion, to inquire into the workings of a Republican Department, that there will be no objection upon the part of the Democratic minority—

Mr. DALZELL. I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, I am not out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not prepared to sustain the point of order on this.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am not out of order. A motion of that description to obtain for the benefit of the Members of the House of Representatives a knowledge of the modus operandi of Republican executive departments—

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. My friend from Mississippi is quite in error as to the scope of the resolution. It is not intended to investigate the Department of the Interior. It is intended to enable the Secretary of the Interior to report to the House as to railroads in Alaska. That is quite another thing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. And does not bear the gentleman's construction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand, Mr. Speaker; but by reporting the operations of railroads in Alaska the country and the House will get some knowledge of the manner in which the Department has hitherto been permitting railroads to be constructed and conducted in Alaska, and we will be glad to have that information.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

STATUE TO JOHN WITHERSPOON.

Mr. McKINLEY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and put Senate joint resolution No. 6 upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to suspend the rules and pass the following Senate joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 6) directing the selection of a site and the erection of a pedestal for a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of John Witherspoon.

Resolved, etc., That the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of War, and the chairman of the Witherspoon Memorial Association are hereby created a commission to select and prepare a site on property belonging to the United States in the city of Washington, other than the grounds of the Capitol or Library of Congress, and erect thereon a suitable pedestal for a statue in bronze of John Witherspoon, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, to be provided by the Witherspoon Memorial Association.

SEC. 2. That for the preparation of the site so selected and the erection of the pedestal the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the design for said statue shall be approved by the commission herein created.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi to twenty minutes.

Mr. McKINLEY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution passed by the Senate providing for a site for a monument in honor of John Witherspoon. A fund of $20,000 for the monument has been raised by subscription. The joint resolution simply provides for a site on Connecticut avenue in front of the Church of the Covenant and for $4,000 to prepare a foundation. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second upon this bill in order that I might make a few remarks in favor of its passage. Among the cohorts of stalwart men who furnished the material out of which the signers of the Declaration of Independence, the framers of the Constitution, and the heroes of the war of the Revolution were composed, there was not one of them who stood any higher in intelligence, in genuine manhood, in political integrity than John Witherspoon. He not only did much for America himself, but as a preacher of the Presbyterian Church, as a teacher in one of the great American institutions of learning—one of the greatest at that day—he taught much to others; many of our wisest men sat at his feet as Paul sat at the feet of Gamaliel, and learned lessons of political wisdom, lessons of liberty, and lessons of local self-government. I am more than glad to see this resolution, to appropriate for a pedestal, that his friends may erect a monument to him, pass. I am especially glad to see it pass by a House with a majority of Republicans, whose policies John Witherspoon, if alive, would be far from capable of understanding as American policies.

It is a good thing to see the party of Federal usurpations passing a bill to erect a monument to John Witherspoon, and I hope that to-day there will be upon the roll call an unanimous "aye" vote in favor of this well-deserved memorial to the honor of this great patriot.

Then I have, in addition to the public reasons I have given, another reason for voting for the bill. It was brought to the attention of my wife, who is one of the relatives of John Witherspoon. I received domestic instructions that the monument for John Witherspoon should pass the House of Representatives. I promised not only to support it, but by an "aye" vote on a roll call. [Laughter.]

With those few remarks, unless somebody else wants time in favor of the resolution, I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. McKINLEY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary to add a single word to the tributes which have already been paid by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to John Witherspoon.

As I am a member of the House Committee on the Library, which reported this joint resolution, and voted for it in committee, I wish to say here that I am heartily in favor of its passage. John Witherspoon has many descendants, not only in New Jersey, but in North Carolina and South Carolina, and it is eminently fitting that this monument should be erected, not only to one who was a signer of the Declaration of American Independence, but to a man who occupied such a prominent place in the country's history.

Educator, president of the College of New Jersey at Princeton, author, Presbyterian minister, and statesman, he gained great fame by his eminent talents and masterful activity. No man was more resolute in the cause of liberty. He was not only a member of the New Jersey convention which met to frame a constitution, but a Member of the Continental Congress, "in which he was prompt to sign the Declaration of Independence, displaying but little patience with delays and half measures." He insisted, it is said, "that the colonies were not only ripe for independence, but that he would rather be hanged than desert his country's cause. I hope the resolution will pass unanimously. [Applause.]

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Library were very glad to report a bill for a site and pedestal for a memorial to a man whose fame retains sufficient vitality a hundred years after his death to lead to public subscriptions for the erection of a statue. This does not require any expenditure by the Government except simply that necessary to furnish the pedestal.

We were glad for another reason to report this bill. The city of Washington to-day, on account of the numerous statues of men on horseback, looks like a cavalry encampment. If this bill passes, there will be a statue of a man who was a minister of the gospel, the only minister, I believe, who signed the Declaration of Independence. John Witherspoon was an eminent president of Princeton College, a Member of the Continental Congress throughout the entire period of the Revolutionary war, and he rendered his country great and notable service. He was a man of peace, as my friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLOMEW] says, and we should be gratified, indeed, to have appear upon one of the squares of the capital the statue of such a figure. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in order to save the time of the House I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 246, answered "present" 10, not voting 131, as follows:

INCREASING AIR SPACE ON IMMIGRANT SHIPS.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 5083, with the committee amendments indicated in the bill.

The bill as amended was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 5083) to amend section 1 of the passenger act of 1882.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the passenger act of 1882 be, and is hereby, amended so as to read:

"It shall not be lawful for the master of any vessel whereon steerage passengers have been taken at any port or place in a foreign country or dominion (ports and places in foreign territory contiguous to the United States excepted) to bring such vessel and passengers to or take from any port or place in the United States unless the compartments, spaces, and accommodations hereinafter mentioned have been provided, allotted, maintained, and used for and by such passengers during the entire voyage, unobstructed by cargo, stores, or goods. The master of a vessel coming to a port or place in the United States in violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; and if the number of steerage passengers carried or brought in the vessel, or in any compartment, space, poop, or deck house thereof, is greater than the number allowed to be carried or brought therein, respectively, as hereinafter prescribed, the said master shall be fined $50 for each and every such passenger in excess of the proper number, and may also be imprisoned not exceeding six months.

"In computing the number of passengers carried or brought in any vessel, children under 1 year of age shall not be included, and two children between 1 and 8 years of age shall be counted as one passenger; and any person brought in such vessel who shall have been, during the voyage, taken from any other vessel wrecked or in distress on the high seas, or have been picked up at sea from any boat, raft, or otherwise, shall not be included in such computation.

"Second. The expression 'steerage passenger' means all passengers except cabin passengers, and persons shall not be deemed cabin passengers unless the space allotted to their exclusive use is in the proportion of at least 36 clear superficial feet to each passenger.

"Third. The expression 'lowest passenger deck' means the deck next below the water line; and the expression 'passenger deck' includes every deck or portion of a deck which is above the lowest passenger deck, and is appropriated for passengers.

"Fourth. A vessel shall not carry passengers, whether cabin or steerage passengers, on more than one deck below the water line.

"Fifth. The height between that part of any deck on which steerage passengers are carried and the deck immediately above it shall not be less than 6 feet.

"Sixth. No steerage passenger shall be carried on the lowest passenger deck unless it is efficiently lighted by side scuttles and otherwise to the satisfaction of the inspector.

"Seventh. No greater number of steerage passengers shall be carried on the lowest passenger deck than in the proportion of one steerage passenger to every 21 clear superficial feet allotted to their use. If, however, the height between the lowest passenger deck and the deck immediately above it is less than 7 feet, and the apertures, exclusive of side scuttles, through which light and air are admitted are less in size than in the proportion of 3 square feet to every 100 superficial feet of that deck, no greater number of steerage passengers shall be carried on that deck than in the proportion of one steerage passenger to every 30 clear superficial feet thereof.

"Eighth. No greater number of steerage passengers may be carried on a passenger deck than in the proportion of 1 steerage passenger to every 18 clear superficial feet of deck allotted to their use. If, however, the height between any passenger deck and the deck immediately above it be less than 7 feet, no greater number of steerage passengers may be carried on that deck than in the proportion of 1 steerage passenger to every 21 clear superficial feet thereof.

"Ninth. A vessel, whatever be the superficial space of the passenger decks and of the lowest passenger deck, shall not carry a greater number of steerage passengers on the whole than in the proportion of 1 steerage passenger to every 5 superficial feet of air or promenade space provided on a deck so open as not to be included in the tonnage and approved by the inspector, and this space shall not be counted or included in the area available for any other passengers, or in other areas for steerage passengers prescribed by this section.

"Tenth. In the measurement of the passenger decks and of the lowest passenger deck, the space occupied by that part of the personal baggage of the steerage passengers which the inspector permits to be carried there shall be included commodious and suitable dining rooms, lounging rooms, smoking rooms, lavatories, toilet rooms, and bathrooms shall be provided for the exclusive use of steerage passengers, and the space so occupied shall also be included: Provided, That—

"(a) The space in any place appropriated to the use of steerage passengers in which they sleep shall not be less than 18 superficial feet in the case of the lowest passenger deck and 15 superficial feet in the case of a passenger deck.

"(b) Each space so included in the measurement must be clearly marked to the satisfaction of the inspector as being exclusively appropriated for the use of the steerage passengers.

"Eleventh. Each separate compartment in which steerage passengers are berthed shall be conspicuously marked, showing the total area of such apartments."

SEC. 2. That section 42 of the act approved February 20, 1907, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," is hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect on January 1, 1909.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CARRON). The question is on suspending the rules. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BURNETT. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, a second is ordered. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to increase the air space on all vessels that carry immigrants.

Mr. SULZER. Did the gentleman say increase or decrease?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Increase, double.

Mr. SULZER. I wanted to get that distinctly.

Mr. BENNET of New York. All right. Now I will take a new start. When we had the immigration bill up in the last Congress neither the House nor the Senate had acted on the amount of air space that each immigrant might have; but as we have stricken out the entire Senate bill, we had the right to legislate on that subject. Our then colleague from New York, Hon. Jacob Ruppert, jr., suggested that the immigrants were not given enough room on the steamers, and his views were afterwards reinforced by another distinguished citizen from our State, the President of the United States. Subsequently, on the motion of Senator LODGE, one of the conferees, and by a unanimous vote of the conferees, we adopted a provision which we thought would increase the amount of air space for each immigrant about 25 per cent. We amended a statute which had been passed in 1882 and which was a good statute at that time, as ships then were.

After we had adopted that standard other foreign governments, realizing that we could regulate the matter, took action. The Italian Government took the matter up; the German Government took the matter up; the English Government took the matter up, and the English Government adopted a rule that went further than ours. Our statute permitted the carrying of immigrants on two decks below the main deck. The British struck out the words "main deck" and all descriptions, because it is no longer applicable to ships of ten decks, and based everything on lowest decks. They provided that no passenger could be carried on a deck below the lowest deck, as described in this rule. It also provided for 5-foot space for each immigrant on the promenade deck. Subsequently the Senate had a bill drafted by the Commissioner of Navigation, conforming the English rule to our American statute, and the bill passed the Senate unanimously. When it came to the House committee we made these changes: We increased the amount of air space by an amendment from 15 feet on any deck to 18 feet and from 18 feet on the lowest deck to 21 feet. We also made verbal changes, and provided this:

Commodious and suitable dining rooms, lounging rooms, smoking rooms, lavatories, toilet rooms, and bathrooms shall be provided for the exclusive use of steerage passengers, and the space so occupied shall also be included.

That is included in the 18 feet or 21 feet, as the case may be. As the bill is reported from the House committee, and as it comes before us to-day, it increases the amount of space—assuming 8 feet between decks—as the amendment is intended to, from 100 cubic feet in the present law, with an 8-foot deck, to 184 feet on every deck except the lowest, and 208 feet on the lowest deck.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question or two?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This bill, if it becomes law, can only apply to American vessels, I should suppose. Or do you make it applicable to all?

Mr. BENNET of New York. We make it applicable to all:

It shall not be lawful for the master of any vessel whereon steerage passengers have been taken at any port or place in a foreign country, or dominion, to bring such vessel and passengers to, or take from, any port or place in the United States unless the compartments, etc.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have comparatively little information concerning the details of the subject of navigation. It has been the custom, has it, of the United States to enact laws covering foreign vessels?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Ever since 1819.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What effect will this have on the subject of ocean fare?

Mr. BENNET of New York. None directly, and it would depend upon the future immigration.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I have no doubt that these reforms in the method of carrying passengers upon the ocean, particularly steerage, are necessary.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes; I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that this bill compels all steamships to practically conform to the practice in the best ships.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BURNETT. May I ask the gentleman a question right there?

Mr. BENNET of New York. In my time or his?

Mr. BURNETT. Before the gentleman sits down.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Is it not a fact that the Senate bill reduces the total amount of air space to each immigrant one-half compared to the amount provided by section 42?

Mr. BENNET of New York. No; I do not think so.

Mr. BURNETT. Was it not stated by Mr. Chamberlain, the Commissioner of Navigation, that it reduces it one-half?

Mr. BENNET of New York. No; it was stated in effect that the Senate bill was half-way between our immigration bill of 1907 and the law of 1892, but I think that Mr. Chamberlain made a mistake in the construction of the law.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the gentleman if he is not also in favor of the Senate bill as it came from the Senate to the House?

Mr. BENNET of New York. As between the two bills, I am in favor of the House bill. As between the bill as it came from the Senate and section 42, with my interpretation of the law, I am in favor of the Senate bill, because it gives more space. It gives uniformity. It abolishes what I have seen in the harbor of Philadelphia, where immigrants westbound were being carried on a deck which eastbound had been used for the transportation of cattle.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In his judgment, will the provisions of this bill have the effect of necessitating the reconstruction of all those great steamers that are plying between Europe and the United States?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It will not. It will simply prevent overcrowding.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is provided here, though, that there shall be provided for the steerage passengers, whose fare, I believe, is between $20 and $30—

Mr. BENNET of New York. Between $30 and $40.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Commodious and suitable dining rooms, lounging rooms, smoking rooms, lavatories, toilet rooms, and bathrooms. How is it possible to carry out this provision without the reconstruction of all the steamers?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The best German and English ships have those now.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I know they have not.

Mr. SHERLEY. What was the reason for including as part of the air space that part which is given up to the smoking room, dining room, lavatory, and so forth?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Because there was an extra 3 feet for each passenger. I will say that the basic reason of inserting it was to encourage compliance with and not evasion of the law.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much space would be left to the individual immigrant if you exclude this under the terms of your bill?

Mr. BENNET of New York. He would have no more space than he has now.

Mr. SHERLEY. He has not enough now, as I understand.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Which of the three bills is the gentleman talking of?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am speaking of your bill now. What I am trying to get at now is, if you exclude the air space that is embraced in the dining room, smoking room, lavatories, and so forth, how much of your air space will be left for each immigrant?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Eighteen superficial feet on every deck except the lower, and 21 on the lower.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I understand, that is the minimum now.

Mr. BENNET of New York. But they would not utilize it. For the sleeping apartments we provide in the bill a minimum of 15 feet on every deck except the lower, and 18 feet on the lower. Consequently there are 3 extra feet, which we encourage the better class of steamers to utilize for these lavatories, if they can use them, instead of trying to evade the law.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, at the last session of Congress we passed an immigration bill which included what was known as "section 42," the air-space section. That was reported by the committee of conference and was passed. It was passed mainly, I understand, on the suggestion of the Commissioner of Navigation. It was done for the purpose of increasing the air space and relieving the crowded condition of the steamships. The taking effect of that law was postponed until January, 1909. Just as soon as our bill passed, and long before it went into effect, the steamship companies went to the British Board of Trade—not to Parliament, but to a board that was endowed by Parliament with a sort of legislative function—and that board passed what they called the "board of trade law," which really was what the steamship companies had at that time; that is, they had constructed and arranged their ships before the board of trade act was adopted, so as to meet the requirements of that act when it was passed. As soon as we adopted section 42 these steamships set about to circumvent it.

Under the specious pretext of having uniformity in our law and theirs, the steamship companies and their agents appeared before the Immigration Commission and asked for the passage of the bill introduced into and passed by the Senate, and I have heard of nobody else that has come before Congress and before the Commission asking for it, except the steamship companies. The Commissioner of Navigation also made some statements in favor of it. He says, in conflict with the views of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], that the Senate bill decreases the air space provided by section 42, which will go into effect next January, by about 50 per cent. It passed the Senate in that form. It came before the Committee on Immigration and was amended, and we who file this minority report, Mr. Speaker, concede that, possibly, if the bill were to go through and become a law as amended by our committee, it would be as good a bill, but very little, if any, better than section 42 as it now exists. The trouble is the law has never been tried. We do not believe that the law as amended by the House committee will ever become a law if it is passed here and goes into conference, but that the steamship companies will finally get what they want.

I have here the opinion of Mr. Watchorn, who ought to know more about the operation of this law and of the effect it will have than almost anybody else, because he is our commissioner of immigration in New York, and in regard to the overcrowded conditions of the steamships that now exist, and speaking in regard to section 42, which does not go into effect until next January, he says this:

It is a matter of regret that that portion of the act of February 20, 1907, relating to improved conditions on passenger ships was not made operative earlier than 1909. During the year just closed 1,508 children have been received at this station afflicted with measles, diphtheria, and scarlet fever, all of which diseases are due, more or less, to overcrowding and insanitary conditions. Of this number 205 died. Hospital treatment of these cases cost the steamship lines over $104,000, and the cost of detention of relatives while waiting for return from hospital of persons afflicted with the diseases in question has cost fully $30,000 more, and has placed a strain upon the dormitories and detention rooms at Ellis Island second only to the stress that is placed upon the steerage itself. This indicates a state of affairs which surely ought to be remedied before 1909, and I respectfully urge that such steps as may be deemed necessary to hasten the going into effect of this humane provision of law may be given the fullest consideration of the Bureau.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I want to say that I am personally acquainted with Commissioner Watchorn and know him intimately. He is one of the best informed and most efficient men connected with the Bureau of Immigration, one whose word I would take on every question of this character.

Mr. BURNETT. That is the statement he makes when he says of section 42 that the only unfortunate thing about it is that it does not go into effect before the 1st of next January. Mr. Speaker, I warn gentlemen who would like to see these air-space conditions changed and bettered in the interest of immigrants who come over, and I am one of them, that whenever we vote for the passage of this bill it will go into conference, and instead of coming back the bill this House believes it is passing, one that will ameliorate the conditions, they are going to receive, in my judgment, just what the steamship companies want, and if you are prepared to vote for this bill you do so in the face of Mr. Watchorn's statement that section 42 when it goes into effect will ameliorate the conditions of the unfortunate immigrant. As you all know, I am in favor of cutting off much of the undesirable immigration, but as long as they are admitted, in the name of God and of humanity let us try to stop the steamships from murdering them, as Watchorn's report shows they are doing. We have, many of us, seen the crowded conditions of these people and know something about it.

The commissioner of immigration himself admits that if the Senate bill passes it will reduce the air space to half what it is under section 42. Now, this is a better bill, as the committee has amended it, than the law that existed before; but the law that goes into effect in January, 1909, increases the air space, and I believe that we ought not to tamper with that until it is tried. It is a dangerous experiment for us to undertake to do any such thing as that, and you who vote for this bill, if it comes back as the Senate desires it should, will be responsible for the condition that is forced upon people of this country going to Europe in the steerage and upon the immigrants coming to this country. The only pretext made by the commissioner of immigration for it was to have us conform to the British trade law passed after ours. They can meet at any time and in a day change their law to conform to ours. Then why not let them come to us, instead of us going to them?

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. In the gentleman's judgment, does this bill increase or decrease the air space for the immigrant?

Mr. BURNETT. The bill as amended possibly leaves it substantially where it is, but the Senate bill, if adopted, would greatly decrease it. Mr. Speaker, the bill as amended merely makes it a little more definite, as is contended, about the decks, but the uncertainty in regard to it is the same uncertainty that has existed since 1882, and the commissioner of immigration, and no one else, deemed it so uncertain that action should have been taken on it heretofore.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman. My impression was that as a result of the investigation of that special Commission which was appointed to investigate this question, and went to Europe and so on, Congress had a right to expect a comprehensive report in the near future, and that nothing should be undertaken at this session of Congress.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is that a correct impression?

Mr. BURNETT. Well, that is an impression that is not made by any statement of the Commission, so far as I know, but, Mr. Speaker, this being a Presidential year, I am afraid we will get nothing from the Commission, composed mainly of Republicans, as it is, or from this Congress, until after the Presidential election.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield, because I desire to yield to other gentlemen, and my time is too short. I trust the gentleman will pardon me for not yielding, because I have not the time. If my time could be extended twenty minutes, I would take pleasure in yielding to the gentleman from California.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill is a very good illustration of how the Republican party proposes to take care of the under dog in the fight. Some few years ago a proposition was before this House to restrict foreign immigration coming into the United States and to protect the American laborer against the pauper labor of Europe. The Democratic party was in favor of an educational test to restrict immigration coming to this country. A large number of the Republican party on that bill offered section 42, that you are now proposing to repeal, as an offset to the proposition to restrict immigration coming into this country by an educational test. You said you proposed to increase the air space in these ships, to provide better accommodations for the immigrants coming to the United States, and at the same time restrict the number of immigrants who were coming to America, and on that basis the House divided on this aisle and you defeated the immigration test by seven votes and at the same time declared to the country that this section 42 for an increase of air space for the immigrants was the thing that would protect American labor against the pauper labor of Europe and at the same time be a humanitarian statute and take care of the immigrants who came to this country. But you provided in this same statute that section 42 should not take effect until January, 1909.

You put a joker in that law and now you are about to draw the joker out of your sleeve and play it on the political card table. The law that you said was in the interest of humanity you are preparing to repeal. I did not believe that section 42 went far enough, but there is no question it was a great improvement on the old law, but it is very unfortunate that it did not go into effect when the original bill went into effect, but the great American steamship lines in this country did not want it. It will cut down their profits. It does and will, when it goes into effect, prevent them from bringing as many immigrants into this country as they have heretofore, and as they can under the old law. Now, what do we find? The Senate passes a bill and sends it here that will cut down the air space as provided in section 42, but the committee, fearful that the Senate bill can not pass this House, bring in an amendment to the Senate bill that brings the air space up almost near to what section 42 provided.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have only five minutes, and I can not yield. I understand the gentleman from New York says his
